PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 99th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Thursday, October 9, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, October 6, 1986)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Father in heaven, what is said and done in this place affects numberless peoples. Millions view the actions which take place in this Chamber and the destiny of those millions rides on decisions made here. Make Your presence felt during these extra duty days. Infuse hearts with Your wisdom. Your patience, Your peace, Your love. Inspire great thoughts, sound debate, and relevant decisions. Save from trivia—from inconsequential hours—from waste of energy, time, and effort. Let these hours be filled with meaning and significance.

Grant, dear God, that everything about these final days of the 99th Congress will be to the glory of God, the satisfaction of people, and worthy of the most powerful deliberative body in the world. In the name of Him Who's the way, the truth, and the life. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able and distinguished majority leader, Senator ROBERT DOLE, of Kansas, is now recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, the President pro tempore, Senator THURMOND.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Under the standing order, the leaders will have 10 minutes each, followed by a period until 10 a.m., for Senators to make statements concerning our retiring colleagues.

At 10 a.m., the Senate will resume the impeachment proceedings. Under a previous unanimous-consent agreement, the time between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. will be equally divided.

No earlier than 2 o'clock and no later than 3 o'clock the Senate will proceed to vote on each of the following questions and I understand they may not be altered. Senators need not vote on each article but we do have the question to each article: "How vote you, Senator, guilty or not guilty," on articles 1, 2, 3, and 4.

Following the impeachment proceedings, the Senate will turn hopefully to the drug bill or reconciliation. I assume we will be in rather late this evening and I had hoped we might not have a session tomorrow, but I am advised that it may be necessary because there are a number of Senators who wish to be heard on the drug bill, particularly one provision in the drug bill, which could necessitate filing cloture today and a few other things that can extend the session even longer than we had thought.

SENATOR PAUL LAXALT OF NEVADA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, being labeled the "President's best friend" is pretty heady praise. But the man who wears that label—PAUL LAXALT—does so with modesty and an appreciation of just how important it is.

Since he arrived in the Senate in 1974, PAUL LAXALT has played a very special and important role. It is a role that will be hard to fill when he retires in January.

Not only has Senator LAXALT been a conscientious representative for the people of Nevada, but he has successfully acted as a mediator within the Republican ranks, across the aisle, and between Capitol Hill and the White House.

Whether the subject was water user fees or the MX missile, anticrime legislation, or regulatory reform, Senator LAXALT has been a reasoned and effective voice. He has that special ability to be an ardent party loyalist without being stridently partisan.

Senator LAXALT credits his father's fierce independence as the wellspring of his own open nature. If it is the "winds of the Nevada mountains" that carry this air of candor and accessibility, I wish they would blow toward Washington. We could use a lot more of that kind of sensibility—Senator LAXALT's kind.

AMERICAN CAPTURED IN NICARAGUA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the President leaves in just a few moments for Iceland.

On Saturday, the President of the United States, and the leader of the Soviet Union, are going to sit down together in Reykjavik, Iceland, for discussions we all hope will bring us progress on arms control, human rights and regional conflicts—issues absolutely fundamental to American interests, and to the hopes of the world for peace and security.

But if you watched last evening's and the morning news broadcasts, you might have come away with the impression that the "most earth-shaking thing going on" in the world was happening down in Managua, where an American civilian has been taken captive by the Sandinistas after his plane, allegedly carrying arms and supplies to the Contras, crashed inside Nicaragua.

If you stick to the facts, it is not much of a story. We have known for a long time that some private Americans were actively helping the Contras. They have made no secret of it; the news media reported it, again and again. Now one of these "soldiers of fortune," apparently, has been captured; three others have died, two of them Americans. All of that is tragic—but in any case, the facts just do not—or should not anyway—add up to banner headlines or lead stories.

And so this one American, being paraded from "pillar to post" by some Sandinista goons just so the press can get a good camera angle, becomes the symbol of all kinds of imagined evil: "Administration lies and disinformation; shattered credibility; a secret war in Nicaragua"—those are the charges floating around. That is the kind of silliness that passes for hot news around this town these days.

There is important news in Nicaragua which ought to be covered, and in headlines and lead stories on the nightly news. The Marxists in Nicaragua are shutting down the free press, exiling Catholic bishops, and driving their own people into the hills, while Daniel Ortega makes his periodic visits to New York, dragging his doting media entourage around to cocktail parties, and appointments with his eye doctor.

These, and events like the upcoming Reykjavik meetings, are the real news. And it is time they got the attention they deserve.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if I have any remaining time, I will yield it to the distinguished Senator from Colorado, who I understand needs about 20 minutes, and I reserve the minority leader's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURENBERGER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader.

THE PROMISE OF THE SENATE

Mr. HART. Mr. President, 12 years ago, this Senator was moved to seek public office by several ideals. A sense of obligation and responsibility to contribute to the public life of his Nation. A desire to help restore integrity to public service. A belief that we must think anew and act anew in the face of an overwhelming array of new challenges as the century closes. And, not least, a powerful need to contribute to the containment of the nuclear demon stalking the planet.

In large part, that impulse to public service has been satisfied. And this Senator hopes he will be judged well on that most demanding scale of integrity and stewardship of the public trust, as well as in his effort to redefine the goals and methods of a society in vast transition.

On the eve of departure from this Chamber hallowed by generations of patriots, I cannot help but feel the presence of the heroes and giants of my time: Mansfield, Hart of Michigan, Javits and Case, Muskie, Church, Ribicoff, and Mathias, Symington, Humphrey, and others—equally larger than life. Each human, and therefore imperfect. But each possessing a gravity, a size, a larger dimension—the touch of legend.

What made them different? What made them achieve a stature that eludes most of us? Many traits. But one common quality. A sense of the larger picture. A broader, more encompassing view. A backdrop of history, and a stage upon which the future is played out. Above partisanship and ideology, an instinct for the national interest—and a view of America in the community of nations.

They all were deeply committed to nuclear arms control. And I suspect, if all could be summoned back for a great debate, most—if not all—would list this central issue, this supreme challenge, as the great unfinished business of our time.

For, there is about this issue a moral imperative. There is also a time imperative.

In the 12 years I have served in the U.S. Senate, the arms race has accelerated according to its own inexorable calculus. The Soviet Union has added almost 5,000 warheads, by building large land-based missiles and adding multiple warheads to them—pursuing a technology we invented and a formula we protected.

Both sides have perfected the science of cruise missiles and we have led the deployment of them.

Sea-based nuclear missiles have become larger and their warheads more powerful and more accurate.

What are usually called improvements in technology have produced more destructive and more accurate warheads, with increasingly sophisticated delivery systems more difficult to count and to verify.

And while the nuclear giants contest, a new set of nuclear gladiators has materialized on the horizon. Israel is thought to possess as many as 20 nuclear weapons. India has detonated a nuclear device and is believed to have manufactured nuclear weapons. A decade ago South Africa began accumulating materials for at least 15 nuclear devices. It is believed Pakistan has succeeded in developing nuclear explosives in this decade. And during that same period Argentina, Brazil, Iraq, and Libya have taken steps to acquire a nuclear weapons capability.

And now we propose to let yet another—perhaps most ominous—genie out of its bottle. The President urges us to produce and deploy nuclear-powered space weapons, including those capable of neutralizing the capacity of other nations to deter aggression. And, simultaneously, we and the Soviets rush forward to perfect the ability to blind the satellite eyes necessary to verify compliance with arms control agreements.

There is today no comprehensive ban on nuclear weapons tests. And no serious effort is underway to negotiate one. We have repeatedly refused to join the Soviet Union in a moratorium pending an agreement to ban nuclear testing. The past six Presidents, among them, negotiated some 20 arms control agreements—11 by the last 2

Republican Presidents. In 6 years, the current President has not come close to completing negotiations on even a minor agreement.

Thus, on the eve of his departure, this Senator's frustration, and deep concern.

I came here to help make the future safer for my children and future generations. I fought hard for the SALT II Treaty, which this President fought against. That treaty was rejected by some as "not real arms reductions." But those same critics resisted restrictions on our own nuclear modernization programs—as if the Soviets would unilaterally stop their buildup with no concessions from us.

Some hope for salvation through technology—magic space shields. Some say "build more weapons" until we wear the Soviets out. Some say unilateral disarmament. Some say "give up. There is no solution." Too many people just don't want to be bothered.

Well, we cannot give up. And we cannot accept ignorance and avoidance as an answer. There are solutions. Some steps we can take by ourselves and others must be taken in agreement with other nations. We must limit and reduce the numbers of weapons while we eliminate the possibility of their use.

In his concluding remarks to the Senate, the Senator from Colorado would like to propose a comprehensive arms control program for the future. It is aimed not only at reducing the numbers of missiles and bombs, or at treaties designed to establish better relations. It is directed toward the prevention of any use of nuclear weapons.

We must clearly understand the urgency of the challenge before us. There are almost no limits on the arms race between the superpowers, and nearly every arms control treaty in existence is threatened by new weapons deployments.

Weapons are about to be deployed that could confound forever our ability to put in place practical, verifiable limits.

More than 15,000 nuclear warheads are poised on more than 3,000 long-range missiles—with minutes for flight and moments for decision.

First-strike missiles could soon leave the fate of humanity to bloodless computers or desperate leaders trying in seconds to undo the errors of decades.

And additional nations—perhaps even international outlaws or terrorists—may soon possess the ultimate weapon or the ultimate terrorist threat.

Three revolutions—now underway—are radically altering the nuclear environment we face, and it is imperative that we understand them:

The first revolution is in weapons technology and its ability to outstrip the diplomatic, political, and even technical barriers we erect to control nuclear weapons.

This revolution is producing highly accurate, multiwarhead missiles. Soon both nations might be tempted to strike first in some future desperate crisis, to use their missiles before they lose their missiles.

The revolution in technology is producing thousands of long-range cruise missiles that could be virtually impossible to count with present means. Numerical reductions of nuclear weapons may then be a thing of the past.

The technology revolution is producing a potentially new arms race in space with antisatellite weapons and star wars defenses. A new arms race—far more complex than the one we see today—will be in defensive weapons and in offensive weapons to conquer these defenses.

As we see this revolution unfolding, we cannot help but think of the words of Gen. Omar Bradley, who commanded America's ground forces at the D-day landing in Normandy. Almost 30 years ago, he issued this warning:

> . . . We have defiled our intellect by the creation of such scientific instruments of destruction that we are now in desperate danger of destroying ourselves . . . Missiles will bring anti-missiles; and anti-missiles will bring anti-anti-missiles. But inevitably this whole electronic house of cards will reach a point where it can be constructed no higher . . . when that time comes; there will be little we can do other than to settle down uneasily; smother our fears; and attempt to live in a thickening shadow of death.

The day that General Bradley spoke of is nearly upon us. Yet we have only begun to consider its threat.

There is a second revolution in the nuclear environment—the increasing likelihood that nuclear weapons actually will be used.

Nuclear warfighting capabilities—such as highly accurate ballistic missiles, cruise missiles, and the so-called neutron bomb—could tempt leaders in a crisis to use these weapons, on the impossible theory that the accuracy of these weapons limits their destructiveness to military targets.

Other technologies are blurring the distinction between nuclear war and conventional war—thus increasing the possibility that local battles could erupt to full-scale nuclear war. One example is found at sea where many warships carry nuclear and conventional weapons. Once a nuclear torpedo is used to kill an enemy submarine, there is every temptation to use a nuclear-armed cruise missile to sink an enemy flotilla. And this done, where can one draw the line of nuclear restraint?

Space defenses—such as lasers and particle beams—will put a heavy premium on striking quickly and an equally heavy burden on the other side to knock the defenses out of the sky first. Their presence will not provide the shield some would dream of, instead, they will create a new arena for nuclear war and new ways for such a war to start.

Antisatellite weapons will put at risk early warning, observation, and communications satellites vital to the nuclear deterrent of both the United States and the Soviet Union. These satellites are vital to treaty verification and nuclear stability. Few developments would be worse than the sudden failure or destruction of a vital satellite in time of crisis.

Finally, there is a third revolution. This revolution is the spread of nuclear weapons capability to more nations and perhaps to terrorist groups as well.

No longer are there two or three nations that possess the power of ultimate destruction. Now there are at least six. In a decade, there could be 10 or 20 or more. Consider how much more difficult it will be to prevent nuclear war when nuclear survival is not merely a matter of deterrence, command and control, and restrain in a crisis among a few nations, but must be found among 20 or 30.

And what of terrorist groups now active in many nations? For these groups, the building blocks to achieving nuclear status are not armies of scientists working on expensive, hard-to-assemble, complex technologies. They are a few individuals building a crude nuclear device with basic physics and a small amount of plutonium.

Today's nuclear power and research reactors have produced over 140 tons of plutonium worldwide—enough to make more than 20,000 bombs the size of the one that destroyed Nagasaki in 1945. So far, most of that plutonium is locked in spent nuclear reactor fuel. But the technology to unlock it exists, and several nations, including Libya, have been trying to obtain it.

Yet the nuclear powers persist in the naive belief that they can promote the spread of nuclear materials around the globe and not one day see the Fifth Horseman of nuclear terrorism ride down upon some American or European city. And the superpowers persist in the arrogant belief that they can increase their own nuclear forces far beyond any rational level and still expect other nations to forgo these weapons themselves.

We behave as if nuclear weapons are the measure by which sovereignty and respect are judged—this on a planet where finite resources must provide for an ever-expanding population, where once-distant enemies are today's neighbors, where the weapons one nation has today will be the weapons others have tomorrow.

These three revolutions in the nuclear environment compound the difficulties we face already. But we must see them as a challenge to our determination and our will to leave a world safer for our children and our children's children.

Regrettably, there is no magic formula to end the arms race and prevent the use of nuclear weapons. But there are dramatic steps to take, steps toward peace and security, steps to prevent the use of nuclear weapons.

And these are steps which should be taken now—without delay. They strengthen the security of all sides even as difficult negotiations proceed.

First, to stop the nuclear arms race, both superpowers and other nuclear powers, should establish negotiations to achieve a comprehensive nuclear test ban, a ban on all tests for all time. It is of utmost urgency that these negotiations be included in the agenda for the next summit.

The United States should take the lead and initiate mutual moratoria on the deployment of nuclear armed, sea-launched cruise missiles, and on the testing of nuclear weapons explosives. If these initiatives are to succeed, the Soviet Union must quickly respond with the equivalent restraint. The United States is strong enough to take the first step, but it is also realistic enough to continue only if the Soviet Union responds to our lead.

These moratoria would give great impetus to United States-Soviet talks and improve chances for early progress. Relations between our countries are such that decisive action is necessary. It is time to create an atmosphere of confidence and hope.

And it is time to find out who is serious—and who is not serious—about stopping the arms race.

The second reason for these moratoria is to stop the arms race from continually running ahead of our efforts to negotiate an end to it. In 1972, the United States and the Soviet Union failed to limit multiple warhead missiles—and while we both talked on, warheads grew by the thousands. We have also talked for years about limiting cruise missiles, and now they are appearing in the thousands. If we continue with business as usual, there will be other new weapons to multiply by the thousands and outrun our ability to limit them.

To break this pattern, we need a new instrument in the hands of the negotiators—and that instrument is time.

Moratoria can work. They have before. In 1963, President Kennedy declared a moratorium on the testing of nuclear weapons in the atmosphere. The Soviet Union followed his lead—and a cycle of crisis and confrontation was broken. Within months, our two nations had signed the Limited Nuclear Test Ban Treaty.

But all these measures would merely give us room to breathe, and prevent new weapons from overrunning all our work to lessen the risk of war. There is much, much more to do.

Second, both the United States and U.S.S.R. should undertake nuclear arms reductions which aim to cut the superpowers nuclear arsenals by 50 percent or more. As a step toward this goal, we should seek an interim reduction of 20 to 25 percent—and there is every indication that our two nations can achieve such reductions. The United States and the Soviet Union should consider this a major goal of negotiations.

The principal substance of this goal must be to reduce and eventually eliminate highly accurate multiwarhead land-based missiles. Replacing them with fewer, single-warhead missiles would greatly reduce the danger of a nuclear first strike. And it would reestablish a survivable and therefore more stable nuclear deterrent including missile-carrying submarines—which is likely to provoke attack.

Third, is improved verification. Talks with the Soviet Union should strengthen verification measures in our arms control agreements—to include provision for onsite inspection where necessary.

Apart from the talks we can also, on our own, continually strengthen and improve our own national verification capabilities—the satellites and other systems with which we monitor the Soviet Union. These systems are essential to a stable nuclear world; they make arms control possible; and they can prevent nuclear war.

Fourth, we should undertake a series of measures designed to reduce the risk of nuclear war through accident or miscalculation.

This is not an abstract risk.

In 1980, Senator GOLDWATER and the Senator from Colorado conducted an investigation of the U.S. strategic warning system. We discovered during an 18-month period that this warning system registered 161 false alarms. One of these false alarms lasted 6 minutes, or half the time it would take a Soviet submarine-launched ballistic missile to reach its target in the United States. There is every reason to believe that the Soviets have equal or greater problems with their strategic warning system.

The United States and the Soviet Union should establish one or more joint crisis control centers in which senior civilian and military personnel from both countries could monitor nuclear weapons activities. For example, multiple Soviet missile launches have caused us concern when detected by our warning systems. And the Soviets have been concerned in the past about our strategic bomber operations. These centers could lay the groundwork for future restraints on strategic operations and testing to increase stability. They could prove essential should mistake or miscalculation lead to confrontation. And they could make the difference between war and peace should some local crisis, third-party nuclear threat, or nuclear terrorism threaten to drag us each—however unwilling—toward a wider war.

In addition to these control centers, United States and Soviet military representatives should meet regularly to improve understanding and reduce suspicion.

The United States and the Soviet Union have begun in Stockholm to establish codes of conduct and confidence-building measures in their relations. But such a code should be expanded to account for incidents in space, and might, for example, state in advance appropriate responses if there were accidental interference with each other's satellites. Now is the time to address these future problems, not later when they are upon us in a crisis.

Each nation, on its own, should substantially improve command and control of its nuclear force—to avoid nuclear accidents and to ensure a credible deterrent. And both nations together could work together on cooperative early warning measures, such as tamper-proof launch detectors in each nation's missile fields.

Our two nations should agree to a mutual pullback of nuclear weapons that are close to the East-West border in Europe. Today, nuclear weapons are located so that even a small advance by either side might push us both to the nuclear decision that nobody wants. Similarly, our nations, in concert if possible, should design weapons and forces that clearly separate, as much as we can, nuclear from nonnuclear capabilities.

Fifth, preventing the use of nuclear weapons also requires that the United States and the nations of NATO modernize and reform their conventional defense forces, so that nuclear weapons are the last line of defense, not our only means of response. One of the most likely paths to nuclear conflict would be nuclear escalation resulting from failure of the conventional deterrent.

But we could achieve every objective outlined here, and still the business of preventing nuclear war would be unfinished. For we would still face an additional grave danger—the spread of nuclear weapons, the horizontal nuclear arms race.

Sixth, we must persuade additional countries to sign the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, through which more than 110 nations have already foresworn nuclear weapons. We must strengthen international nuclear safeguards and their enforcement against the clandestine diversion of nuclear materials for weapons purposes. We must—with other nuclear powers—set an example by restraining our own nuclear forces. And most of all, we must be willing to stop the international trade in dangerous nuclear materials and technology—particularly those associated with plutonium.

This will require an international plutonium freeze. Such a freeze would halt the production of separated plutonium—the nuclear material that can most easily be made into nuclear explosives. It would prevent the export of technologies to produce plutonium. And it would reject the commercial use of separated plutonium as a nuclear power reactor fuel.

Such an agreement would be verified by inspections by the International Atomic Energy Agency, the agency responsible for administering the safeguards applied to civilian nuclear activities around the world.

This freeze would not restrain the legitimate use of nuclear power for energy purposes. But it would restrain plutonium, which there is no economic justification for using in the world's nuclear power reactors. World uranium reserves greatly exceed demand and will last well into the next century.

This plutonium freeze is vital. If separated plutonium becomes an accepted fuel for nuclear power reactors, we will soon see tons of this dangerous material moving each year in international commerce. And with each transaction, the risk of diversion or threat for weapons building will grow. Indeed, we will have begun to traffic in global annihilation. And that must stop.

Seventh, the final step in preventing nuclear war is, quite simply, greater cooperation.

This must begin with improved relations between the United States and the Soviet Union—not because we like each other's system of government, but because we must live together or we will perish together.

We should initiate immediately discussions between the two sides on economic and political issues which can proceed on a regular basis. We can cooperate to address many of the world's problems and to develop much of the world's potential. Preventing the spread of nuclear weapons is one example. Peaceful exploration of space is another. A joint United States-Soviet commitment to end world hunger—in this century—would be yet another.

The developed nations can work together to address the world's unmet human needs—its needs for good, its needs for health, its needs for justice, its need for hope. Left unattended, these unmet human needs are, as well, the seeds of conflict.

Today, the world spends hundreds of billions of dollars on weapons of war, while millions starve each year.

Tomorrow, it may spend hundreds of billions of dollars more for weapons in space, turning frontier into fortress, hope into fear.

Both are perversions of the human spirit. Both will leave humanity not safer or happier, but forever—in the words of President Eisenhower—"hanging on a cross of iron."

We share a vision and a hope that one day we can lift the nuclear shadow that hovers as a constant presence every day of our lives.

There is no magic technological solution. The solution is truly in ourselves.

We know what needs to be done. The real challenge is to our will.

Perhaps the giants of the Senate—recent and past—have an answer here for us. Not only that controlling the nuclear demon is paramount. But that, properly focused and renewed, the Senate itself can shape and strengthen our national will.

Perhaps the nuclear arms issue is the means by which the Senate can recapture its greatness. And perhaps a great Senate offers hope for peace and security for ourselves and all mankind.

The challenge before those whose honor it will be to serve in the greatest parliamentary body in history is to reduce ambition, partisanship, and ideology, and to raise up the national interest. And there is no greater national interest than the survival of our society and mankind.

Let a history yet to be written show that Senators rose above immediate political concerns—above themselves—to debate, and in the process educated the American people concerning, the mounting need for genuine arms reduction and ways to achieve it.

I sincerely believe the nuclear arms issue offers a challenge to our ingenuity, our imagination, indeed our patriotism. But it also offers a way in which the Senate can achieve its true purpose—can become what it has been during its most courageous hours, the forum which shapes our national purpose and direction.

If the Senate of tomorrow reaches that true destiny, future generations will say, with this departing Senator, God bless America, and God bless the U.S. Senate.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, first I congratulate my good friend from Colorado, Senator GARY HART, for a superb speech and a very, very relevant and vital speech. There is no more important issue that confronts this country than the nuclear threat, and Senator HART has spoken out with characteristic eloquence and brilliance on this subject.

He has been a marvelous Senator. We are going to miss him very much. I am sure if anyone has a good shot at higher office, the distinguished Senator from Colorado certainly has, and he would make an outstanding President of the United States.

Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senator from Colorado has spoken at some length on this issue. I am going to speak very briefly on it.

TIME FOR CONGRESS TO SPEAK OUT ON ARMS CONTROL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the House and Senate conferees on the military authorization bill are now engaged in critical negotiations on the role of the Congress in arms control. This conference goes right to the heart of our No. 1 challenge.

Can there be any more important issue than the survival of this great country we love as the free society it is? Of course, not. Does a nuclear war threaten that survival? It does, indeed. Most of us have seen films of the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki by relatively small, weak primitive atomic bombs. That was more than 40 years ago.

In the ensuing 40 years, both the Soviet Union and the United States have advanced the nuclear technology enormously. Both have perfected, deployed, and produced the hydrogen bomb. The hydrogen bomb dwarfs the atomic bomb in power and devastation. Both superpowers have developed intercontinental ballistic missiles that can carry their nuclear warheads thousands of miles from the heart of the Soviet Union or the United States to anywhere on Earth including, of course, to any city in the adversary superpower country. Both have perfected multi-independently targeted reentry vehicles [MIRVS] that can carry 10 or more warheads each. What does that mean? That means a single Soviet missile can strike 10 or more major, widely separated American cities, with an explosion that can leave each of the 10 metropolitan areas a dead, incinerated hulk. That is one missile. Both superpowers have perfected delivery systems from invisible submarines, swift high-flying bombers, and fast moving land-based mobile vehicles that are difficult or impossible to track. Both superpowers have deployed 10,000 strategic—that is intercontinental nuclear warheads throughout the world, ready to strike at the push of a button in Moscow or Washington. Next year, next month, tomorrow, or any time in the next hour the button could go down and with it the civilized world.

This is the first 40 years. The worst is yet to come, unless we stop this mad technological arms race by agreeing to a mutual system of verification of compliance with a ban on all nuclear weapons testing that exceeds a single kiloton.

Over the hill a few decades is an even worse nightmare: The antimatter bomb. This would step up the devastating nuclear potential a hundredfold. But it is worse. It would make explosives so powerful, so small, and so cheap that a single terrorist could carry concealed on his person enough explosive power to totally demolish New York City or Washington or any other city on Earth.

Mr. President, all of this constitutes a great temptation for this technology-rich country. We have consistently "won" every arms race with the Soviet Union. Which country had the first atomic bomb? We did. Of course, a few years later the Russians had theirs. Who had the first hydrogen bomb? We did. A little later the Soviets had their own. Who had the first multi-independently targeted missile [the MIRV]? Once again—the United States. A few years later the Soviets had their own.

Mr. President, this same alternation of United States breakthrough and Soviet response has followed for warhead-carrying cruise missiles, fast-moving submarines loaded with nuclear warheads, bombers carrying every variety of nuclear weapon, and rapidly moving land-based mobile missiles.

We pioneer the breakthrough. A few years later the same devastating weapon and delivery system turns up in the Soviet Union. We win, that is, come in first consistently with one nuclear weapon after another. But who wins the arms race? No one.

Both nations have heavily burdened their economies. Both nations have pulled their scientists away from technologies that would enhance and prolong healthy human life. Both nations are losers. And both nations are increasingly more threatened.

And now we have the supreme diversion. For $1 trillion or more, this Nation is on its way to building a strategic missile defense or star wars system to stop incoming missiles. As the New York Times' Phil Boffey recently reported, even the adminstration's own SDI leadership now recognizes that SDI cannot work as the President has told the country it will work. The SDI directors know this system cannot protect our cities. There is an outside chance that SDI might help protect stationary missile sites. But, since three-quarters of U.S. missiles are deployed in submarines that move swiftly and invisibly underwater and bombers that cruise at the speed of sound through the vast envelope of the Earth, this mission of protecting stationary land-based missile sites makes SDI a trillion-dollar fiasco. But it is much worse. Star wars or SDI virtually guarantees a feverish offensive, defensive nuclear arms race. What will be the Soviet response to this antiballistic missile system? That is easy. They will build, develop, and deploy offensive missiles that will penetrate, overwhelm, spoof, confuse, and underfly whatever star wars system we deploy, and they will achieve this for about one-tenth the cost of our star wars deployment.

Mr. President, what this country needs is not an intensified arms race that no one can win and that impoverishes our Nation. What we need is a series of arms control agreements that will slow and stop this race to nuclear disaster. This is not a matter of trust. It is a matter of both sides recognizing where their interests lie. And where is that? It is in mutual, verifiable, constantly, and carefully monitored agreements to stop nuclear testing and to limit nuclear weapons on both sides to the most stable and least vulnerable deployment. This kind of arms control can enable us to take advantage of the priniciple of mutual deterrence that has kept the peace for the 40 years of the nuclear weapon age.

THE MYTH OF THE DAY: MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES HAVE ACCESS TO NURSING HOME CARE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the myth of the day is that Medicare beneficiaries have access to nursing home benefits when they need them.

While the elderly are guaranteed up to 100 days of skilled nursing home care by the Medicare Program, the simple, tragic fact is that for many elderly, these benefits are simply unavailable.

One of the major goals of the Medicare Program has been to improve the access of the elderly to health care services. In a number of areas, this has been a spectacular success but in the area of skilled nursing home care the goal of access has only been achieved in a few States.

FEW NURSING HOMES PARTICIPATE IN MEDICARE

The reason is all too simple. Few nursing homes in this country participate in the Medicare Program and that has undercut the value of the nursing home benefit to millions of our Nation's elderly.

Consider these facts. A whopping 66 percent of Medicare patient days in nursing homes across this country took place in only 10 States, according to a report released by the Department of Health and Human Services last year.

The remaining 40 States, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico accounted for a mere 34 percent of the Medicare patient days in nursing homes.

Mr. President, that distribution of nursing home patient days would not be surprising nor disturbing if those 10 States accounted for 66 percent of our Nation's elderly. But neither demographics nor patterns of illness account for this high utilization of nursing homes by the elderly in these 10 States.

And what about the remaining 40 States? The Health Department report found 17 States with fewer than 20 nursing homes accepting Medicare patients. Five of those States had fewer than five nursing homes accepting Medicare patients.

Mr. President, how valuable is a benefit if it cannot be exercised? It is clear that the nursing home benefit is fast becoming a myth for many of the elderly in those States with few participating nursing home. And it could not occur at a worse time.

CONTINUITY OF CARE ISSUES ARE MORE CRUCIAL SINCE DRG'S

While this problem has existed for a number of years, the adoption of the DRG system has exacerbated it.

The incentives of the DRG system for prompt discharge have increased the need for both home health and skilled nuring facility care. And it has brought into bold reality the fact that this Medicare benefit is becoming all too mythical for our elderly just when they need it the most.

The lesson in all of this is clear. Unless we find ways to increase nursing home participation in the Medicare program, such as reducing the cost report paperwork burden, the nursing home benefit will become a myth for even more of our Nation's elderly.

H.R. 3614, A BILL TO RESTRICT THE USE OF FEDERAL VEHICLES

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am delighted to join as a cosponsor of the pending substitute to H.R. 3614, legislation to restrict the use of federally owned or leased vehicles from home-to-work transportation.

The substitute we are offering today has been the result of long and hard bargaining on both sides of the aisle and by Members of both Houses.

Even with this substitute, this bill is far from perfect. But on balance, this bill goes a long way toward clarifying a law which has been cavalierly ignored by Federal bureaucrats for far too long.

A BRIEF HISTORY

Mr. President, legislation has been on the books since 1946 prohibiting the use of federally owned or leased vehicles for home-to-work transportation of Federal employees.

While this legislation has often been referred to as "the limo law," its coverage is far broader than a mere prohibition on the use of expensive limousine-type automobiles. It even goes beyond cases in which a Federal driver or chauffeur is employed. This law flatly prohibits the use of any federally owned vehicle or leased vehicle for home-to-work transportation, even where the employee drives himself or herself.

The only exceptions to that law are spelled out in the existing statute, recently recodified in section 1344 of title 31 of the United States Code.

While the law has always been quite clear to Chairman BROOKS of the House Government Operations Committee and myself, apparently there is not a bureaucrat in town who finds the statute clear. They have been particularly adept at finding, or creating, loopholes large enough to accommodate a Federal car.

After all, home-to-work transportation is the ultimate status symbol for a Federal bureaucrat. It sends a clear message to his friends and neighbors that here comes "Mr. Big" or "Ms. Big."

My surveys of all Federal agencies over the last decade have repeatedly found 140 to 200 Federal bureaucrats using this perk, far in excess of the number entitled under Federal law. Just last year a report by the General Accounting Office for Chairman BROOKS of the House Government Operations Committee found similar results.

As a result, it has become clear that the best course of action is to re-write the 1946 statute and specify more clearly the individuals who are entitled to home-to-work transportation. In addition, because of a myriad of General Accounting Office opinions on related issues—some of which are contradictory as GAO's own views have evolved on this issue—this bill also addresses the rare circumstances under which exceptions can be considered.

THE PENDING SUBSTITUTE

Mr. President, Chairman BROOKS is to be congratulated for his committee's tremendous work in restructuring the home-to-work statute. If the negotiations over this substitute are any indication, the task which Chairman BROOKS and his committee faced was clearly formidable.

The pending substitute builds upon the tremendous work of the House Government Operations Committee. It makes a number of important changes in clarifying the applications of this revised statute. In light of the fact that this bill has been held at the desk and, therefore, there will be no committee report, it is crucial that these changes be emphasized now for the purpose of future legislative history.

COVERAGE OF THE JUDICIAL BRANCH AND LEGISLATIVE SUPPORT AGENCIES

The first key change is the substitution of the word "Federal" agency for "Executive" agency and the reference in (f)(2) of the substitute to section 18 of the act of August 2, 1946 (41 U.S.C. 5a).

The choice of terms and reference was done very carefully. After the House completed action on their bill, it was discovered that the choice of the term "Executive" agency in their bill had the inadvertent effect of exempting the entire judicial branch as well as all of the legislative branch support agencies, such as the General Accounting Office, the Government Printing Office, the Congressional Budget Office, the Congressional Research Service, and so on.

The change we are making in this substitute will restore the existing coverage of the judicial branch and the legislative support agencies. It is crucial that these principles be applied to all three branches of Government.

MONITORING COMPLIANCE

Mr. President, Federal agencies have repeatedly ignored rulings of the Comptroller General regarding the interpretation of the present statute, arguing that they were only bound by the ruling of their own agency's general counsel.

The substitute language we are proposing today vests rulemaking authority for the entire Federal Government in the General Services Administration [GSA] but provides that the GSA Administrator must consult with representatives of all three branches of Government before promulgating regulations: for the executive branch, the Office of Management and Budget; for the legislative branch, the General Accounting Office; and, for the Judiciary, the Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The significance of this change should not be overlooked:

First, it reaffirms that all three branches of the Federal Government are subject to the restrictions of this title.

Second, it establishes consistency in the application of governmentwide rules on home-to-work transportation. Individual agencies will no longer be in a position to substitute their own judgment on the applicability of the law.

Third, it reflects our clear intent that these regulations will be promulgated through the Federal Register and receive the public scrutiny and comment they require.

APPROPRIATE RECORDKEEPING

The third change draws on the experience of the General Accounting Office. This change will require that every agency maintain logs or other records each time a Federal employee receives home-to-work transportation.

Mr. President, this requirement is essential if the GAO is to effectively monitor compliance with this statute. In their efforts to assess compliance with the existing statute, the GAO was repeatedly stymied by the fact that many agencies simply did not maintain adequate records.

This provision makes their responsibility crystal clear and all agency heads should take notice of it.

PROXMIRE CONCERNS

Mr. President, having discussed the positive aspects of this substitute, I would be remiss if I did not point out my areas of disagreement.

First, the substitute and the House bill simply permit too many Federal officials to make use of home-to-work transportation. While the bill represents a significant improvement over the current confused state of affairs, we should have pared away even more positions—both in the executive branch and we should have taken action on the legislative branch as well.

For example, we should not be extending this perk to the principal deputy of Cabinet Secretaries.

And I want to put the Senate on notice that I intend to offer legislation next year to reduce both the number of executive and legislative branch officials eligible for home-to-work transportation.

Second, this substitute goes in the wrong direction by adding the position of the Comptroller General or the Postmaster General to the list of exempt officials. This sends the wrong signal at the very time we are paring down the executive branch.

Third, there needs to be more specificity regarding the exemptions contained in section (a)(2)(B) for "intelligence, counterintelligence, criminal law duties, or protective services." These activities are essential and, in certain circumstances, warrant exemption from the restrictions of this title. But by exempting them from the review of the GSA in the rulemaking section of the substitute, we are increasing the potential for abuse. It is crucial that the conference committee will clearly spell out congressional expectations regarding the way in which compliance will be monitored.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, despite my reservations regarding specific compromises reached in this substitute, I believe that this substitute deserves the Senate's support.

Clearly, this substitute is a compromise proposal. One that I hope we can improve in the future. But this proposal builds upon the best concepts embodied in the House bill and makes substantive progress toward eliminating the abuse that has pervaded home-to-work transportation for far too long.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RETIRING MEMBERS OF THE SENATE

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I understand that a number of statements are going to be entered into the RECORD in recognition of those in this body who are departing. I just wanted to put in a couple of sentences about each.

I have not served in this body long, though I have had the chance to know, at least slightly, all of the Members. Let me just go down the list and say what I appreciate about each.

Before I do that, let me add my appreciation—this is a good time to add my appreciation—also for the Senator from Wisconsin, who day after day after day has been plugging away at the things that are really important to this Nation. This body is an infinitely richer body because of BILL PROXMIRE. It is a privilege to serve with him.

Let me talk about the people who are retiring.

RUSSELL LONG. Kind of a walking history book, loaded with common sense. I have seen him on the floor, I have seen him in our Democratic caucuses get up, and sometimes you have to listen closely with that Louisiana twang and it goes a mile a minute, but if you listen closely you get wisdom from him. We have been fortunate, indeed, to have RUSSELL LONG's wisdom as part of this body.

BARRY GOLDWATER. He says what he thinks; sometimes steps on toes.

If I could just relate one small incident. Senator GOLDWATER came to me one day and said, "Do you know where Bowen, Illinois is?" I said, "I thought I knew where every small town in Illinois was, but I don't know where Bowen is."

He said, "My mother was born in Bowen." It is near Macomb, IL, about 539 people.

I got our highway department to make a sign: "Welcome to Bowen, Illinois, home of Josephine Williams, the mother of Senator BARRY GOLDWATER." I presented the sign to the mayor and had my picture taken and handed it to Senator GOLDWATER on the floor. He said, "I've got to go to Bowen."

So about 6 months or so ago we went to Bowen. They had a parade in the town, all five blocks of the town. He spoke in the town's square about what Bowen meant to his mother. About 300 or 400 people gathered there. It was like an old Norman Rockwell cover on the Saturday Evening Post. It was absolutely marvelous.

Then, not too long afterwards, Senator GOLDWATER said to me, after his wife died, "You know, our home in California, we are going to have to close that, and I have all those books there. I think I will send them to the library of Bowen."

I said to him, "I'm not sure they have a library at Bowen." But we checked and there was a library and he sent his books there.

It is just one of those little things. I am proud to have had that small association with BARRY GOLDWATER and to be with him here in the Senate.

PAUL LAXALT. I think of the Rehnquist hearings where, frankly, we were on a collision course, some of us wanted documents and some of us who wanted medical records, and PAUL LAXALT, in that quiet, solid way of his, put things together and both sides were pleased with the results.

There has been some criticism of the Rehnquist hearings. I happen to think they were superb hearings, really giving an insight into how our process works and everyone having a chance to get to be able to make a judgment. But one of the reasons they were successful was because of PAUL LAXALT and his ability to get along with everyone.

GARY HART. We just heard GARY HART speak here. He has been a thoughtful, reflective Member of this body. I am sure he is going to be entering the national dialog and, whether he wins or not, will contribute in a continuing way.

Senator "MAC" MATHIAS, CHARLES MATHIAS. Courage. I see the majority leader on the floor. Sometimes he has had more courage than the majority leader wants, from time to time, I am sure, in standing up to his colleagues on that side. But he stands up to everyone.

There is no question that "MAC" MATHIAS has made significant contributions to this Nation and his leaving the Senate is our loss.

And then, finally, one person that I am particularly going to miss, who I have known long before either one of us served in this Congress, and that is TOM EAGLETON from Missouri. TOM EAGLETON has a sense of where this Nation ought to go.

I may misread TOM EAGLETON's leaving the Senate, but I think part of it is his feeling is we are not dreaming any more. We are not putting together dreams about where this Nation ought to go and what we ought to do. I hope I am wrong about that.

But TOM EAGLETON is that thoughtful person who cares, who is concerned about the future. I am sure, as a faculty member at Washington University in St. Louis, he is going to instill in those students that same kind of caring and vision. I hope we continue to hear from TOM EAGLETON here in this body.

I have been fortunate, indeed, to serve with these Members of the Senate. I just want, in a small way, to pay tribute to them. I do not have an eloquent statement to enter in the RECORD, but I think all of us recognize that not only we but the American people have been served well.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Illinois. I agree with every statement he made. I know our colleagues will appreciate his eloquence here this morning.

Mr. President, at 10 o'clock we will go into closed session to continue the impeachment proceedings.

THE PRESIDENT DESERVES THE FULL SUPPORT OF CONGRESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, within the hour the President will leave for Iceland. I think it goes without saying that the President deserves the full support of Congress—100 percent support—not some kind of conditioned support that disappears once the meeting in Reykjavik is over.

It is sad to say, but the mischief on arms control concocted on the House side has been a disaster as far as timing is concerned. I think we have to be realistic.

The President is about to engage in the highest stakes poker game any of us can imagine. He will be sitting down across the table from Mr. Gorbachev in the next day. Mr. Gorbachev reads the papers and will have all kinds of information on what is happening in the United States and around the world, and I assume particularly in Congress.

And he will know that there are some, hopefully not a majority, who are trying to put roadblocks in the President's path to peace and progress on arms control.

There are some who never ran for the Presidency, who are insisting on the House side that they, in fact, take the President's place. That they determine arms control, that they determine what we do with unratified SALT agreements, that they determine what we do about ASAT and nuclear testing and chemical weapons.

I do not believe there is any doubt in the mind of anyone in this body that the President is sincere in his efforts to reach a meaningful arms control agreement before his second term expires. I cannot for the life of me understand why some keep going back to an agreement that was never ratified in this body, the SALT II agreement. I would hope that the Democratic leadership in the House would back off, complete action on the continuing resolution, postpone any mischief until the President has had an opportunity to try to deal with it face to face.

There is no doubt about it. There are very strong differences of opinion about how we should proceed to achieve a meaningful and verifiable arms control agreement.

There are some who are seriously concerned, some are Republicans and some are Democrats; some are in the Congress, some are out of the Congress. But it does seem to me that in the next 48 to 72 hours we ought to let the President be the President. I do not believe that is too much to ask. We can play games. We will be around next year. If there is no agreement—and I do not expect any great agreements on the weekend—but if later there is a real summit in the United States and there is some agreement, I think most of us would believe that it happened because the Congress, the Democrats and Republicans, supported our President.

We are optimistic. We wish the President well as we did in the resolution passed in the Senate last evening, which we did, I might add, with a major effort by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Senator SIMON.

We believe we are on the right track. We believe that the President will raise issues other than arms control. Arms control should be No. 1, but there are regional differences and there are human rights violations. And they should be brought to Mr. Gorbachev's attention. I believe in all of these things we find ourselves in support of the President.

Finally, Mr. President, let me indicate that I am advised that we may be able to act on the reconciliation ahead of the House. We may be able to do that today. It may not take long. I understand there are three not insignificant, but not major items, that need to be disposed of. There is a meeting right now of the Senate Finance Committee conferees on those three issues: One with reference to AFDC, one with reference to oil spills, and one of them I cannot remember. So they are down to three issues. The papers have been signed by all the conferees except the conferees from Finance and Ways and Means.

I hope we could act on reconciliation following proceedings on impeachment. I also hope we can have some agreement on the drug bill—I know there are some who feel very strongly about the death penalty provision in the drug bill as it comes from the House. We have a bipartisan staff group again looking at the other provisions. They took out some of the provisions in the House bill that we believe ought to be in the drug bill on a bipartisan basis, not Democratic or Republican.

If we could come together on one amendment when we have bipartisan support we could then focus on efforts of those who want to remove the death penalty, those who do not. I hope, somehow, we can get an agreement—if we cannot do anything else we would be forced to file cloture; which we might be permitted to vote on that tomorrow. Perhaps we could wind up our debate and dispose of that fairly early tomorrow. That may not happen. But at least it is a possibility.

Then I would anticipate, there would not be a session on Monday. I hope we would avoid a Saturday session if we can get an agreement to have a cloture vote tomorrow, if that becomes necessary. We would be here on Tuesday, and hopefully complete our work on Wednesday.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Democratic leader.

Mr. BYRD. If the distinguished leader would yield. As I have listened to the distinguished majority leader, I believe I hear it being said that there is a possibility that the Senate would go out after today's business, and go over until next Tuesday; also that the reconciliation measure could be called up today in the Senate, and, hopefully, the drug bill would be ready for some action in the Senate, and that inasmuch as the House has not sent over the extension of the debt limit, and the continuing resolution will not be ready—as I understand from what the majority leader is saying—this weekend, the Senate then would go over until Tuesday, Monday being a religious holiday as well as Columbus Day, a national holiday.

I believe I am also hearing the distinguished Senator say that it is possible for the drug bill to cause the Senate to be in tomorrow, and possibly Saturday. If a cloture motion should be offered today and we do not get consent that it be voted on tomorrow, it would then mature on Saturday or if the Senate is not then in, it would mature on next Tuesday.

Am I hearing the majority leader correctly?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

I hope we might be able to work out something. I believe most Members would be willing to do that. I know the distinguished Senator from Michigan last evening—I appreciate his candor—indicated not to plan on a quick disposition of the drug bill. I believe there are some on this side who have the same view.

Mr. BYRD. With respect to the extension of the debt limit, why is it that the House does not send that bill over here to let the Senate begin work on it?

Mr. DOLE. I discussed that with the Speaker yesterday. He indicated that they were trying to make a determination whether to strip every amendment that the Senate had in it, I think 23 or 24 amendments on the debt extension, or whether to accept some or whether to go to conference.

I indicated that once it is here, if it is stripped, it is difficult to handle because it is open to amendment. And I assume some Members would have amendments. He also indicated that they were not trying to hold it back. They would be willing to send it whenever we felt we would like to have it.

Once we have disposed of reconciliation and the drug bill, I assume we may as well have the debt ceiling. It may take a day or two.

Mr. BYRD. It is not the majority leader's view, as it is mine, that the extension of the debt limit, if it is sent over again as a clean measure, will very likely run into the Gramm-Rudman amendment again, and that would cause some debate and votes? That being the case, the bill would be open to further amendment, and would be like a lightning rod for further amendments, in which event, therefore, not only would Senators be held here beyond next Wednesday but House Members would be as well?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct. I have not discussed this with any of the principals, either GRAMM, RUDMAN, or HOLLINGS.

I would hope we can have that. It would be one way to resolve the problem of the debt ceiling. We have had that battle in the Senate. We know the House is not going to do anything with it this year. Most of us will be here next year. Perhaps if they were willing to withhold their fire on that, other Members might be willing to withhold their fire on other amendments.

I can foresee having another 15 or 20 amendments added to the debt ceiling if we are going to start down that road. I had not mentioned that to either Senators GRAMM, RUDMAN or HOLLINGS. It may trigger some reaction. I would hope they would at least reflect on that and perhaps decide they can make that battle again next year.

Mr. BYRD. I share the distinguished majority leaders's hope. I have been trying to get in touch with Congressman WRIGHT this morning. I want to do so as soon as possible this morning. I want to discuss the debt limit legislation with him and try to get some feel from him as to when that matter will be resolved in the other body and when we might expect it over here.

I understood, last evening, the distinguished majority leader to mention that the debt ceiling might be sent over here by the House along with the adjournment resolution.

Mr. DOLE. If the minority leader will yield, the speaker, at least, has indicated that they are not purposely holding it. But I do know that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI, has been tied up in the Superfund conference. They are still working on reconciliation. There is still a little resolution to be completed on the tax bill. I think it has just been a matter of no time to focus on another conference, in fairness to Members of the House.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. I am sure of that.

One final question, if I may ask the majority leader: How late does he foresee the possibility of rollcall votes today? I think if I were in his place I would throw up my hands and say, "How would I know?"

But he is in a position, however, to know what measures may come before the Senate today, the reconciliation measure being one, and with the Senate disposing of the Articles of Impeachment rather early in the afternoon. Can he give Senators some idea, though it may be rather slim, as it were, can he give us some idea as to what we might expect with regard to rollcalls into this evening?

Mr. DOLE. I would hope there would not be a late evening. It would seem to me that if the impeachment proceedings are completed, say, by 3 o'clock and we are in a position to deal with reconciliation, I would not think that would take over 2 hours, though it has a 10-hour time limit.

Then, by that time, if we could have some bipartisan agreement on the drug bill with maybe one or two exceptions, to narrow the issues to the death penalty and whatever else the staff may recommend to us. Hopefully, we could have some agreement either to have to vote at a certain time or agree that we can vote on cloture tomorrow rather than to stay in until 11 or 12 o'clock. I do not have the desire to stay late and I do not think the distinguished minority leader has either. We both have the same affliction, colds.

Mr. BYRD. The uncertainties being what they are, I think we all have to understand what the distinguished majority leader has said. We hope we will not be in late today but we could very well be. It will all depend upon whether or not we reach some kind of agreement on the drug bill which could, conceivably, keep us over into tomorrow.

Mr. DOLE. And beyond.

I certainly do not believe we should leave here this year without having passed that legislation.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the distinguished majority leader.

Would the distinguished majority leader bear with me further on one observation: Would it be his feeling that if there is cloture to be voted on the drug bill, that that cloture vote should come Saturday or should await until Tuesday following the Monday recess?

Mr. DOLE. I would rather do it tomorrow, if that could happen. Then we could have that behind us and really be back here next week and be able to see the end of the session. I think if we come back with the drug bill on Tuesday, my experience over the years has been that you generally use up the whole week. I think we have to be very honest. We have Members on each side that want to be reelected. I have not seen a single person running who does not want to be reelected. They want to get out of here. We are getting down to 3 weeks before the election. I think we are both going to have difficulty with our colleagues on our respective sides about next Wednesday if we are here. If they are not gone by then, I may want to leave.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader. It is a very uncertain time to attempt to see clearly what the clock and calendar are going to do to us at this point. I think I have about exhausted his knowledge on this subject. He has certainly responded as well as he can to my questions.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR EAGLETON

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I suspect that TOM EAGLETON, more than most Members, will appreciate the series of tributes which his colleagues will place in the RECORD.

I say that not because he is more of an egomaniac than the rest of us—he is not. He is no shrinking violet, but he is not any worse than the rest of us either.

Nor do I say that because I think he will have nothing to do but spend his days studying the words which were said about him. I suspect that TOM will have better things to do with his time.

No; I make that suggestion because I think that TOM EAGLETON has a better sense of what this place is about than most. He understands the rituals of this body and he has a sense of humor about them.

I have served with him in the Governmental Affairs Committee and I have seen him work. He knows the rules and he knows how to win. He also knows how to count and he knows when he is going to lose. When he can win, he pulls out the stops and he does everything that can be done. When he is going to lose, he does what has to be done—he makes his speeches, he contributes what he can to the legislative history he hopes will minimize our folly—but he does not waste his time; he begins to plan for the next battle and organize the next veto.

And through it all TOM EAGLETON has kept a sense of perspective. He can look at what we do here and know that some of it is useful, some of it crucial and some of it is just absurd. I suspect he may, some day, look at these tributes and put them in the category of the absurd. But that will be one of the few times that he will be wrong.

The act of paying tribute to a Senator like TOM EAGLETON allows us to focus on what is the best about this place and think about what a Senator ought to be. A Senator ought to be like TOM EAGLETON.

I am sorry he is leaving. I will miss him. And I will continue to admire him.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR GOLDWATER

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, back in 1979, when I had been in the Senate for just a year, I was faced with the problem of a possible collapse of the Chrysler Corp. I think members can understand what that meant to me: here I was, a new Senator and a major employer in my State was in trouble and looking for help. And even though my senior colleague, Senator RIEGLE, was on the "right" committee and more than able to handle the problem without any help from me, I felt that I had to do something.

And I remember that at one point I wrote a fairly passionate and fairly lengthy "dear colleague" letter explaining why Chrysler ought to be helped. I had 100 of them run out and I signed them all and added little notes to them and mailed them out. Some of my colleagues responded but the response I remember best came from Senator GOLDWATER. "Dear CARL," he wrote, "I think you are all wrong on this issue so I'm not going to give you my vote—but I'm not going to give you any trouble either."

That is BARRY GOLDWATER—honest, direct, no nonsense. Just about the only thing about that note that was not BARRY GOLDWATER was the promise not to give someone any trouble. Because BARRY GOLDWATER has given lots of people—people on the left, people on the right, and people in the middle—plenty of trouble.

He does not do it because he likes to cause problems; he does it because he loves his country and he has very strong ideas about where this Nation ought to go.

Those ideas are rooted in BARRY GOLDWATER'S love of America and his commitment to the traditions and values contained in the basic documents which define American democracy.

I have served on the Armed Services Committee under Chairman GOLDWATER for 4 years now. I wish there were more Members like him: He does not legislate by press release and he does not vote by party affiliation. He looks at the issue, he looks at his values—and he looks after the defense of this country.

BARRY GOLDWATER is a hell of a man and he has been a hell of a Senator. I respect him in both capacities. We will lose a great deal when he leaves the Senate—but he will gain a good deal of time to spend with his family. He has earned that. I wish him well. But even more, I wish he keeps giving all of us the kind of trouble we have come to expect—and accept—from him.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR HART

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, in 1972, GARY HART, as campaign manager for George McGovern, led a revolution. Some may look back and declare his insurgency a failure: after all, for many reasons, his candidate was beaten badly in the fall election. But such a judgment ignores the reality of a revolution. Revolutions do not involve a single battle nor are they decided in a short period of time. Instead, they evolve and emerge and modify themselves over time. And in that context, the revolution that GARY HART once led has now triumphed.

The revolution that GARY HART once led helped lead a new generation into the political process. And once they were involved, he led them in another way: he refused to accept the orthodox views of any generation as inflexible dogma. After his election to the U.S. Senate, he helped shape the evolutionary process which allowed the ideology of the 1960's to make peace with the reality of the 1980's.

As a Senator, GARY HART has confounded the conventional wisdom. When he began his service on the Armed Services Committee, few expected him to be more than a critic. But now he is an acknowledged expert on defense strategy and a vital voice in the ongoing effort to renew and revitalize America's strategic doctrine. Like the revolution he led in 1972, this effort has not had immediate success—but it has had success. The military reform caucus, which he helped found, has demonstrated that there are people willing to talk about defense issues without talking about politics. And it has also demonstrated that the people who talk about defense are also willing to talk about alternatives to existing doctrine.

When GARY HART sought the Presidency in 1984, he showed the American people that he could do more than handle an ax; he also demonstrated that he could handle ideas, the press, and the rigors of a nationwide campaign. Those are skills that, I suspect, he will call upon again in the years to come. For while GARY HART will not be in the Senate, he will not be out of the public eye. He will continue to contribute and continue to be a leading light for the generation he introduced to politics as well as lighting sparks in the generation that his once-youthful comrades have produced.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR LAXALT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, PAUL LAXALT and I have never served together on any committee and do not belong to the same political party. Consequently, our contact with each other has never been sustained and I cannot pretend that I know him well as a person.

But I do know him as a Senator. And I know him well enough as a Senator to admire the skill and dedication and passion he has brought to this body.

In addition to being a Senator, though, PAUL LAXALT has carried an additional obligation over the past 6 years. He has had to carry the mantle of "special friend of the President." In that capacity, he has been asked to carry messages from his colleagues to the White House, as well as from the White House to his colleagues and to foreign leaders.

His "elevation" to the status of "special friend" was an accident of history; it was a result of a relationship begun when both the President and Senator LAXALT were serving as Governors. But what was no accident was the skill with which PAUL LAXALT discharged the role of special friend.

He did not trade on his relationship with the President; he did not seek special advantage or favor. He was more than a special friend; he was a good friend—one who could be trusted to communicate ideas accurately, one who would be willing to accept the trying task of passing on the bad news as well as the good. And he was a friend who understood that his personal relationship could not be allowed to interfere with the professional relationship that the leadership has to have with the President. As a Democrat, I found it interesting—and ultimately educational—to watch Senator LAXALT turn a potentially tense and difficult situation into an easy and clear chain of command. He did not allow anyone to forget that there are lines of authority in the Senate, and even friendship cannot be allowed to alter those lines or cross those boundaries. It was a performance typical of the man—and worthy of the best traditions of the U.S. Senate.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR LONG

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, a few weeks ago, the Senate was in one of those traditional messes that we find ourselves in from time to time. A parliamentary ruling held that Senator HOLLINGS had given two speeches and could not speak again without unanimous consent. The ruling created quite a stir and a good deal of debate. We had worked up the kind of emotion that comes to us easily whenever we think our rights are being threatened. And into this environment came the senior Senator from Louisiana, RUSSELL LONG. And Senator LONG proceeded to give us as an example of why he is so treasured in the Senate: he gave us a history lesson. He spoke about having seen the same sort of situation—40 years ago. He told us that his father—Senator Huey Long—once had almost run up against the two-speech rule himself. He told us that he had been in the Chamber when that happened. He gave life to a precedent and meaning to a ruling of the Chair.

But Senator LONG has always been more than a man of memories. He is a man who has created history. As member of the Senate Finance Committee, he worked the Tax Code as few before him had. He not only knew the code, he had helped create it. And after he was done, after he had perfected every nuance, every crack and cranny, he then worked just as hard to develop a tax policy which virtually eliminated the shelters and loopholes.

RUSSELL LONG is an amazing man. He is, in many ways, a transitional figure in the history of the U.S. Senate: his service here spans a period of radical change. He came to this body as a "Southern Senator" and he leaves as a national treasure; he came when the Senate might consider 180 bills a year and he leaves when we consider 180 amendments to a single bill; he came when a few Senators controlled the work of the body and he leaves when a few Senators can stop all the work in this body. He has seen all those changes, contributed to some, tried to stop others. He has made a contributon to this body, to the Nation and to the laws which will guide us for generations yet to come.

I fear we will not see his like in the Senate again. But I am encouraged to hope that we will continue to see more than his like—we will continue to see him as an active element in our public life.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR MATHIAS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, when political people talk about MAC MATHIAS they normally say that he represents something called the "liberal" or "Rockefeller wing" of the Republican party, Now, I am not a Republican so I do not get involved in their classification schemes—we have enough trouble in my party categorizing the liberals and populists and progessive and all the rest—but I know that MAC MATHIAS represents more than a wing of the Republican Party. He represents a grand tradition of decency and compassion and commitment and principle. And that tradition, I hope, transcends any wing and any party.

MAC MATHIAS fights for the rights of the individual and cares about the future of our society. In the process of making those fights, he drew on a tradition of the Senate. In this body, we believe that each Member has certain rights and, as Senators, we accept a responsibility to protect the rights of our colleagues even when we disagree with the substance of their position. MAC simply applies the principle we accept here to the larger society we seek to both protect and perfect.

That, in itself, would be a sufficient contribution for any Member to make. But I believe that MAC MATHIAS has made another contribution which, while less specific, may be even more important. He represents the sort of Senator which we all, I hope, would like to be: A Member who seeks to achieve his end by reason and persuasion rather than tactics and tricks. I cannot recall a single time when MAC MATHIAS was less than fair to a colleague, less then willing to work together, less than committed to the notion that if we just worked a little harder and a little longer, we could reach an agreement.

Senator MATHIAS is a decent human being and an outstanding Senator. When he leaves us, we will be poorer; I just hope that the time he now has to spend with his family and friends will leave him richer.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR GARY HART

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Senator GARY HART of Colorado, who is retiring at the end of this Congress.

In his 12 years of Senate service, Senator HART and I have often disagreed on matters of national policy. Despite our ideological differences, Senator HART has consistently been a well-prepared and articulate advocate. In the 1984 Democratic Presidential primary campaign, these talents assisted him in winning 27 primaries and caucuses.

Senator HART is an active committee member and serves on the Budget, Environment and Public Works, and Armed Services Committees. In our work on the Armed Services Committee, the differences in our political views are often highlighted. Accordingly, it is particularly gratifying to work closely with Senator HART on the same side of an issue. Recently, our joint support of the Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 provided such an opportunity, and I commend Senator HART for his fine work on this important legislation.

Senator GARY HART is devoted to his principles. While in the Senate, he has energetically sought to implement those principles legislatively. He has earned the respect of his colleagues.

I wish Senator HART, and his lovely wife, Lee, good health and happiness in the future.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR THOMAS EAGLETON

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a retiring colleague who for the past 18 years has been a champion of our poor, elderly, and handicapped citizens as well as a watchdog for Government waste—Missouri Senator THOMAS EAGLETON.

Growing up in south St. Louis, TOM EAGLETON developed an early and intense interest in politics, even attending the 1940 Republican National Covention in support of Wendell Wilkie at the age of 10.

After graduating cum laude from both Amherst College and Harvard Law School and serving a short time in the Navy, TOM returned to his native St. Louis to pursue a career in law and politics. At age 27, he became the youngest man to be elected circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis.

In 1960, he was elected attorney general of the State of Missouri, quickly earning a reputation as an energetic and effective State official. He established the division of consumer protection within the attorney general's office, concentrating his efforts on battling consumer fraud.

Elected Lieutenant Governor in 1964, TOM EAGLETON's work as chairman of the Governor's Commission on Vocational and Technical Education led to the creation of Missouri's network of votech high schools.

He ran a successful campaign for the Senate in 1968, becoming chairman of the District of Columbia Committee and a member of the Committee on Environment and Public Works and the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

During his first Senate term, he led the fight for enactment of the Clean Air and Clean Water Acts and authored the Right To Read Program.

Following his reelection in 1974, TOM EAGLETON became chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging, the Appropriations Agriculture Subcommittee, and the Subcommittee on Governmental Efficiency.

Always fighting Government waste, he sponsored a bill creating the Office of the Inspector General in 12 major Federal departments and agencies to serve as internal auditors of fraud and corruption. These inspectors' investigations have led to hundreds of indictments for abuse of tax funds as well as the recovery of hundreds of millions of dollars of lost Federal money.

He is presently the ranking member of the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

TOM EAGLETON has been truly devoted to the citizens of Missouri as witnessed by the many awards they have bestowed upon him including: Missouri Man of the Year; the Harry S. Truman Good Neighbor Award; the Leon Jordan Memorial Award; and the Midcontinent Farmers Association Distinguished Service Award.

I have always admired TOM's commitment and conviction for those things in which he believes. He is a compassionate and dedicated Senator, and I wish him and his lovely wife, Barbara, our best wishes for a happy and long life back home in their beloved Missouri.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR RUSSELL LONG

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to my very good friend, longtime Senate colleague, and next-door neighbor in the Russell Senate Office Building, Senator RUSSELL LONG, who is retiring from office.

On December 1955, I came to the Senate to fill the unexpired term of Senator Charles E. Daniel. Today, there are only two Members still serving in the Senate who were here on the first day that I assumed this office: Senator JOHN STENNIS and Senator RUSSELL LONG.

At the time, Senator LONG was already finishing his second Senate term at the ripe old age of 36, having been elected to fill the unexpired term of the late John P. Overton in 1948 and reelected in 1950.

During the 38 years he has served in the Senate, RUSSELL LONG has earned a reputation for his vast knowledge of our Tax Code, serving as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee from 1966 until 1980.

Assistant majority leader from 1965–68, RUSSELL LONG served as chairman of the Merchant Marine Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee from 1969–76, and took the chairmanship of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee from 1977–80.

Presently, he is ranking minority member of the Finance Committee and Surface Transportation Subcommittee, as well as serving on the Merchant Marine Subcommittee and three Finance subcommittees.

His commonsense approach and wry wit in heated debate have made him popular among his colleagues. A 1982 survey of Members of Congress ranked him as the most influential and most persuasive Democrat in the entire Senate.

RUSSELL LONG's love and loyalty for the State of Louisiana know no bounds. Over the years he has been responsible for numerous work projects for the State, including hurricane protection, flood control, and navigational improvements.

On the national level, he has led the fight for the Child Support Enforcement Program which has saved our Government more than $5 billion in welfare costs by locating "runaway" fathers and requiring them to contribute to the support of their children.

A guardian of the disabled and elderly, RUSSELL LONG has worked diligently to protect their Social Security and Medicare benefits, ensuring that our truly needy citizens receive adequate medical treatment. At the same time he strove to revise the welfare system, discontinuing the guaranteed annual income for able-bodied persons who refuse to work.

Under his able leadership of the Senate Finance Committee, Congress passed the landmark 1972 and 1976 Federal revenue-sharing laws and the 1975, 1977, and 1978 tax cuts.

A conservative, articulate Senator, and devoted anti-Communist, RUSSELL LONG has always supported a strong defense and persuaded many of our colleagues to join him in voting to preserve our national security.

He is a man of the people, rendering outstanding service to the citizens of his State and never losing touch with his roots. RUSSELL LONG is a common man of uncommon abilities. He is a leader, a patriot, and a great American.

I will sincerely miss my good friend from Louisiana whose honesty, integrity, intelligence, and humor have added so much to the Senate over the years, and I wish RUSSELL and his lovely wife, Carolyn, many, many years of continued health and happiness.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR CHARLES McC. MATHIAS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, as the days of the 99th Congress draw to a close, I would like to make a few remarks about our distinguished colleague from Maryland, Senator CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, who is retiring after 18 years of Senate service.

I have known Senator MATHIAS since he first came to the Senate and have had the privilege of serving with him on the Senate Judiciary Committee for many years.

He is an able legislator, who has represented his State fairly and faithfully. Although I have not always agreed with the positions he has taken, I have found him to be a man of integrity who votes his conscience on the issues.

Senator MATHIAS was born in 1922 in Frederick, MD. His schooling at Haverford College was interrupted during World War II while he served in the Coast Guard and the Navy.

He graduated from the University of Maryland Law School in 1949. After admission to the bar, he practiced law with his father, became an assistant attorney general of Maryland, city attorney of Frederick, and in 1958 he was elected to the General Assembly of Maryland as a delegate from Frederick County. He was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1960 and reelected in 1974 and 1980 when he carried all the counties in the State and the city of Baltimore.

In the Senate, he is currently chairman of the Senate Rules Committee and member of the Foreign Relations Committee, Governmental Affairs Committee, and the Judiciary Committee.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights and Trademarks, Senator MATHIAS has sponsored the the Trademark Counterfeiting Act of 1984, the Semiconductor Chip Protection Act of 1985, and other changes to patent law. He has supported legislation to allow joint research and development for corporations without violating antitrust laws. He has also fought for electronic communications privacy and computer software protection.

In his years in the Senate, Senator MATHIAS has proven to be a dedicated pubic servant and a truly great American. I am privileged to have known and served with him.

Mr. President, I commend Senator MATHIAS on his years of Senate service, and I wish the best for him, his lovely wife, Ann, and his sons, Charles and Rob, in the years ahead.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR PAUL LAXALT

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a man who can be counted among the most admired and respected men in the U.S. Senate—and indeed the entire Nation—Senator PAUL LAXALT, who is retiring at the end of this session after a long and distinguished public service career.

In his years of public service, including 12 years as a Member of this body, Senator LAXALT has shown himself to be a man of integrity and independence. He is a fine example of those things which we consider to be virtues of the American West—strength, independence, loyalty, individuality, and honesty.

The eldest of six Children, Senator LAXALT grew up in Carson City, NV. His upbringing by his Basque parents instilled in him a strong sense of family and the traditional values which have sustained him during his years in public life.

He received an undergraduate degree from the University of Santa Clara and a law degree from the University of Denver Law School interrupting his undergraduate education to serve his country as a U.S. Army corpsman in the South Pacific in World War II.

In 1962, he left a successful private law practice to serve as Lieutenant Governor and then Governor of his State. During his tenure as Governor of Nevada, he concerned himself with establishing a policy of self-reliance and fiscal prudence, which he has continued to advocate during his Senate career as well.

He came out of a 4-year retirement from public life in 1974 and quickly established himself as a strong conservative influence in the Senate, working to meet the need for a strong national defense and to reduce the size and scope of the Federal Government.

Senator LAXALT has distinguished himself in many areas during his Senate career. He has been an able and dedicated member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, where it has been a pleasure to work with him, and I appreciate the valuable service he has rendered as a member of that committee. He also serves as the chairman of the Judiciary's Criminal Law Subcommittee. He served for 2 years as chairman of the Appropriations' State, Justice, Commerce Subcommittee.

Another noteworthy accomplishment was his establishment of the Senate's western coalition, which he formed to help Senators from Western States unite on issues of common concern.

He has shown himself to be an able legislator, leading the opposition to the Panama Canal Treaties during his freshman term, and later chairing the subcommittee which passed the regulatory reform bill through the Senate with no opposition. He also cosponsored the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984. This bill has been called the most sweeping piece of anticrime legislation in the history of the Congress, and Senator LAXALT's role in its passage is especially noteworthy. He is currently working on the interstate water compact.

He has served as general chairman of the Republican Party since 1983; and after being the only Senator to publicly speak out on behalf of Ronald Reagan's campaign for the Presidency in 1976, he served as President Reagan's national campaign chairman in that year, as well as in 1980 and 1984.

Relying on a friendship which goes back to the early years of then-Governors Reagan and LAXALT, President Reagan now calls frequently on his friend from Nevada and considers him to be his "eyes and ears on Capital Hill."

President Reagan's belief in PAUL LAXALT is so great that he entrusted him with the task of handling delicate negotiations with former President Marcos of the Philippines, prior to the fall of the Marcos government. Senator LAXALT's perception of the situation in the Philippines proved invaluable to the President during the ensuing political upheaval in that country. In the short visit he had with President Marcos, he so impressed that leader that Marcos called to ask for his advice during the crisis.

The qualities which his colleagues have come to value most in him are his deep-seated sense of right and wrong; his quick sense of humor; his openness and honesty; and his unfailing loyalty. Our Nation was founded by men with these qualities—men who were not confined by the stale boundaries of prescription politics.

I am told that Senator LAXALT has a sign on the wall in his office which reads: "There is no limit to what a man can do or how far he can go as long as he does not mind who takes the credit."

This seems to be a true assessment of PAUL LAXALT's ideology. He quietly, and with determination, accomplishes what he thinks is necessary for the good of the people of his State and our Nation.

I shall miss my friend from Nevada, both personally and professionally. I know that all of my distinguished colleagues join me in wishing him and his lovely wife Carol, continued good health and happiness.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR BARRY GOLDWATER

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I have mixed feelings as I rise to honor Senator BARRY GOLDWATER on his retirement, for it is easy to pay tribute to a man of his character, but difficult to say goodbye to a friend and truly great Member of this body.

I have known him since I came to the Senate 30 years ago and have watched his leadership carry this Nation through some of the most formative and turbulent times in its history. Mr. President, I believe that few have served this country as faithfully as this man, and few will be remembered as well.

When we look back over the decades of this century, Senator GOLDWATER's image will be engraved there. He was part of the glory of World War II and privy to the threat of the cold war. He witnessed the unrest of the sixties and the crisis in Vietnam. He lived through the confusion of Watergate and the growth of the arms race. Through all these years, he has been a strong voice—at times a lonely voice—for fiscal conservatism, a strong defense, peace, and freedom.

We will remember him as the pre-Vietnam Presidential candidate, who warned the Nation that it could not commit itself to war one step at a time—that to shed the lifeblood of a Nation for any less a goal than victory is sacrilege. For his honesty, he was harangued by liberals and castigated by petty politicians. The Nation that was promised no war got a long war. History judges BARRY GOLDWATER to have been right and he is now known as a prophet whose words stood the test of time.

As the years go by, we will treasure his devoted public service, for he has defended this country in military combat and in the legislative trenches. BARRY GOLDWATER has spent 37 years of his life in active military service and in the Reserves, where he retired as a major general. He has spent 37 years in government, with responsibilities ranging from member of the Phoenix City Council to the distinguished chairman of the powerful Senate Armed Services Committee.

In addition, he has served ably as chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and as a member on the Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee, the Small Business Committee, the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee.

Recently, in the final days of his career in public service, he crowned the legislative achievements of his years here with the Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986. This measure, named in his honor, is a sweeping reorganization of the military services and the culmination of years of work. Future generations will owe an unending debt to the leadership and wisdom of Senator GOLDWATER in this legislation.

As the years go by, these accomplishments will not be the only reminder of BARRY GOLDWATER's time here. His character will also be etched in our memories. We will remember his energy and enthusiasm; his humor and wit; his candor and kindness. We will recall the stubborn way he set his jaw when he thought he was right and the futility of getting him to change his mind. We will remember his courage; his patriotism; his integrity, and his compassion.

So great was my admiration for this man and the principles for which he stood that I switched parties in 1964 to support his Presidential candidacy.

Thomas Paine once said that in the times that try men's souls, "the summer soldier and the sunshine patriot" will shrink from the service of his country. In those times, he says, he who is able to stand "deserves the love and thanks of man and woman."

Mr. President, BARRY GOLDWATER is a man who has proven during his lifetime that in the "times that try men's souls," he will not "shrink from the service of his country." He is a man who has carried the sword so that he could raise the banner of peace. He is a man who has loved freedom and been willing to pay its price—a patriot for all seasons. He is a man who been a national servant and become a national treasure. Yes, Mr. President, he is a man who deserves the gratitude of every person in this Nation.

My words cannot capture all the contributions BARRY GOLDWATER has made, for much that he has offered has been given from his heart. I can only say that he has served our country well and fought for what is worthy. To him, I give my heartfelt gratitude.

Mr. President, it is with deep regret that I see this truly great American leave this Chamber, but I consider it a great privilege to have served our Nation with him, and I count it highest honor to have known him as a friend.

SENATOR CHARLES "MAC" MATHIAS

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, in their unusual and highly informative work entitled "The Book of America," Neal Pierce and Jerry Hagstrom make an interesting point about the State of Maryland as follows, and I quote:

> Maryland fits only reluctantly into a single portrait. What, after all, does the blue-collar port city of Baltimore, 55-percent black, have in common with the Washington, DC, suburb of Montgomery County, which has among the highest family incomes in the Nation? What do the watermen of the somnolent Eastern Shore have in common with the residents of mountain-locked Cumberland? What do the people who live in the almost continuous string of middle-class suburbs from Washington to Baltimore, in Prince Georges and Anne Arundel and Baltimore Counties, have in common with the others?

The answer given in the book is "not very much, except that they all live within Maryland's convoluted boundaries." My own answer is that the thing these disparate regions of a single State have in common and have had in common since 1969 to their enduring benefit is MAC MATHIAS.

I know what it is like to be a Republican in a State where the party has registered a minority of the voters. It is often not easy, but MAC, by dint of his honesty, nonpartisan ability, and bipartisan activity, has held the respect and affection of the people of the State of Maryland of all parties for nearly 30 years.

Likewise, he has held the respect and affection of this body and of the great majority of our party who believe that diversity is the key to growth and progress.

Of all the qualities of MAC MATHIAS as a man and as a Senator, none so stands out as his modesty. I remember a little over 1 year ago, standing in the back of the Senate caucus room, listening to MAC MATHIAS deliver his announcement not to seek reelection. He said then, "When I was elected to Congress in 1960, we were a nation divided by barriers of law, custom, and practice. Today, there is no legal barrier of any kind between Americans of differing race and creed. That is change in its most positive form. I am proud to have played a role in that peaceful revolution."

I suggest, Mr. President, that here, our colleague's modesty was excessive. They say that MAC MATHIAS' family has been associated with the Republican Party since the time of Abraham Lincoln.

It shows in the type of Senator he is and the type of Republican he is. In 1963, it was MAC MATHIAS and his Republican colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee who sponsored an omnibus civil rights bill. That bill later became the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the landmark civil rights legislation of the 20th century.

The legacy that MAC MATHIAS leaves to the field of civil rights also includes equal educational opportunity for the handicapped. MAC was the architect of an amendment in 1974 that provided the first Federal funding of schools attempting to serve the handicapped which Congress translated the following year into Public Law 94-142, the Education of All Handicapped Children's Act. His work for the disabled represents all that is best about this body and that is the provision of opportunity for all Americans to excel in a climate of peace.

MAC also played a key role in the work that led to the televising of Senate sessions. My only wish is that the Senate and the people of the United States would have at least another term to look upon the calm countenance of my friend, MAC MATHIAS.

But that is not to be and we must accept it. Some 50 years before MAC MATHIAS came to the Congress as a young Representative, another Maryland Representative, then in the twilight of his career, Joshua Talbott, delivered this wisdom to a freshman Member, and I quote.

> There are two kinds of Congressmen, show horses and work horses. If you want to get your name in the paper, be a show horse. If you want to gain the respect of your colleagues, keep quiet and be a work horse.

Not many Members can balance the demands of style and substance in the U.S. Senate, but MAC MATHIAS has done it with grace, he has done it with courage, and the country is richer for it.

SENATOR EAGLETON

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President some of us in this body have suffered or enjoyed the designation as blunt speakers on occasion. To this Senator, that designation has been especially welcome when it earns a comparison with the senior Senator from Missouri, TOM EAGLETON.

TOM will always be remembered for making the tough decisions. One of my enduring memories of this body, although a very ambivalent memory, is of the difficult matter of Harrison Williams. No one had a more difficult time than TOM EAGLETON. And when the time came for a decision, TOM EAGLETON made his and explained it with a commanding eloquence on the floor of the Senate.

The Nation, of course, has more than the collective memories of the Senate when it comes to TOM EAGLETON. He played the major role in the establishment of the National Institute on Aging and was instrumental in expanding services available under the Older Americans Act.

TOM EAGLETON is a fighter and though we've found ourselves on opposite sides of an issue or two on this floor, his work in the U.S. Senate represents the very best of this institution. As the Senate moves into the 100th Congress, we will be poorer for his absence.

SENATOR LONG

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, today we say goodbye to a number of colleagues, among them a man who wears the title "Mr. Chairman" as comfortably as any in this Chamber.

That man is RUSSELL LONG and though he hasn't been in the majority for a few years he will always be remembered as a leader of uncommon ability; a man of conscience always and a man of compromise when necessary.

There is a quote attributed to Louisiana's senior Senator that makes the point, "In politics, you must help your friends or you won't have any." One thing is for sure, RUSSELL LONG has more friends around here than most Members.

I suspect our colleague is not retiring because he is tired of public life. That doesn't sound like RUSSELL LONG. No; I think he found a better deal down the road and none of us will find out anything about it until we read about it in the newspaper.

After 36 years in the Senate, RUSSELL LONG leaves here to go back to Louisiana where I read that his approval rating is somewhere in the neighborhood of 80 percent. Since so few of us ever get to visit the neighborhood, let me explain what that means.

It means that when 10 people get together in Louisiana, the chances are that 8 of them will have something good to say about RUSSELL LONG. The only rating that could beat that would be one from this body. And I would be willing to bet if I were a gambling man that 100 percent of the Senate would voice their approval of RUSSELL LONG in public or private.

I, for one, consider it a privilege to have served with RUSSELL LONG.

SENATOR LAXALT

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, it is no secret in this body that I am often at odds with the policies of the President of the United States. It is also no secret that PAUL LAXALT is a great friend of the President. But what may not be so well known is the respect and affection I hold for the senior Senator from Nevada.

PAUL has carried with him into the Senate these past 6 years an unusual burden and an unusual benefit. And that is his uncommonly close relationship to the President of the United States. This role is an unofficial liaison between the Senate and the White House has been of benefit to all Senators.

The quality the people of the State of Nevada have found in their senior Senator for the past 12 years is the quality that made PAUL the only Republican to win a previously Democratic seat in 1974.

That quality, quite simply, is candor in dealing with some of the Senate's and the Nation's most contentious issues. Those of us in the Senate who have differed with PAUL LAXALT have always agreed that his work is marked by an open and straightforward approach to public policy. No matter what our different philosophies and agendas, the entire Senate will miss PAUL LAXALT.

SENATOR GOLDWATER

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, Robert Frost said, "The middle of the road is where the white line is, and that's the worst place to drive."

Today, we honor a man who never tried to navigate that perilous center of the road and in so doing, constantly enriched both the political dialog and legacy of this Nation.

BARRY GOLDWATER is a man who speaks his mind and speaks it plainly, whatever the circumstance, whatever the issue, whatever the opposition.

Unlike many on this floor over the decades who wear the label only when it suits them, the senior Senator from Arizona is a political conservative to the core. It is not surprising therefore, that the Senator's conscience has caused him to vote and speak out for such supposedly "liberal" positions as the independence of the judiciary with the same passion and precision that marks his support of an adequate national defense.

In recent years, the sort of outspokenness has gotten Senator GOLDWATER in some trouble, not that he ever noticed it. The trouble came from the far right, social-issue wing of our party, those who call themselves conservatives because it is a label that commands respect. In large part, it commands this kind of respect because of BARRY GOLDWATER.

But the bullying of this group does not transfer to the true tenets of conservatism as Senator GOLDWATER himself observed in a speech in 1982. He said then:

> I am frankly sick and tired of the political preachers across this country telling me as a citizen that if I want to be a moral person, I must believe in "A," "B," and "C" and "D." I will fight them every step of the way if they try to dictate their moral convictions to all Americans in the name of conservatism.

Conservatism will survive the transient pressures of this or that wave or righteousness and the Senate with its rich variety of philosophy will survive after BARRY GOLDWATER moves on to his mountain climbing, photography, and I understand, some teaching. But it will not be the same around here. This year, the Senate loses some of its toughest veterans to bigger and better pursuits. None is a greater loss to the Senate, to the country, than BARRY GOLDWATER, a conservative, an American that I have been proud to call a friend.

TRIBUTE TO DEPARTING COLLEAGUES

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, the 99th Congress is nearly over, and the Senate can look back with pride over a record of extraordinary and historic legislative accomplishments. In recent months the Senate has passed a revolutionary tax bill that sets the foundation for true tax reform. Our action on the drug bill, and on Superfund signals our commitment to deal seriously with pollutants that affect the health of our children and of our lands. Few can doubt that our other legislative efforts, including the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings measure to balance the budget, will have lasting legacies for the economic well-being of our Nation.

But while we can take some comfort from the many accomplishments of this 99th Congress, all of us in the Senate must temper our enthusiasm with the realization that six of our colleagues will depart the Senate at the end of this session.

Senator GOLDWATER, Senator LONG, Senator MATHIAS, Senator LAXALT, Senator EAGLETON, and Senator HART, have each made monumental contributions to our Nation. They articulate individual and distinct political philosophies, yet we have witnessed their unified goals to make the United States a better place to live, to make us a trustworthy neighbor to our foreign friends, and to make sure that our citizens realize the promises of democracy that were established by our Founding Fathers.

The accomplishments of our departing colleagues are found in the laws of our Nation, and in our political history. No one among us can doubt that these six Senators have dedicated their lives to serve the public interest. It is not enough to simply say that we will miss BARRY GOLDWATER, RUSSELL LONG, TOM EAGLETON, GARY HART, PAUL LAXALT, and MAC MATHIAS. It goes without saying that we will miss their companionship and grace. But what we will miss most of all are their gifts of leadership and wisdom.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR CHARLES McC. MATHIAS

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, with a combination of sorrow and joy, I bid farewell to Senator CHARLES McC. MATHIAS—sorrow because he is a man of conscience and decency whose voice and talents will be sorely missed in this body, but joy because he is a vital and committed man who will undoubtedly apply himself to equally important endeavors outside this body.

I have had the honor of serving with MAC MATHIAS for all 18 year of his Senate career. We often have been jokingly referred to as lonely lepers in the colony we call "moderate Republicanism," and I long ago learned to respect his strong voice and dedicated spirit.

A lot of history has been made during the past 18 years, and not all of it has been proud history: Vietnam, Watergate, and the incredible escalation of the nuclear arms race. But through it all, MAC MATHIAS has maintained not only his commitment but also his civility. He has refused to remain silent when his conscience and vision put him at odds with the majority. But instead of attacking the majority, MAC MATHIAS has set himself to the task of framing alternatives and advocating peace and justice.

Of all the accomplishments MAC MATHIAS can proudly claim, I think the Voting Rights Act stands as one of the greatest testaments to his energy, creativity, and compassion. At a time when domestic politics seemed to be coming apart at the seams, MAC MATHIAS refused to be among the naysayers. He knew what was right and melded it with what was possible and what was needed to frame a lasting piece of legislation. When we one day ratify the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, that too will stand as a testament to the will and vision of MAC MATHIAS.

As the ranking member of the Senate Rules Commitee, I will miss his leadership. As a moderate Republican, I will miss his companionship. And as a Member of this institution, I will miss his intellect, civility, and decency. But as I join my colleagues in bidding farewell to MAC MATHIAS, I take joy in the certainty that his commitment to civil rights, efficient government, and lasting peace will continue outside this Chamber.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR THOMAS EAGLETON

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, in a few days, my good friend and distinguished colleague TOM EAGLETON will be leaving this body. I will miss his presence in this Chamber greatly. During my 20 years in the Senate, it has been my honor to serve with many distinguished Americans, who also happened to be U.S. Senators. It always is difficult to come to the end of another term and say goodbye to one of these trusted friends and colleagues.

During the 18 years TOM and I have served as Senators, my appreciation and respect for this man have grown immensely. I am pleased to say that we have stood shoulder to shoulder in battle on this floor on numerous occasions. It is with much less pleasure that I report that we also have stood toe to toe in battle. Of the two, I much prefer the former, because TOM EAGLETON is a fierce warrior—he has no fear of battle. I learned this as chairman of the Appropriations Committee in many a markup session and also on the Senate floor during heated debates. My good friend, the senior Senator from Missouri, always did his homework and came before our colleagues eager to enter the fray.

But beyond our professional relationship, TOM and I have developed a close personal friendship. On a number of occasions, Antoinette and I have had the good fortune to travel with or entertain TOM and his wife, Barbara. He is a wonderful traveling companion. He is able to maintain the most rigorous schedule and always remain gracious. Above all else, TOM EAGLETON is able to keep his wits about him and to find humor in the most common experiences or in the most frenzied times.

Mr. President, it has been a privilege to know and serve with this most distinguished Senator. All who have served with TOM EAGLETON are better for it and we shall feel his absence profoundly.

THE RETIREMENT OF SENATOR BARRY M. GOLDWATER

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to express my great respect and admiration for my distinguished colleague from the State of Arizona who, as we all know, will be retiring from the Senate after this year. It has been a pleasure and an honor to serve with Senator GOLDWATER in this body during the past 14 years, and I will sorely miss his presence. This Nation of ours has been fortunate to have had a leader such as he, whose commitment to national security and the Constitution go unparalleled.

Senator GOLDWATER came to the Senate in 1952, when he defeated then

Senate Majority Leader Ernest McFarland. Since then, he has been reelected four times and has become the best known member of the Republican Party. For so many years now, he has been the most articulate, forceful, courageous, and consistent advocate of our conservative ideals, and I daresay it will be nearly impossible to replace such a man. True statesmen always are.

Throughout his career, Senator GOLDWATER has been characterized as being an extremist in his views. It is this characterization that hurt his bid for the Presidency in 1964. However, in defending his political views, Senator GOLDWATER once declared, "Extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice, and moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue." There's much truth to this saying, and only history will judge whether or not our Nation made a mistake in 1964.

Coming from the Southwest as does Senator GOLDWATER, I feel a special closeness to him. We have shared many issues which are important to both Arizona and New Mexico. And as one of the earliest critics of high Federal spending, he is surely a man after my own heart. Back in 1957, Senator GOLDWATER gave a speech criticizing President Eisenhower's fiscal 1958 budget as being too high. That speech is often regarded as having launched his career as the leader of the conservative wing of our party. Nearly 30 years later, Senator GOLDWATER remains one of the most outspoken critics of Government spending policies. Appropriately enough, it seems as though Government is finally starting to listen.

Senator GOLDWATER'S unrelenting advocacy of a strong defense is all too well known. Again, I think it is appropriate that, as he leaves office, he does so at a time when our Nation's military preparedness has been reestablished after a period of considerable neglect. As chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, the Senator has played a key role in the rebuilding of our conventional forces and the modernization of our strategic forces.

In short, the legacy Senator GOLDWATER leaves his Nation is immeasurable. I wish my good friend and colleague all the best.

SENATOR BARRY GOLDWATER

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, there are among us, always, some who are giants. BARRY GOLDWATER is clearly one of those, a man of integrity, of vision, of principle, of philosophy, of guiding moral roots that have served him well and benefited his country.

Courage told him to stand on principle when he ran for President. That principle has been vindicated, although in the agony of defeat, clearly, the temptation to slide off principle into the always embraceable mainstream, must have been overpowering. To watch Senator GOLDWATER resist that has been one of the rare privileges of my life. To watch him urge America to stand up to its greatness, to watch him urge America to stand up to its word with allies such as Taiwan, to watch Senator GOLDWATER urge America to hang on to principles of freedom, liberty, and to fight to defend them has been an inspiration to all of us.

It has been, from time to time, stylish to think that America could get by without strength and that the force of our smiling presence in the world would be enough to win over all the forces of imperialism that washed from ocean to ocean. Senator GOLDWATER has been one who draws us back to the reality that if it is not we who stand for freedom, who then can, and who then will?

I believe that this country owes a tremendous debt of gratitude to BARRY GOLDWATER. I shall miss him as a legislator, miss him as a statesman, miss him deeply as a friend. I wish him well. All of us are better for having served alongside him.

SENATOR RUSSELL LONG

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, as we look this year at retirements from the Senate, certainly a couple of them will represent outstanding losses in capability and service to the American people. One of those Senators is my friend RUSSELL LONG.

RUSSELL LONG represents wisdom, experience, exuberant partnership when necessary, exuberant patriotism when obvious. His is a capability of reducing complex issues to understandable terms which focus on the necessary things.

RUSSELL LONG is a good friend. I have worked with him when he was chairman of the Finance Committee, and I have worked with him as ranking member of the Finance Committee. On matters of tax policy, sometimes we agreed, and sometimes we disagreed, but never was there a vitriolic word between us. Always there was an effort to achieve something a President, whether Carter or Reagan, wished within a spectrum of integrity, honesty, and the decent philosophy that American business and American earners have singular rights in a free economy.

RUSSELL LONG was creative. RUSSELL LONG was crafty. I say crafty with genuine admiration because, above all, RUSSELL could achieve goals which he viewed as important. By molding alliances, by relating events, by sheer craftsmanship in the legislative process RUSSELL achieved his objectives and those of the Presidents he served.

Mr. President, on top of all these truly wonderful qualities as a legislator and as a committee chairman, RUSSELL LONG just happens to be my friend. I wish him well as he enters his new life. The country can give thanks it had the services for such a long time of one who was so devoted to the very essence of that which makes America decent and successful.

SENATOR TOM EAGLETON

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, as Senator TOM EAGLETON retires this year, I am compelled to express a level of admiration for him that he would not let me express during the painful and trying times of the expulsion of Harrison Williams. TOM EAGLETON and Pete Williams had been friends, and the agony that Senator EAGLETON went through in making a judgment that the interests and integrity of the Senate outweighed bonds of friendship with an old and trusted ally was something that most of the Senate was not privileged to watch. I saw desperate internal struggle as he sought not to choose between the integrity of the Senate and an old friend, but how to handle the choice that he had made instinctively. The choice was one of integrity; it was a choice of a very great and courageous man.

On other instances Senator EAGLETON and I have disagreed philosophically, he riding with his party and I with mine, but over the course of the years, I have worked with him on several legislative initiatives. I have known him always to be honest, straightforward, understanding, and creative. He has been tough in resisting any erosion of principle and understanding as to the needs of others.

Mr. President, TOM EAGLETON is one who shows the civility of American political life, something which can elicit the admiration from friendly partisans and from people whose integrity is above reproach. I will miss TOM. He has been one from whom I have learned much in the course of my Senate career. If I have learned nothing else, I have learned what it is to watch courage and philosophy dominate in a struggle to do what is right. Again I say, America has benefited from the integrity and gentility of one who showed us that.

SENATOR PAUL LAXALT

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, one of our colleagues retiring this year is perhaps my first and longest friend in the U.S. Senate, PAUL LAXALT. PAUL came to Wyoming in the dark times of my first year of campaigning for the U.S. Senate and was willing to take a stand in my behalf. Some others who came out were willing to merely be present in my behalf, but PAUL LAXALT weighed in. This typified PAUL's courage.

Since that time, as a Member of the Senate and as a colleague of the Senator from Nevada, I have watched with absolute admiration his ability to decently embrace the ideas of friend and foe alike, never rejecting anybody with arrogance or by posturing. He has friends, and deservedly so, on both sides of the aisle. PAUL is yet another one of those Americans, the son of a Basque immigrant, whose beginnings have given him an appreciation of the essence of this country—what this country is all about. America benefits enormously by the presence of people of that understanding and that level of devotion to America's greatness. America can be grateful, and I am grateful for the service of PAUL LAXALT, for his friendship and that of his family.

We lose a friend of the President. We lose an able and capable legislator. We lose an amiable and agreeable friend. We lose a tough and skilled fighter. As PAUL moves on, I wish him and his family well. Wherever his path leads him, we can be sure that if his country needs him, he'll be there. By his presence we've all been blessed. The country is stronger; the lives of Americans are more secure.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR GARY HART

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, at the end of the 99th Congress we will say farewell to Senator GARY HART. For the past 12 years, Senator HART has been an effective and hard-working spokesman for Colorado in this body. In addition, he has played an active role in defining our national agenda for the 1980's, particularly in the critical areas of economic policy, national security, and energy.

We in Oklahoma are proud that Senator HART spent his undergraduate college days at Bethany Nazarene College in Bethany, OK, obtaining a B.A. there in 1958 before attending divinity school and law school at Yale University.

Throughout his productive career in the Senate, Senator HART has presented innovative ideas to deal with our Nation's most severe problems. He has been a valued member of the Senate Armed Services, Budget, and Environment and Public Works Committees.

Senator HART is an acknowledged expert on military reform, particularly on naval operations, and founded the bipartisan Military Reform Caucus. He is also one of the most knowledgeable Senators in this body on the details of arms control.

In the environmental area, Senator HART has taken a leading role as a member of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, most often following a middle course in critical debates between the desires of environmental groups and business groups. He headed the Senate's investigation of the Three Mile Island nuclear powerplant accident and chaired the National Commission on Air Quality, which released a report in 1981 on the Clean Air Act that drew fire from both sides.

From the start of his career, Senator HART has been a strong advocate of policies to increase our Nation's energy independence, supporting imposition of an oil import fee and opposing the so-called Windfall Profits Tax.

As a member of the Senate Budget Committee, Senator HART proposed a plan which the committee adopted in 1981 to balance the Federal budget. He also introduced legislation to prevent taxpayers from being pushed into higher brackets by inflation.

I have been most honored by Senator HART's support and cosponsorship of my legislation to reform campaign finance laws. He has been an outspoken advocate of the need to change the way campaigns are financed in this country in order to preserve the integrity of our election process. His support for these changes will be sorely missed as we press ahead with this critical debate next year.

I join my fellow colleagues in paying tribute to the career of Senator GARY HART and in thanking him for his service to our country as a Member of the U.S. Senate. Senator HART, we all wish you and your family the very best for the future.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR RUSSELL LONG

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, when the 99th Congress adjourns we will say farewell to one of the Senate's most esteemed and senior Members, Senator RUSSELL LONG of Louisiana. His contributions to our Nation as a Senator will be sorely missed. I know that he will continue to make an immense contribution as a private citizen.

Senator LONG is currently second in seniority in this body, ranking behind only Senator JOHN STENNIS of Mississippi in length of service in the Senate. Elected just before his 30th birthday, Senator LONG has devoted more than half of his life to the United States Senate, to his State, and to this Nation.

There is no Member of this body who understands the Federal Tax Code better than Senator LONG. There is no Senator who works harder or better does his homework than does Senator LONG.

He has made his mark on this body in many ways, but most especially through his able service for 15 years as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee where he because known as the master of consensus building, a role he has continued during his service as the ranking member of that committee. Senator LONG was a skillful manager of the Finance Committee, encouraging bipartisan compromises and allowing all members of the committee to have a voice in the formulation of the critical legislation handled by that panel. His mark is on every major tax bill which has come out of Congress in the past 20 years.

Part of his success stems from his mastery of the Senate's parliamentary procedure, but, no doubt, much of his success also comes from his irrepressibly good sense of humor, his fairness, and his commonsense approach to any problem.

Senator LONG has always correctly believed that the chief priority for our economy should be balancing the budget, and he has worked diligently in promoting that much-needed goal.

Although to list all of his legislative accomplishments would be impossible, among them have been his authorship of the earned income tax credit, which rewards the working poor, and his proposal for welfare reform legislation to put a ceiling on Federal welfare costs and encourage able-bodied welfare recipients to work.

Senator LONG has also proposed a system of catastrophic health insurance and advocated employee stock ownership plans [ESOP's] to boost worker productivity. He has pushed for a reformed tax structure to encourage much-needed capital formation and give the private sector the incentives it needs to move toward full employment.

His work in promoting the need for energy independence in this country is unbounded, and he has always recognized the importance of the energy industry to this country's national security interests.

In addition, Senator LONG has made contributions as a member of the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee, the Senate Select Committee on Ethics and the Joint Taxation Committee. He also served a term as Senate majority whip.

The son of the late Senator and former Louisiana Governor, Huey P. Long, Senator LONG was exposed to politics throughout his entire life. In fact, he was first elected to office while a junior at Louisiana State University, when he became student body president. He received his law degree from LSU in 1942 before going into the Navy to serve our country in World War II. In 1946, Senator LONG returned to Baton Rouge to practice law, but was again quickly immersed in politics, working for his uncle, Earl Long, who became Governor of Louisiana in 1948. Senator LONG served his uncle as executive counsel during his gubernatonial term.

Senator LONG won his first election to the U.S. Senate in 1948 to fill the unexpired term of Senator John Overton, who died while in office. He was elected to his first full term in the Senate in 1950 by a more than 68-percent margin, and has been in the U.S. Senate ever since, winning election five more times by comfortable margins.

It has been my distinct honor to serve on the Finance Committee and in this body with Senator LONG. He has been my good friend and adviser since I first came to the U.S. Senate in 1979. I truly value his friendship.

Upon announcing his impending retirement early in 1985, Senator LONG said, "Every Senator should decide for himself at what point he thinks he should retire," but also stated that when he leaves the Senate he will continue to "take an interest in public affairs." Those of us who know RUSSELL LONG and know of his honesty, integrity, and devotion to his country know that he will remain active in counseling us as we deal with our Nation's problems in the future.

I join my fellow colleagues in paying tribute to the career of Senator RUSSELL LONG and in thanking him for his many years of service to our country as a Member of the U.S. Senate.

I also want to thank his wife and partner, Carolyn Long, for supporting Senator LONG in his work and commitment to public service. I thank her also for making a very significant contribution of her own to the good of our Nation through her own earlier work on the staff of the U.S. Senate and for the encouragement and friendship which she has extended to countless Senators, their spouses, and families.

Senator RUSSELL LONG and his wife are truly loved by the people of Louisiana and those who make up the institutional family of the U.S. Senate. My hope is that they will constantly remember the great love and respect in which they are held by all of us and will have much happiness in the years ahead.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, JR.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, like most of my colleagues, I will miss my very good friend "MAC" MATHIAS. He is well known for his wide range of talents and ability. As I recall, the Washington Post once commented on his remarkable ability to be at home with the dock workers of Baltimore and the wealthy residents of Maryland's eastern shore.

In the Senate, Mr. MATHIAS is at home in a technical debate about the impact of foreign trade on American industry or the fine points of nuclear proliferation treaties. I have always admired the strength of character and commitment to ideals of Senator CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, Jr. We in the Senate seldom allow ourselves to take the time to appreciate the work of a fellow Senator. On the occasion of Senator MATHIAS' completion of his last term, we owe it to MAC to thank him for his fine example.

There are two substantive issues about Senator MATHIAS that I would like to share with my colleagues. The first is his commitment to the terms of the agreement reached by the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America. Senator MATHIAS was one of the Senate's most convincing supporters of this bipartisan doctrine. We were trying to convince our colleagues that a balanced approach to the human development, security, and political needs of this troubled region.

While the full Congress did not ultimately implement the terms of our bipartisan effort to the extent we would have liked, I was always impressed with Senator MATHIAS' skillful and articulate exposition of the full range of economic, military, and political change needed in Central America. I will continue to work for our goals in this area, and I will truly miss the energetic support of my fellow senior counselor on the Commission.

The second debt I owe to Senator MATHIAS is for his fine work on patent protection for semiconductors. New Mexico is a producer of semiconductors and the law desperately needed clarification in this scientific and technical arena. The excellent work of Senator MATHIAS has done much to stabilize an otherwise violatile question about the rights of many of our good scientists in New Mexico to have their ideas protected. On behalf of New Mexico and America's computer industry, I thank my good friend for this lasting contribution to a vital industry.

In closing, I would only like to add that the U.S. Senate, as an institution, will sorely miss the calm and intelligence of one of its most individualistic and gentle Members. I hope MAC will continue to work with us in solving some of our most difficult problems. I know his hand can still carve out a path to agreement, as he showed us in the debate on Central America.

Indeed, the entire Senate and the entire Nation owe a debt of gratitude to a hardworking American who understands the problems of this Nation and its great future. We will only reach our national goals when more men and women of high caliber dedicate themselves to national service as Senator CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, Jr., has done.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR PAUL LAXALT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to my colleagues in the Senate who will retire at the conclusion of the 99th Congress.

As these Members retire, they will leave behind many years of outstanding leadership, leadership which has been provided to both sides of the aisle. When I think of the leaders of the Senate, one name which immediately comes to mind is PAUL LAXALT. As my colleagues know, Senator LAXALT is regarded as one of President Reagan's closest friends. This special personal and professional friendship with the President has enabled him to perform a unique leadership role with his Senate colleagues. Senator LAXALT has often been the informal liaison between the Senate and the White House, and I doubt we will be able to find anyone to step into this role.

Senator LAXALT also leaves behind another leadership role which will be difficult to fill, one with which I am particularly concerned. Sentor LAXALT is the cochairman of the Western Coalition, a bipartisan, informal group of Western Senators. Recently, I was chosen to succeed Senator LAXALT as cochairman, a job which I believe is very important to my State and other Western States. Every region of the Nation has special characteristics and issues, but I would argue that this is especially true in the West. The vast openness of the West, the extensive public lands, and the scarce availability of water are unique to the Western frontiers. These special attributes require an outstanding leader, and Senator LAXALT has been this man.

As Senator LAXALT leaves the Senate, I would like to take this opportunity to thank him for his friendship and leadership. The void he leaves behind will be difficult to fill, and I am certain my colleagues will agree.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR THOMAS EAGLETON

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, it is with a sense of pride and regret that I rise to pay tribute to my dear friend and colleague, TOM EAGLETON. I am proud to have served with him for the past 18 years, and I regret very much that this will come to an end with the close of the 99th Congress.

A deep and abiding interest in education has been with TOM EAGLETON for a long, long time. His father was a prominent member of the St. Louis School Board, and a young TOM EAGLETON frequently accompanied his father to meetings. I understand, in fact, that TOM'S interest in politics may well have begun when he went to those meetings.

When he was Lieutenant Governor of Missouri, TOM EAGLETON chaired the Governor's Task Force on Vocational Education. That task force came up with the recommendations that resulted in the establishment of Missouri's system of areawide vocational-technical schools, a system that prevails even today.

It was only natural, then, that when TOM EAGLETON came to the Senate, he would want to continue his intense and passionate interest in education. His first request as a Member of the Senate was to be assigned to the Subcommittee on Education, Arts, and Humanities. That was also the year that I became chairman, and for the next 15 years we enjoyed one of the best working relationships that I have experienced as a Member of the Senate. When he left the subcommittee in 1985, the loss was immense not only to the subcommittee but to all of education.

His decade and a half of service on the subcommittee was remarkable in its achievements. He was the author of the first basic skills legislation, long before it was fashionable to champion these concerns.

It was Senator EAGLETON's leadership that brought about the reinstatement of the Emergency School Aid Act. This program, which provides critically important Federal assistance to schools undergoing desegregation, had been eliminated in the 1981 budget reconciliation, and it was only through the Herculean efforts of TOM EAGLETON that we got it back.

On a personal note, it was TOM EAGLETON who suggested that the Basic Education Opportunity Grant Program be renamed the Pell Grant Program. That was the effort of a kind and gracious man that I am proud to call my friend and an action for which I shall always be grateful.

This tribute would not be complete without noting also TOM's many contributions in the field of foreign relations. He and I have long shared an interest in the Greece-Cyprus-Turkey relationship. TOM was the most eloquent and forceful opponent of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus in 1974, and he has been a persistently powerful advocate of justice in Cyprus ever since then. I also greatly admired the important contribution that TOM EAGLETON made in the formulation and passage of the war powers resolution, one of the landmark acts of the Congress to reassert its constitutional prerogatives in the area of foreign policy.

For the past 2 years, I have had the great pleasure of serving with TOM EAGLETON on the Foreign Relations Committee. And here, I was particularly appreciative of TOM's leadership in putting together a compromise on the United States-United Kingdom extradition treaty that enabled this controversial treaty to be approved by an overwhelming bipartisan majority. When TOM took up this task the committee was hopelessly deadlocked in its efforts to reconcile antiterrorism concerns with the need to protect individual rights. What had seemed impossible soon became possible, and it would not have happened without TOM EAGLETON.

Mr. President, when this Congress comes to a close, TOM EAGLETON will go home to Missouri not to retire but to continue his interest in education and foreign affairs as a professor at Washington University in St. Louis.

I must add, too, that my wife and I shall particularly miss his lovely Barbara. However, his students will then experience what we have experienced for 18 years. For it is they who will learn next what a rare privilege it is to know TOM EAGLETON. It is they who will have the honor of working with him. They are the lucky ones, and the loss will be ours. For what a joy it has been to call him colleague and friend, and what a better place this Chamber is because he was here.

That Judge Harry E. Claiborne, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, and while serving as a judge of the United States District of Nevada, was and is guilty of misbehavior and of high crimes and misdemeanors in office in a manner and form as follows:

On or about June 15, 1980, Judge Harry E. Claiborne did willfully and knowingly make and subscribe a United States Individual Income Tax Return for the calendar year 1979, which return was verified by a written declaration that the return was made under penalties of perjury; which return was filed with the Internal Revenue Service; and which return Judge Harry E. Claiborne did not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter in that the return reported total income in the amount of $80,227.04 whereas, as he then and there well knew and believed, he received and failed to report substantial income in addition to that stated on the return in violation of section 7206(1) of title 26, United States Code.

The facts set forth in the foregoing paragraph were found beyond a reasonable doubt by a twelve-person jury in the United States District Court for the District of Nevada.

Wherefore, Judge Harry E. Claiborne was and is guilty of misbehavior and was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor and, by such conduct, warrants impeachment and trial and removal from office.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. I will again admonish the galleries that when the vote is announced there will be no expression of approval or disapproval.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this Article of Impeachment, 89 Senators having voted guilty, 8 Senators having voted not guilty, 1 voting present, two-thirds of the Members present having voted guilty, the Senate adjudges that the respondent, Harry E. Claiborne, is guilty as charged in this Article.

The Chair directs judgment to be entered in accordance with the vote of the Senate, as follows:

The Senate having tried Harry E. Claiborne, U.S. district judge for the District of Nevada, upon four Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Representatives, and two-thirds of the Senators present having found him guilty of the charges contained in the first, second, and fourth Articles of Impeachment, it is, therefore, ordered and adjudged that the said Harry E. Claiborne be, and he is hereby removed from office.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an order to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, that the Secretary be directed to communicate to the President of the United States and to the House of Representatives the order and judgment of the Senate in the case of Harry E. Claiborne, and transmit a certified copy of same to each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be entered and adjudged.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to explain my own votes on the four Articles of Impeachment which have been presented by the House of Representatives against Judge Harry E. Claiborne.

Let me start by putting this proceeding in context as I understand it. This is the first time in history that the U.S. Senate has been asked to try the impeachment of a public official who has already been convicted of a felony in the Federal courts and who is serving time in a Federal penitentiary for that conviction. Judge Claiborne's conviction is final in the sense that all normal appeals from the conviction have been denied.

The charges being brought against Judge Claiborne in this impeachment trial are identical to the charges upon which he was convicted by a jury in the Federal District Court of Nevada.

A threshold question which we in the Senate need to decide is "What is the Senate's proper role in this proceeding?" In most cases, the Constitution clearly contemplates that the Senate shall sit as a trier of fact to determine whether the charged individual is guilty of "high crimes and misdemeanors," and therefore should be removed from office. It is clear to me that article I: section III, clauses 6 and 7 of the Constitution, which provides that the Senate shall have the "sole power to trial impeachments," did not contemplate a situation where the person charged would have already been convicted of a felony.

Since this case presents us with Articles of Impeachment based on the same underlying facts which supported a jury conviction for a felony, I believe we are not required to once again try those facts and make an independent determination as to those facts. Clearly we have the authority to do so if we believe the criminal proceeding in the courts was so flawed as to justify it, but we are not in any way bound by the Constitution to independently once again try again try the same factual issues.

In this case, the Senate has chosen to use the procedure under rule 11 of the Rules of the Senate to establish a committee to take testimony and prepare a record of the case to be presented to the full Senate. I have served on that committee and believe the committee did its work in a responsible and fair manner. And in light of my own opinion that the Senate is not required to try the underlying facts in a case such as this where a previous criminal conviction on those facts has been obtained, I believe the Senate action in delegating its responsibility to a special committee was appropriate and met all constitutional requirements imposed upon the Senate.

However, if this were not a case in which factual determinations underlying the Articles of Impeachment had earlier been established in a court, I would have serious doubts about the adequacy of the hearing which we in the full Senate have given to this matter in order to carry out the Senate's responsibilities under the Constitution.

Mr. President, this brings me to a discussion of the four Articles of Impeachment. The House of Representatives has presented its case to the Senate on two distinct theories. First, they have argued that the Senate should make an independent finding that Judge Claiborne willfully and knowingly filed tax returns for the years 1979 and 1980 which he did not believe to be accurate and true and that that willfull filing of false tax returns should be established by the Senate as constituting high crimes and misdemeanors justifying his removal from office. This theory is contained in Articles I, II, and IV of the Articles of Impeachment.

The second and alternative theory put forward by the House of Representatives is contained in Article III and essentially is a request that the Senate accept the judgment of conviction which was entered against Judge Claiborne for violation of section 7206(1) of title 26 of the United States Code as an adequate basis for his removal from office. As I understand this second theory, which is contained in Article III, a conviction by the Senate under this theory would not require an independent determination by the Senate as to the underlying facts supporting the conviction.

Let me discuss briefly my own view as to what has been presented under each of the two separate theories.

For the Senate to convict on Articles I, II, and IV, I believe the Senate would have to make an independent detertmination as to the state of mind of Judge Claiborne when he delivered information to his accountants in the spring of 1980 and 1981—for tax years 1979 and 1980—and when those returns were filed. To make that type of independent determination of his state of mind, I believe it would be essential to hear witnesses and judge the credibility of those witnesses. For the Senate to convict on Articles I, II, and IV, the Senate must conduct itself as a factfinding body and cannot delegate that responsibility to a special committee. In my opinion, putting the record of evidence presented to the committee into the possession of all Senators is not an adequate substitute for Senators hearing the witnesses present their case. At the very least, I believe it would be necessary for the Senate to permit the respondent, Judge Claiborne, to testify as a witness in response to the specific allegations of fact underlying these charges.

The Senator from Maine has argued that Judge Claiborne had a full hour to present his side of the case before the Senate and therefore any constitutional requirement has been fulfilled. In my view, this analysis is wrong. Judge Claiborne's presentation to the full Senate was in the nature of part of a closing statement. It was a plea for the Senate to hear the witnesses in this case and the fact that he did not adequately refute specific charges and specific evidence presented against him in the proceeding before the Senate committee or presented against him in the court case is not a waiver of by him of his right to testify before the Senate and defend himself against those charges.

In short, as to Articles I, II, and IV of the Articles of Impeachment, I believe the Senate has failed to give Judge Claiborne an adequate hearing to justify a finding that he willfully and knowingly filed false tax returns for the years 1979 and 1980. It may be impractical in the closing days of a legislative session to contemplate a week or more of trial presentation to the U.S. Senate, but absent that kind of hearing, I do not believe the Senate can hold itself out as having been a "trier of fact" as we would be required to be under Articles I, II, and IV.

Article III of the Articles of Impeachment does not require the Senate to make an independent factual determination about the willfulness with which the judge acted in 1980 and 1981. This article argues that the Senate should accept the felony conviction of Judge Claiborne in the Federal courts as an adequate basis for a conviction here which then removes him from office. Mr. President, I will vote to convict on Article III because I believe this is a legally sound and logical course for the Senate to follow.

Mr. President, if we do not go forward with a conviction in this case, we have the anomaly of leaving a Federal district judge in office while he also remains in the Federal penitentiary, has been stripped of his right to vote and continues to be labeled a felon under the criminal laws of this country. To my mind, that is an unacceptable result in this particular case that has been presented.

Mr. President, one other issue needs to be addressed as part of this impeachment and that is the allegations of misconduct and abusive targeting by Federal prosecutors. Judge Claiborne's allegations in this regard are serious and it is clear from the debate which has taken place here in the Senate that many members are concerned about not only the evidence of overreaching by the Government in this case but other instances of similar overreaching. I do not believe that these allegations, even if true, would justify the Senate in failing to convict. However, I do believe that the Senate, in its oversight responsibility as part of the legislative branch of our Federal Government, should direct the Judiciary Committee to hold oversight hearings on this issue and to determine whether legislative action to deal with this problem is required.

In conclusion, Mr. President, we have not given the respondent an adequate hearing to support a conviction on Articles I, II, and IV. A vote of guilty on each of those Articles requires an independent determination as to Judge Claiborne's state of mind and in order to make that determination we need to hear testimony, not have a select few hear testimony, but actually have the Senate hear testimony. Accordingly, I will vote "no" on those three Articles. I believe a decision to remove the respondent on the basis of Article III is appropriate and I will vote to do so.

THE CLAIBORNE TRIAL

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senate conducted earlier today a trial because the Constitution clearly distinguishes between criminal and impeachment proceedings. Article I, section 3, commits criminal processes to the judiciary and impeachments to the Congress. As a separated power, Congress had the responsibility to make an independent assessment of whether Judge Claiborne had done anything to warrant removal from office. The separation of criminal and impeachment proceedings, in my mind, precludes this body from merely deferring to the existence of a criminal conviction. We have the duty to reach our own independent conclusion about the facts which gave rise to these charges.

REASONABLE DOUBT STANDARD

Each of the four counts of impeachment asserted that this body ought to convict Judge Claiborne because he willfully filed fraudulent tax returns which caused his conviction in a court of law. In other words, the reason the Senate was asked to convict is that a court found beyond a reasonable doubt that the judge willfully underreported his income. This is the charge that the Senate reviewed. It was obligated to ask itself whether, beyond a reasonable doubt, the judge purposefully and wittingly filed a false return. I contended that if the Senate found that he did, then it had to decide that he was properly convicted in court and it had to give him the same verdict on the question of removal. On the other hand, I argued, if there remains a reasonable doubt about his intentions, then the Senate was obligated to conclude that he should not have been convicted in court and that he should not have been impeached and that he should not have been convicted by the Senate. Relying as they did on the criminal conviction, the House Articles of Impeachment required the Senate to ascertain whether, beyond a reasonable doubt, Judge Claiborne intentionally filed a false return.

THE CRIMINAL CONVICTION

Claiborne was charged and convicted under the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. 7206(1), which reads:

> Any person who * * * willfully makes and subscribes any return, statement, or other document, which contains or is verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury, and which he does not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter * * * shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $100,000 ($500,000 in the case of a corporation), or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

Upon his conviction on two counts covering 1979 and 1980, Claiborne was sentenced to 2 years of imprisonment for each violation, to be served concurrently, and was fined $5,000 for each violation.

WILLFULNESS

All of the issues before the Senate today were reducible to one simple question: Did Judge Harry Claiborne willfully file a false tax return? Both Judge Claiborne and the House agreed that the 1979 and 1980 tax returns fail to report taxable income. The issue before the Nevada District Court and the Senate today was whether that underreporting was "willful."

The Supreme Court, in United States v. Pomponio, 429 U.S. 10 (1976) stated that the term "willfully" in the Tax Code requires more than a showing of carelessness or negligence; it requires proof of an intentional violation of a known legal duty. In United States v. Bishop, 412 U.S. 346 (1973), the Supreme Court stated:

> Degrees of negligence given rise in the tax system to civil penalties * * * The Court's consistent interpretation of the word "willfully" to require an element of mens rea implement the pervasive intent of Congress to construct penalties that separate the purposeful tax violation from the well-meaning, * * * mass of taxpayers. Id at 360-361.

The import of these cases is that willfulness is the intentional, deliberate, voluntary, or witting violation of a know legal obligation.

Certainly Judge Claiborne knew the duty to file an accurate and complete tax return. It is far from clear from the evidence presented either in trial or during the impeachment proceedings that Judge Claiborne deliberately or intentionally or wittingly or purposefully tried to escape the obligation of every taxpayer. To the contrary, there is much to indicate that Judge Claiborne's deliberate actions were an attempt to file an accurate and complete return. According to the judge and much corroborating evidence, miscommunications with accountants and mistakes by those accountants caused errors in the judge's tax returns, or which he was aware until the criminal investigation was already underway. If the judge is correct, the voluminous evidence at most shows that he was negligent in failing to detect his accountant's errors. This, however, would not be willfulness. It would not be deliberate and witting tax evasion. It would be simple negligence, which as the Supreme Court's Bishop case stated, would be corrected by a civil proceeding, not a criminal action.

Because the pivotal issue in this case is the state-of-mind issue, I examined extensively the concept of willfulness. In that connection, I adopted the formulation of that concept found in the House brief. As the House brief concedes, there is no direct evidence of willfulness in this case. There is no letter from the judge to Watson or Wright instructing them to falsify income or conspiring with them to hide some other material fact. No direct evidence of willfulness is found in the records of this case in the courts or before Congress.

In the absence of direct evidence, the House was correct to note that "Willfulness may be inferred by the trier of fact from all the facts and circumstances of the attempted understatement of tax." U.S. v. Conforte, 624 F.2d 869, 875 (9th Cir. 1980). The House post-trial brief then detailed several circumstances that may indicate a willful filing of a fraudulent return. These include, for instance, a consistent pattern of underreporting, the magnitude of the error, a sudden change in accountants, and so forth. I examined the evidence of this trial in each of these categories of circumstantial proof to ascertain if they indicate, beyond a reasonable doubt, willfulness.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL WILLFULNESS EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT

The House brief purports to show sufficient circumstantial evidence of willfulness. I examined each of these bits of circumstantial evidence of willfulness. The Seante had the duty to ask itself if this evidence leaves any reasonable doubts about Judge Claiborne's state of mind. To the extent that none of them establish beyond a reasonable doubt Judge Claiborne's willfulness, the Senate should not, in my opinion, have convicted.

The first of these is the consistent pattern of underreporting. Judge Claiborne did report fully and accurately his income in both 1979 and 1980. Let's look first at the evidence concerning the 1979 tax return. In his April 11 letter to his accountant, Mr. Wright, the judge gave an accurate accounting of his legal fee income. That letter was handwritten by Judge Claiborne and contained the full and correct amount he had earned in fees, $41,073. Wright does not remember receiving the letter, but the judge's secretary remembers delivering it, the judge saw the letter on Wright's desk when he visited Wright's office later that afternoon, Wright's employee—Ken Swanson—saw the judge's secretary in Wright's office on April 11, and the judge's tax return accurately reflects the sale of his airplane which was reported to Wright in the April 11 letter. In addition, on the final day of the Senate impeachment proceedings, an affidavit was filed by a former secretary in Mr. Wright's office attesting that she had received the letter from the judge's secretary, Judy Ahlstrom, on April 11, 1979. This enormous body of evidence that the April 11 letter was received includes verification from Wright himself in the form of his recordkeeping. He accurately notes that he received and filed the $8,000 check which accompanied the April 11 letter. The April 11 letter is a full and fair accounting of the judge's 1979 tax liability. The evidence shows that the judge fully and fairly reported his 1979 income.

Wright maintains that the judge sent him a figure of only $22,622 in legal fees. This is also naturally and believably explained. On April 11, Judge Claiborne had sent the letter to Wright disclosing his full fee income. On May 1, nearly 3 weeks later, the judge was engaged in a phone conversation with Mr. Wright. Mr. Wright was asking the judge several questions about his tax return. At one point Mr. Wright was searching for the judge's legal fee income. Wright then purported to find the amount and declared it to be $22,600. Because he had sent the accurate figure to Wright by letter a few weeks earlier, the judge naturally assumed that Wright has found the amount declared in the April 11 letter. The judge wrote that amount on his worksheet. Later Wright used that same worksheet as the judge's declaration of his income. This is a tragic mistake. It is a classic instance of miscommunication. It is not, however, a crafty plan to defraud the taxpayer.

In 1980, the judge also reported all of his income to his accountant. Judge Claiborne wrote down personally his legal fee income of $88,500 on a yellow legal pad and gave it to Watson. Charlotte Travaglia, the employee of Watson who did the work on the judge's 1980 return, testified that the judge made a full disclosure of his income. Although the House contended that the $88,000 never appears on the tax return, evidence presented by Travaglia and others, however, establishes that the only way that the 1980 return could have arrived, on an erroneous Watson theory, at a figure for long-term capital loss in the sale of his law business was by including the $88,000 as a capital gain to be offset against capital losses. It was improperly treated as a capital gain by Watson, but Judge Claiborne had fully and fairly reported his 1980 income.

On the point of whether this alleged underreporting was a consistent activity, the House made much of the fact that these errors occurred in 2 successive years. An examination of the evidence, however, offers a plausible explanation. After all, Judge Claiborne had only recently taken his position on the bench. He was still adjusting to new financial arrangements, new work schedules, new responsibilities, new demands on his time and talents. It was a time of turmoil and change in his life. He was selling his residence and purchasing another. He was turning over his law firm to his former partners and liquidating his assets in that business. These drastic changes were also an important reason that he elected to switch accountants. With changes of this magnitude underway in his life, it is not wholly unexpected that miscommunications, misperceptions, and mistakes might occur in these 2 years.

Another factor contributing to these errors is Judge Claiborne's reluctance to devote precious time to his financial dealings. The evidence shows that he once left several tens of thousands of dollars in a safety deposit box where it drew no interest for months. Money was not uppermost in the judge's mind. He hired accountants to relieve him of this unsavory part of his business life. In any event, because the judge did in fact disclose his income in each of the years in question, the fact that errors might have occurred in 2 years of turmoil still has no criminal implications.

In sum, Judge Claiborne did not underreport his income—consistently or otherwise.

The next circumstantial point made by the House concerns the magnitude of the error. The $18,700 shortfall in his 1979 return was not due to any willful act on Judge Claiborne's part. He thought the income he disclosed on April 11 was part of the return. The judge did not actually review the 1979 tax return before it was filed. On May 2, 1980, he was leaving town to take an assigned case in another jurisdiction. Fearing that he might not return before the filing deadline, the judge went to Wright's office and signed a return in blank. He signed the return in blank because he was going out of town on assignment. He certainly expected that it would contain income which he had reported to his accountant in an earlier hand-written and hand-delivered letter.

Wright's testimony on this point is that he had changed his practice of allowing tax returns to be signed in blank. It is nonetheless uncontroverted that early in his career Wright had permitted tax returns to be signed in blank. Judge Caliborne had been associated with Wright for 30 years. The recent changes in practice may not have been binding on a longstanding customer like Judge Claiborne who testifies persuasively that he signed the form in blank sometime on May 2.

In 1980, Judge Claiborne reported to Watson the $88,500 in income on the now-famous "yellow sheets." Watson told the judge that the income was reflected in the schedule D form concerning capital gains because it was part of the sale of the law business. Watson pointed out that this method had been checked by the CPA who did the actual work on the judge's tax return and further checked with the IRS.

The 1980 tax return was a mess. It contained numerous blatant errors. It did not even credit Judge Claiborne with the $22,000 he had already paid in estimated taxes for that same tax year. It was filled out in pencil and had arrows drawn from one part of the return to others. If the judge had intended to defraud, he certainly would have been more cunning. If Judge Claiborne had intended to defraud, he certainly would not have filed a return full of red flags pointing to its likely deficiencies.

Another aspect of the circumstantial evidence of willfulness discussed the disclosure of summary data only. By this the House meant to suggest that Judge Claiborne withheld from Wright or Watson information that they needed to file a complete return. If Judge Claiborne did write and cause to be delivered the April 11 letter, however, he withheld nothing. He had reported all of his income to Mr. Wright. His business practices had necessarily changed in 1978 when he began his service on the bench. For this reason, he no longer had deposits mailed directly to Mr. Wright. This was because he was no longer paid by clients in the same manner. He did not manage his affairs in the same manner he had when he was managing a law business. Instead some lingering payments came sporadically from his former partners and these the judge often cashed for his living expenses or other needs. Nothing was hidden. The April 11 letter is evidence of his care to report all income.

The same is true in 1980. Judge Claiborne reported his income to Mr. Watson who in turn passed it on to Ms. Travaglia. Nothing was hidden. Nothing was withheld. There is no evidence that Judge Claiborne refused to share all relevant information with his accountants in 1979 and 1980.

The fourth aspect of circumstantial evidence of willfulness was the allegedly sudden change of accountants. Judge Claiborne had several good reasons for changing accountants. In the first place, he no longer was managing a law business. He had no need of the wide range of services provided by Wright. Moreover Wright had treated the judge coldly in some of their recent conversations. This may well have been because Mr. Wright had moved on to a different clientele after 30 years in the business. He may have wished that he was receiving more compensation for his services. The reason that Judge Claiborne and his accountant began drifting apart are not fully stated. It is clear, however, that the judge perceived that his accountant was no longer as interested in his account as he had been in the past.

Mr. Watson, on the other hand, came highly recommended by the judge's wife and had impressed the judge on the one occasion he had to observe his work. Watson was very interested in Judge Claiborne's account. He forthrightly solicited Judge Claiborne's business with the promise that he might be able to save him money on taxes in a legitimate manner. Judge Claiborne was selling his large home and Watson specifically mentioned in his letter a plan to treat that transaction favorably. In light of the distance between the judge and his former accountant, this offer must have been very attractive.

The fourth category of circumstantial evidence of willfulness involved purportedly surreptitious cash transactions. Judge Claiborne was buying and selling at the time of these events two places of residence, some fine riding horses, and was making extensive home improvements. Moreover, he was accustomed to a high standard of living. He consumed cash. Accordingly he cashed his checks at the casinos where he often had lunch or breakfast. These casinos often serve as substitute banks for Nevada residents. There was nothing surreptitious about these dealings. He often deposited the surplus amounts in his bank account. The evidence shows as well that the judge was accustomed to carrying large amounts of cash.

Another aspect of the circumstantial evidence focused on background of the accused. The House brief attempted to attribute great significance to the judge's expertise in tax matters. Although a fine judge, Harry Claiborne is no tax expert. During his years at the bar, he repeatedly referred tax cases to other attorneys and dealt only with the criminal procedure aspects of those cases. He relied on Wright for 30 years and then on Watson to do his tax preparation.

As a matter of law, reliance on a tax accountant is justified if the judge fully disclosed all pertinent facts and if his reliance was in good faith. In this case, the judge had fully disclosed his income in both 1979 and 1980. He had reason to rely in good faith on Wright because Wright had done his taxes for 30 years without a hitch. He had a reason to rely in good faith on Watson because Watson came highly recommended by his wife and seemed to handle business competently.

A final aspect of the circumstances cited by the House brief involved the question of whether the judge turned a blind eye to the problems with his returns. With respect to 1979, it would be difficult to make that claim because the judge signed the return in blank. He relied fully on his accountant to correctly record the income reported by the April 11 letter. It certainly cannot be maintained that the judge deliberately arranged his schedule to be out of town so that he would have an excuse to sign a fraudulent return in blank. In the first place, he had no idea it would be fraudulent. In the second place, his out-of-town assignment was dictated by his judicial superiors. It was out of his control.

With respect to 1980, the House contended that the judge may have voluntarily kept himself ignorant of the gross errors it contained. From Judge Claiborne's perspective, he had already reported all of his income. He felt no need to double check the work of someone he had paid well to do his taxes. The evidence shows that Charlotte Travaglia, the employee who actually did the work on the judge's return, sought some advice from Watson about the treatment of some items. She placed the incomplete return on Watson's desk and had no further contact with it. A secretary in Watson's office saw the return and called the judge to come sign it. Judge Claiborne went to Watson's office on a lunch break when time was undoubtedly short. He thumbed through the return and signed it.

A few days later, Watson was in the judge's office with a bill for his services. At that time, the judge did question the 1980 return, but Watson assured him that he had checked the theory of the return with IRS agents who agreed with the figures on schedule D. The judge was satisfied "as long as you can support it," in the words he used with Watson at that time. Judge Claiborne pointed out why he wanted it clearly supported by saying to Watson: "* * * I don't want any trouble with the IRS because I got all the trouble with the FBI that I can handle right now." This is an important insight into the judge's state of mind. He knew in 1980 that the FBI was angry with him and perhaps even looking for some way to hang his picture on their trophy wall. In that contentious state of affairs, it is simply inconceivable that Judge Claiborne would attempts to escape tax liability. Not even a 4-year-old attempts to raid the cookie jar when he knows he is being watched.

The sloppiness of the 1980 return is also significant. It is even more unlikely that in this time of tension Judge Claiborne would file a fraudulent return that begs for examination and audit. This is the equivalent of the judge shouting at the top of his lungs that he intends to raid the cookie jar and then proceeding to attempt the feat under his parent's noses.

SUMMARY ON INTENT

Each of the primary circumstantial factors cited by the House brief should not have been dispositive of this case. The House contended that the concurrence of these factors somehow cumulatively showed guilt, but if there is a reasonable doubt as to each of these factors, there must also be reasonable doubt as to their sum total.

NEGLIGENCE, NOT WILLFULNESS

With even this quick overview of the facts of this case in mind, it is easy to find extensive evidence of negligence. Willfulness—that intentional, witting, purposeful, crafty design—is another matter. If the evidence justifies a finding of negligence without willfulness, that would not justify a criminal conviction. In the absence of a criminal conviction, the House may not have urged impeachment. Indeed each of the Articles of Impeachment presupposed a criminal conviction and should not have been effective if the judge had been found to be only negligent. The Senate had to look behind the conviction to see if the judge had done anything that warranted the conviction the House contended as its sole basis for impeachment. Without the conviction, the judge had perhaps miscalculated taxes—a civil matter—which would not have warranted discipline any more than an addition mistake on a tax return.

ETHICS DISCLOSURE

Another important fact demonstrates that the judge was not deliberately attempting to violate the law. He fully disclosed his 1980 income on his ethics report. Why would he deliberately evade taxes and then tell the Government the facts that disclose his fraud in another filing? This is incredible. If Judge Claiborne was acting with a criminal state of mind, it is inexplicable that he would lie on one Government filing and confess his guilt on another. The judge simply did not act willfully.

With regard to the 1979 ethics report, Judge Claiborne did fail to report some of his income. That is very understandable in light of the totality of the facts. The judge simply grabbed his tax worksheet—the one with Mr. Wright's erroneous suppositions about his 1979 income—when he filled out his ethics report.

VENDETTA

On the point of the Government's role in trying to "bag the judge," I would note that we all understand that law enforcement officers may not stoop to the level of a criminal in order to apprehend criminals. The revered Justice Brandeis gave us an excellent summary of the consequences of lawless law enforcement.

In a Government of laws, existence of a Government will be imperiled if it fails to observe the law scrupulously. Our Government is the potent, the omnipresent teacher. For good or ill, it teaches the whole people by its example. Crime is contagious.

If the Government becomes a lawbreaker, it breeds contempt for law; it invites anarchy. To declare that in the administration of criminal law the end justifies the means—to declare that the Government may commit crimes in order to secure the conviction of a private citizen—would bring terrible retribution. Olmstead v. U.S., 277 438 (1928).

In the case of Harry Claiborne, we have not had the opportunity to exhaustively examine the allegations of Government misconduct. That is regrettable. In any event, this body ought to guard against Government overreaching with great care. Where there is even a spectre of this dangerous abuse, we should carefully examine the consequences of that intrusive conduct. This body, too, has the responsibility to stamp out law enforcement abuses. This must not be left to the judiciary.

CONCLUSION

In summary, I do not think that this body can assert that Harry Claiborne purposefully, intentionally, wittingly—willfully—filed a false return. If he had intended to violate the law, he would not have done it so poorly. Neither the 1979 nor the 1980 return shows any evidence of cunning or guile. They contain mistakes discernible by a grade school observer. The judge relied too heavily on unreliable accountants. The judge was negligent in failing to check his accountant's errors. Frankly if one of the Articles of Impeachment had cited the judge's gross negligence and disregard, I would have voted to impeach. The House Articles, however, are all based on the criminal conviction. The criminal conviction is only valid if Judge Claiborne acted willfully. For the reasons I have cited, I could not find sufficient evidence of willfulness.

I listened very carefully to every aspect of the testimony before the Impeachment Committee. I compared each witness' statements to the assertions made by other witnesses. In the long run, I found judge Claiborne to be a credible witness. I believed him. Moreover the evidence in this case supported the judge's explanations of the circumstances that led to his indictment and conviction. Giving the judge the benefit of the doubt, as I believe we are obligated to do when his life's work and reputation are at stake, the evidence did not support a finding of willfulness. The evidence clearly showed that the judge had been grossly negligent and had carelessly disregarded his obligations as a taxpayer. He did not, however, conspire or craftily design a plan to defraud the Government. In the absence of willfullness, beyond a reasonable doubt, he should not have been convicted, should not have been impeached, and, in my opinion, should not have been removed from office. This was why I voted not guilty on each of the Articles of Impeachment.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HARRY CLAIBORNE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the Senate today performed an extremely unpleasant duty. We have impeached a Federal judge for only the fifth time in our history. The last previous impeachment was in 1936—50 years ago.

I listened carefully to the distinguished House managers and Judge Claiborne's representatives on the Senate floor. I have reviewed the transcripts of the committee proceedings. I have discussed the issues raised by the prosecution and the defense at length with my colleagues in our closed sessions. I believe the evidence permits only one conclusion: That Judge Claiborne is guilty as charged in the four Articles of Impeachment, and I, therefore, voted in favor of all four Articles.

Article III of the four Articles of Impeachment, in my view, states a kind of "per se" case for impeachment. Essentially, that Article makes the argument that Judge Clai-borne should be impeached because he was tried and found guilty in Federal court by a 12-person jury of two felony counts of filing false tax returns. In my own State of Illinois, the simple fact of his conviction for some crimes would automatically remove him from office.

Frankly, I find it unconscionable that a person serving a 2-year prison sentence should be able to continue to receive his judicial salary. Judge Claiborne had all the rights the American system of justice gives to anyone accused of a crime. He had the right to a trial by jury. Like any other defendant, he could not be convicted unless the jury found him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The jury in Judge Claiborne's case did find him guilty. He had the right, and exercised the right, to appeal his case. His appeal was heard by the court of appeals and turned down. The Supreme Court found no reason to overturn the jury verdict.

I think the Federal judiciary is no place for convicted felons, and that the third Article of Impeachment stated a sufficient case for impeachment. However, it is important for all of us to remember that the impeachment process is not part of our judicial system. Under the Constitution, the impeachment process is totally separate from and independent of ordinary judicial processes. The Senate had a responsibility to look behind the jury verdict and to make its own determination as to whether Judge Claiborne, as Judge Claiborne's defense phrased it, "willfully and knowingly made a false statement" on his 1979 and 1980 tax returns in violation of section 7206(1) of the United States Code.

I believe the Senate has made a full, fair, and independent evaluation of the charges. I will not take the time of my colleagues to recite the abundant evidence that convinces me that he is guilty. Let me simply say that I am convinced that Judge Claiborne willfully and knowingly failed to report almost half of the $41,072.93 he received in fee income in 1979. I am also convinced that Judge Claiborne knowingly and willfully failed to report $87,912 in fee income in 1980, and that he failed to report a taxable gain of $214,812 on the sale of his home, with the result that he reported taxes owed of only $1,101 for that year—about 1.1 percent of the $97,864 he actually owed.

Finally, Mr. President, I must say that I share the conclusions stated in the fourth Article of Impeachment. I believe his deliberate attempt to avoid paying his lawful tax obligations betrayed the trust of the people of the United States. His actions do reduce confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and do bring disrepute on the Federal courts and the administration of justice by the courts. The only way to restore that trust and confidence was for the Senate to take the action that it did take—to impeach Judge Claiborne and remove him from office.

IMPEACHMENT TRIAL OF JUDGE HARRY E. CLAIBORNE

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the historical proceedings involving the trial of Judge Harry E. Claiborne are noteworthy not only because they are the first such proceedings to be held since the impeachment trial of Judge Ritter in 1936, but also because, for the first time, the initial evidence received in the trial was taken by a committee, and not by the full Senate.

Yesterday, the Senate conducted a rollcall vote on Judge Claiborne's contention that this process was unconstitutional, and constituted a denial of his right to a "full and fair" trial. The distinguished majority leader placed before the Senate the question: "Yes or no—the Senate should not hear additional witnesses in the case." The purpose behind this question was to determine whether or not the Senate should reopen the case and conduct a more extensive trial. The vote on the motion was yeas 61, nays 32, thereby obviating the need to continue the trial, and allowing the Senate to proceed to consideration of the four Articles of Impeachment.

I voted in favor of precluding further witnesses to be heard in this matter. A full 7-day trial was held before the Senate Impeachment Committee, comprised of 12 of my able colleagues. A trial transcript consisting of thousands of pages was made available by this committee. A series of preliminary motions made by Judge Claiborne were referred to the full Senate for consideration, and determination.

In my opinion, Judge Claiborne has been accorded a full and fair proceeding. It should be noted, that U.S. District Court Judge Harold H. Greene yesterday ruled that the committee procedure was constitutional.

Article I, section 3 of the Constitution declares that the Senate has the sole power to try all impeachments. The Constitution does not dictate the manner in which the trial shall be conducted, apart from its command that "no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present." Article I, section 3. The Senate thus has the authority to fashion rules that govern the admissibility of evidence, the scope of the proceeding, and the manner, form, and location in which evidence will be received. Therefore, Senate Impeachment Rule XI, providing for evidence to be received by a committee of Senators, falls within the discretion of the Senate's power to conduct an impeachment trial.

As to the issue of Judge Claiborne's guilt, I have been convinced, on the basis of the evidence adduced by the House managers, that Judge Claiborne should be convicted on three of the four Articles of Impeachment. The House established that Judge Claiborne received and negotiated checks representing income received in 1979 and 1980 that was not reported on his income tax returns. This was set forth in prior admissions under oath by Judge Claiborne, through prior sworn testimony of witnesses, and by live testimony of a number of those same witnesses.

This evidence establishes that Judge Claiborne willfully and knowingly made false statements on his 1979 and 1980 returns in violation of title 26, section 7206(1) of the United States Code. Articles I and II of Impeachment. The testimony and written documentation depicts the changed behavior of Judge Claiborne—cashing fee income checks at local casinos, rather than at the bank which he had been utilizing for years, changing accountants to prepare tax returns despite a 30-year relationship with one accountant, Mr. Joseph C. Wright, and dealing in large amounts of cash. The defense, rather than succeeding in rebutting this evidence, concentrated on developing a picture of judicial and prosecutorial misconduct against Judge Claiborne. Although such allegations are indeed serious, and have been examined by this body, they are not determinative on the issue of guilt or innocence in this case.

As to Article III, I do not believe that that is a sufficient basis for impeachment. In my opinion, the Senate has a duty to make an independent determination of the underlying facts. That has been done on Articles I, II, and IV. The Senate should not merely accept the judgment of the U.S. district court in which Judge Claiborne was tried and convicted. Accordingly, I do not believe that Article III establishes in and of itself a basis of impeachment.

As to Articles I, II, and IV the evidence establishes that Judge Claiborne has betrayed the trust of the people of the United States, reduced confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, and thereby brought disrepute on the Federal courts and the administration of justice. Such conduct by a Federal judge—one who should warrant respect from the American people—is particularly heinous. Our citizens have the right to expect and even demand proper conduct on the part of public officials, whether they be elected or appointed. As Judge Claiborne's case has emphasized, Federal judges are unique in that once convicted even by the trial court system of illegal conduct, the people may not simply vote them out of office if they so choose, assuming that the party refused to resign. Instead, a judge reluctant to relinquish his office must be subject to the impeachment procedures established by the Constitution.

The full gamut of those procedures has now been exhausted. Judge Claiborne has had his day in court, before the House, and before the Senate. It is time for him now to become an ordinary U.S. citizen, convicted of a felony offense, who must serve his remaining time in prison, without the reward of believing that he can then return to his bench and resume life as before. Judge Claiborne must pay for the offenses he committed, and can no longer assume the distinguished mantle of a Federal judge.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, adjourn sine die.

(Thereupon, at 4:13 p.m., the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, adjourned sine die.)

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Democratic leader is recognized.

The Senate will come to order.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate? There is further business, and there is going to be at least one rollcall vote.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I advise my colleagues that there will be one vote that counts for six. It will take place immediately.

TREATIES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider the following treaties on the executive calendar: Executive Calendar Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMM). Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection. These treaties have been cleared on this side by all Members, and we are ready to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Members will clear the well. The Senator will withhold until the well is cleared and the Senate is in order.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that the treaties be advanced through the various parliamentary stages, up to and including the presentation of the resolutions of ratification, and all committee reported reservations and the two reservations introduced by Senator

LUGAR, which appear in the September 25 RECORD, be considered agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I further ask unanimous consent that a vote occur on the resolutions of ratification immediately upon reporting by the clerk, and that one vote count as six votes, and that it be in order now to request the yeas and nays, with one show of seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the Senate will shortly vote on six treaties. Each one of these six has been carefully reviewed by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. In each case, the committee unanimously recommended that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification.

Five of the six relate to private law treaties. By this, I mean these treaties govern relations between individuals and companies located in different countries. These five are:

Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction,

U.N. Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods,

Inter-American Convention on Commercial Arbitration,

Inter-American Convention on Letters Rogatory, and Request for Advice and Consent to Withdrawal of a Reservation to the 1975 Patent Cooperation Treaty.

Each one of these treaties has been endorsed by the American Bar Association and by other associations concerned with private international law. I know of no opposition to any of them.

Mr. President, through an oversight, two reservations to the Inter-American Convention on Letters Rogatory and one to the U.N. Convention on the International Sale of Goods were not included in the resolutions of ratification to accompany these conventions. These reservations were recommended by the Department of State in the transmittal letters accompanying the conventions. I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at the end of my statement.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, of the five, the Hague Convention on Child Abduction merits special attention. This convention addresses the problems created when children are wrongfully removed or retained abroad in connection with parental custody disputes. It requires that these children be promptly returned to the country of their habitual residence upon application of the left-behind parent, subject only to express conditions and narrow exceptions.

The convention will help in resolving what is often a painful and difficult problem. It has been endorsed by the American Bar Association, the American Public Welfare Association, the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children, Vanished Children's Alliance, Children's Rights of Pennsylvania, the Kevin Collins Foundation for Missing Children and other groups concerned with missing children.

In addition, the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] together with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP], the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] has strongly supported the convention. Their efforts in bringing the convention to the floor are deeply appreciated. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the four Senators be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the sixth treaty we will vote on is the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance. This convention will provide a framework for promoting the conservation of wetlands through international cooperation. It is supported by a variety of State agencies and environmental organizations including the Southeastern Association of Fish & Wildlife Agencies, the Natural Resources Defense Council and the Department of Natural Resources of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. President, Dr. Faith Campbell of the Natural Resources Defense Council recently wrote me explaining the importance of this convention. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of Dr. Campbell's letter appear in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. It points out quite well the reasons for approving the convention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[See exhibit 3.]

Mr. LUGAR. In sum, Mr. President, each of these six treaties is worthy of Senate consent to ratification. I urge my colleagues to support them.

EXHIBIT NO. 2

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 9, 1986.

Hon. RICHARD G. LUGAR,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As this session gets under way, it is our strong hope that as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations you will schedule prompt action on the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, which the President transmitted to the Senate for advice and consent to ratification on October 30, 1985. The Convention has already been ratified by France, Switzerland, Portugal and nearly all of Canada's Provinces. The United Kingdom is presently working toward ratification.

We have long been concerned with the problem of parental kidnapping—the wrongful removal or retention of a child by one of its parents. An attorney on the staff of Senator Wallop joined the U.S. delegation as Congressional Observer at the final negotiations of the Convention in October, 1980. The United States signed the Convention in December, 1981.

The Convention establishes an administrative and a judicial mechanism to bring about the prompt return of children who have been abducted from, or retained outside of, their country of habitual residence. Each country that becomes party to the Convention would establish a Central Authority to process applications from aggrieved parents for the return of their abducted children. Where a voluntary return could not be achieved, the Convention would give the aggrieved parent the right to seek the child's return in court. The court would be under a treaty obligation to order the child promptly returned unless one of the few exceptions to the return obligation set forth in the Convention was found to apply.

The object of the Convention is to restore an abducted child to his or her home country as soon after an abduction as possible in order to minimize the trauma to the child, to ensure that any litigation on the merits of child custody can be heard in the child's home country, and to deprive the abductor parent of any legal advantage resulting from the abduction. If the Convention succeeds in swiftly returning children to their pre-abduction circumstances, the ever-important goal of deterring abductions can be achieved.

The Convention is a logical extension of legislation enacted by Congress in 1980 to deal with interstate parental kidnapping. In recognition of the intolerably high incidence of parental kidnapping in this country and the painful effects it has on children, the Congress adopted the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act of 1980. That law, supported by a strong, bipartisan coalition in both Houses, mandates interstate enforcement of state custody decrees made in conformity with federal statute, directs the FBI to investigate state felony parental kidnapping cases pursuant to the Fugitive Felon Act, and authorizes the Federal Parent Locator Service to locate abductor-parents. The federal law complements the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act, now in effect in every state and the District of Columbia, governing interstate recognition and enforcement of child custody orders. Neither of these laws helps a parent whose child is abducted from the U.S. and taken abroad. The Hague Child Abduction Convention will fill this gap. It addresses the global dimension of the parental kidnapping problem, and, if ratified, will provide a meaningful remedy to parents whose children are abducted across international borders. The American Bar Association strongly supports this Convention. We know of no opposition to it.

We respectfully request that you schedule the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction for the earliest possible consideration by your committee and expeditious ratification by the Senate. Please call upon us if we can be of any assistance to you in this regard.

Sincerely,

MALCOLM WALLOP,
ALAN CRANSTON,
PAULA HAWKINS,
PAUL SIMON,
U.S. Senators.

EXHIBIT NO. 3

NATURAL RESOURCES DEFENSE COUNCIL,
Washington, DC, July 17, 1986.

Hon. RICHARD LUGAR,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LUGAR: The Natural Resources Defense Council would like to take this opportunity to support prompt ratification of the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance Especially and Waterfowl Habitat (the Ramsar Convention).

The Natural Resources Defense Council represents 62,021 members throughout the United States. For over a decade, NRDC's International Program has promoted greater efforts to conserve the global environment, including specifically the diversity of the Earth's plant and animal species. Wetlands are extremely rich habitats which support a wide range of species, including waterfowl important to sportsmen and marine and freshwater fin and shellfish important to the human diet. Wetlands also perform a myriad of ecological services, including filtration of pollutants, maintenance of water supplies, dampening of flood levels, and stabilization of shorelines,

Unfortunately, wetlands throughout the world are under threat from various human activities, including drainage for agriculture or urbanization; pollution by agricultural, domestic, or industrial discharges or careless dumping of poisonous wastes; and overexploitation of the native birds, fish, or vegetation (especially timber). The Ramsar Convention is an established and effective international forum for addressing these problems. NRDC is pleased that the United States is finally joining the treaty.

On a personal level, I can attest to the aesthetic and biological values of two of the wetlands chosen for addition to the List of Wetlands of International Importance. The Edwin B. Forsythe (Brigantine) National Wildlife Refuge is a prime habitat for ducks and geese, as well as wading birds, raptors, and forest birds, and such mammals as river otter, muskrat, and fox. Okefenokee NWR is a wonderous place, home of the alligator, pitcher plants, cranes and ibisis, as well as the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker. Although I have not visited Ash Meadows NWR, I understand that it is home to a dozen federally listed threatened and endangered fish and plant species—the highest density of such species anywhere in the continental United States. NRDC congratulates the Fish and Wildlife Service on nominating this unique wetland for recognition by this international program.

The Natural Resources Defense Council hopes that the Senate will move rapidly to complete the ratification process for the Ramsar Convention. We look forward to working with our colleagues in the conservation community—both inside and outside government—to utilize Ramsar's mechanisms to improve conservation of wetlands around the world.

Sincerely,

FAITH THOMPSON CAMPBELL, Ph.D.

RATIFICATION OF THE HAGUE TREATY ON CHILD ABDUCTION

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is considering the ratification of the treaty for the 1980 Hague Conference on Private International Law. The Hague conference conducted a convention on the civil aspects of international child abduction and drafted a treaty to help resolve custody disputes. The convention proposed the prompt return of the child by the country of refuge.

The foreign court does not determine or redetermine which parent keeps the child. It is not a criminal remedy. It simply decides whether a youngster under the age of 16 has been wrongfully removed or retained by the alleged abductor. The treaty covers parental kidnapings that occur both before and after a custody order has been rendered and abductions by joint custodians. The treaty also addresses visitation rights grievances. Under the convention, each participating nation sets up a government office called a central authority, which will process applications for help by parents. Each central authority will be linked to other participating countries with the aim of trying to locate the child, to bring about the voluntary return of the child in order to resolve the custody or visitation conflict and to offer legal representation.

Every parental kidnaping is heartbreaking, but an international child kidnaping is even more so because of the costs, complications and difficulties in trying to work within a foreign jurisdiction's legal system. Sally Abrahams in her book, "Children in the Crossfire: The Tragedy of Parental Kidnapping," related the difficulties that American parents have faced in trying to locate and regain custody of children who have been taken abroad by ex-spouses who are unhappy with custody or visitation orders. Ms. Abrahams cited the possibility of the United States and additional countries ratifying the Hague conference as the one hope that an attempt to eliminate the redtape and facilitate a safer method of resolving custody disputes will be made internationally.

Florida has been fortunate to have some of the leading experts on international child abduction residing in our State. Kathy Rosenthal of Children's Rights of America, which is located in Largo, FL, has assisted numerous parents in the legal morass of redtape involved in locating and securing the return of a child abducted to a foreign jurisdiction.

HAGUE CONVENTION ON THE CIVIL ASPECTS OF INTERNATIONAL CHILD ABDUCTION

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I strongly support Senate ratification of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. This convention establishes administrative and judicial mechanisms to bring about the prompt return of children who have been abducted from, or retained outside of, their country of habitual residence. In rapidly returning a child to his or her preabduction circumstances, the convention seeks to minimize the trauma to the child caused by the abduction, to ensure that litigation on the merits of child custody be heard in the child's home country, to deprive the abductor of any legal advantage resulting from the abduction, and, ultimately, to deter international, parental kidnaping.

Parental kidnaping has long been a concern of mine. It is clear that parental kidnaping has harmful and long-lasting psychological consequences for its victim—children. In 1980, Congress enacted the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, legislation I had sponsored to reduce the incidence of interstate child abduction, and which enjoyed strong, bipartisan support in both Houses of the Congress. The Hague Child Abduction Convention is a logical and necessary extension of the Parental Kidnaping Prevention Act; it addresses the global dimension of the parental kidnaping problem. When ratified, it will provide a meaningful remedy to parents whose children are abducted across international borders.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the American Bar Association with respect to this convention be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. The portion of the ABA's statement on the child abduction convention was written by Partica M. Hoff, who, as an attorney on my staff between 1977 and 1980, worked with me on the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act and joined the U.S. delegation as congressional observer at the final negotiations of the child abduction convention in October 1980.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF ARTHUR W. ROVINE, CHAIRMAN, SECTION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW AND PRACTICE, AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

CONTENTS

In the preparation of this statement, the American Bar Association (ABA) has had the benefit of a number of experts whose authorship of each section is noted here. The professional background of each of these lawyers, as well as those who will be assisting in orally presenting the ABA's views, appear in Appendix A to this statement.

II. HAGUE CONVENTION ON THE CIVIL ASPECTS OF INTERNATIONAL CHILD ABDUCTION (TREATY DOC. 99-11)

Mr. Chairman, I would next turn to the most recent of the treaties before us, and in many respects the most urgently needed—the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction ("child abduction convention" or "Convention").

The ABA's endorsement of the child abduction convention is a direct outgrowth of nearly two decades of deep concern on the part of the Association and the ABA's Family Law Section about the harmful effects that parental kidnapping has on children. Parental kidnapping involves the unilateral taking, retention or concealment of a child by one parent from the other parent. Whatever the provocation, parental kidnapping is rarely, if ever, in the child's best interest. Rather, the child is uprooted from home, family, friends, school, and all that is familiar, and forced into an existence similar to that of a fugitive—a life on the run, frequently with new identities, denial of all past relationships, and above all, the loss of emotional security and stability that is so crucial to normal child development.

In recognition of the need to enact laws to safeguard children from parental kidnapping, the ABA in 1968 approved for enactment in all states the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act ("UCCJA"), drafted that same year by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. The UCCJA, now the law in every state and the District of Columbia, eliminates a major incentive for parental kidnapping by denying the abductor any legal advantage in the state to which he or she removes the child. The UCCJA limits the exercise of custody jurisdiction to the state where the child had his home or where there were other significant contacts with the child and his family. It provides for the recognition and enforcement of out-of-state custody decrees in many instances and limits the right of states to modify sister state decrees. Judges in sister states are directed to communicate and cooperate with one another in order to avoid jurisdictional conflicts that can result in the issuance of inconsistent custody decrees, which suspend the child in a state of legal limbo.

While the UCCJA represented a major improvement in the legal system's response to parental kidnapping, the ABA recognized a need for a more comprehensive solution to the problems of interstate and international parental kidnapping. In 1978, at the request of the Family Law Section, the Association's House of Delegates adopted five resolutions designed to stem the proliferation of parental kidnapping. Among other things, the ABA supported passage by Congress of the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act ("PKPA") which was enacted on December 28, 1980.

The PKPA is the federal analog to the UCCJA. It requires interstate enforcement of child custody decrees that conform to the articulated federal jurisdictional and related criteria (28 U.S.C. 1738a); makes the Federal Parent Locator Service available to locate absconding parents who abduct their children and conceal their whereabouts (42 U.S.C. 663); and authorizies the F.B.I. to investigate interstate felony parental kidnapping cases in accordance with the Fugitive Felon Act (18 U.S.C. 1073 note).

The UCCJA and PKPA, together with state criminal parental kidnapping statutes, today provide a fairly effective meachanism for deterring, or remedying, interstate parental kidnapping. There remains a need to expand the existing legal framework to provide more effective remedies in international parental kidnapping cases.

Cognizant of this need, the ABA has been interested from the outset in the development of the child abduction convention. The Association kept abreast of the brilliant contributions by the late Brigitte Bodenheimer, professor of law at the University of California at Davis Law School, to the drafting of the Convention. Then in October, 1980, Larry Stotter, past chairman of the Family Law Section, represented the ABA as observer on the U.S. delegation at the final negotiations of the Convention.

At the Midyear Meeting in February, 1981, only four months after the completion of the Convention, the ABA House of Delegates adopted a resolution urging "the appropriate government agencies to approve and ratify the Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction as proposed by the Hague Conference on Private International Law."

The ABA's interest in ratification of the Convention has intensified over the last five years as the number of reported international parental kidnapping cases has steadily grown. According to State Department figures, between 1973 and the present there have been 2,184 cases reported to the Department involving children removed from our country and taken abroad.

The two-thousand-plus cases of children abducted from the United States represents two-thousands-plus bereft victim parents—those left behind after the child has been taken or kept abroad—and the same or greater number of children—depending upon the number of siblings who are victimized—whose lives have been disrupted and who oftentimes have been thrust into new cultures with unfamiliar languages and customs. The cost to the victim parent is significant—in legal fees, travel expenses and emotional upheaval. The cost to the victim child is beyond calculation.

For lawyers consulted by victim parents whose children have been taken out of the country, each of these cases represents a legal challenge of international dimension: the lawyer must learn the applicable foreign law and in all probability retain counsel in the foreign country to pursue the appropriate administrative or judicial procedures to secure the child's return. And no matter how artful the legal representation is, there is no certainty of success in recovering the child of children. Frequently, the foreign court is under no legal obligation to recognize and enforce a U.S. custody decree, and, absent a statutory requirement, will not enforce the U.S. order as a matter of comity. It then becomes necessary for the U.S. parent to reapply for custody in a foreign tribunal, which typically pits the U.S. petitioner against a citizen or resident of the foreign country who has the benefit of defending the custody suit in a family, if not friendly, forum. Moreover, in the absence of a custody decree in existence at the time of the abduction of retention which defines the respective custody, visitation or joint custody rights of the parents, it is extremely unlikely that a foreign court will order the child returned to the parent in the United States either pursuant to law or as a matter of comity.

In essence, under the present system, victim parents in the United States and their lawyers face very real and too often insurmountable obstacles in securing the return to the United States of a child who has been taken abroad.

Ironically, under present law when children are wrongfully brought to this country it is much more likely that they will be ordered returned to their country of origin. Over the last three years, 43 cases in this category have been reported to the State Department. For victim parents abroad, section 23 of the UCCJA, adopted by nearly every state, provides the statutory means for having a state court recognize and enforce a foreign custody determination, so long as it was made in conformity with UCCJA policies after notice and opportunity to be heard were given to the abducting parent. Section 23 applies to orders made even after the child has been abducted. UCCJA case law reflects adherence by courts in many states to section 23's mandate, with resulting orders to parents in the U.S. to return children to their parents abroad.

The Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of Child Abduction will do for victim parents in the United States what UCCJA § 23 now does for many victim parents abroad—establish tangible remedies for recovering a child who has been wrongfully removed to, or retained in, a ratifying country. The Convention will likewise provide additional legal tools for parents abroad who seek return of their children for the United States.

Specifically, the child abduction convention is designed to secure the prompt return of children who have been abducted from, or retained outside of, their country of habitual residence, and to facilitate the exercise of visitation across international borders.

The Convention does not depend upon the existence of court orders as a condition of returning children, nor does it seek to settle disputes about legal custody rights. The goal is to restore the child to the factual situation that existed prior to the removal or retention as quickly as possible, while reserving to the courts of the child's country of habitual residence the right to make substantive custody decisions regarding the child once the child is back home. By promising a swift and sure return remedy when a child is wrongfully removed or retained, the effect of the Convention, if successfully implemented here and abroad, will be to discourage abductions in ratifying countries.

In order to invoke the Convention remedies, the child's removal or retention must be wrongful within the meaning of the Convention. For purposes of the Convention, a removal or retention is wrongful if it violates custody rights that are defined in an agreement or court order, or that arise by operation of law, provided these rights are actually exercised. The Convention covers abductions that occur both before and after the issuance of custody orders, as well as abductions by joint custodians. The Convention remedies apply to children under the age of sixteen.

ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDY

Each country that ratifies the Convention must establish at least one Central Authority ("CA") to process incoming and outgoing requests for assistance in securing the return of a child or the exercise of visitation rights. The duties of the CA include locating abducted children, facilitating the voluntary return of children, providing legal representation, either directly or indirectly, if voluntary return is impossible and judicial recourse is sought, promoting the exercise of visitation rights, and helping to arrange for the child's return travel.

Establishment of a Central Authority in each country party to the Convention will be remarkably beneficial for victim parents and their lawyers. At last there will be a government office charged with assisting parents recover their abducted children! No longer will victim parents be shunted from one office to the next in search of assistance. To parents who have been through this hellish experience, and to their lawyers who have found themselves apologizing for the official indifferences and legal process inability to right a wrong, the mere existence of a CA will be a meaningful improvement over current law.

JUDICIAL REMEDY

With all of its potential, the CA will sometimes attempt but fail to secure the voluntary return of a child, or determine it best not to seek a voluntary return from an abductor who has shown a propensity to flee and hide with the child. For wrongful removal and retention cases where voluntary return is impossible, the Convention establishes a judicial remedy which permits an aggrieved parent to seek a court order for the prompt return of a child. An aggrieved parent may pursue judicial relief while simultaneously pursuing administrative relief through the CA.

Articles 11-17 are the major provisions governing legal proceedings for the return of an abducted child. Under Article 12, if a proceeding is brought less than a year from the date of the wrongful removal or retention and the court finds that the conduct was wrongful, the court is under a treaty obligation to order the child returned. When proceedings are brought a year or more after the wrongful removal or retention, the court is still obligated to order the child returned unless the person resisting return demonstrates that the child is settled in the new environment.

Article 13 enumerates the exceptional circumstances under which a court need not order a child returned. The person opposing return has the burden of proving that (1) custody rights were not actually being exercised by the person seeking return, or the person seeking return had consented to or subsequently acquiesced in the removal or retention, or (2) there is a grave risk that return would expose the child to physical or psychological harm or otherwise place the child in an intolerable situation. A court also has discretion to refuse to order a child returned if it finds that the child objects to being returned and has reached an age or degree or maturity making it appropriate to consider his or her views. Finally, Article 20 permits a court to deny a return request if returning the child would not be permitted by the fundamental principles of the requested State relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Visitation rights, referred to in the Convention as "access rights," are covered in Article 21. The remedies for breach of access rights do not include the return remedy provided by Article 12. However, the noncustodial parent may apply to the CA under Article 21 for "organizing or securing the effective exercise of rights of access." The CA is charged with promoting the peaceful enjoyment of those rights.

Custodial parents in the United States who are reluctant to send their children abroad for court-ordered visitation with the noncustodial parent may also benefit from this provision. Prior to the visitation, it may be possible to enlist the cooperation of the foreign CA to monitor the visitation and take steps, if necessary, to have the child returned at the end of the lawful visitation period. Moreover, the Convention's return remedy would become available in the event of an unauthorized "holdover" visit. Thus, this provision will safeguard the custodial parent's rights while fostering the noncustodial parent's exercise of visitation rights across international borders.

The ABA is aware that Secretary Shultz has recommended that the United States enter two reservations, both of which are permitted by the Convention. The first reservation, pursuant to Articles 24 and 42, would require that all documents submitted to the U.S. Central Authority be accompanied by an English translation. The second reservation, pursuant to Article 26, would exempt the United States from paying any legal expenses incurred in connection with efforts to secure a child's return from the United States, except as otherwise covered by a legal aid program. The ABA supports entry of these reservations. With respect to the latter, the Family Law Section will attempt to identify lawyers willing to represent parents who seek relief pursuant to the Convention, and encourage the provision of legal services either on a pro bono or reduced fee basis.

To date, France, Portugal, Switzerland, and most of Canada's provinces and territories have become parties to the Convention. The United Kingdom has also very recently ratified the Convention, and Australia has taken all steps preliminary to ratification. The sooner the United States becomes a party to the Convention, the sooner parents in this country will have a meaningful vehicle for securing the return of children who are wrongfully removed to, or retained in, these ratifying countries and others that become party to the Convention. Toward this end, the American Bar Association strongly recommends prompt and favorable committee and Senate action on the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, as well as swift congressional approval of federal legislation to ensure its effective implementation.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, today I rise to encourage my colleagues to consider thoughtfully and thereafter ratify the Hague convention on the Civil Aspects of Child Abduction. I further urge my fellow Senators to support ensuing legislation which will implement aspects of the Hague convention and assure uniform enforcement of the convention.

Mr. President, between 1973 and the present there have been 2,184 cases reported to the State Department involving children abducted from our country and taken abroad. Higher rates of international marriages and resultant divorces have increased this caseload by 1,507 in the last 3 years. This amounts to an average of over 40 such abductions per month.

The long-term psychological trauma experienced by these children is staggering. In a recent article, the Journal of Pediatrics indicated that children who are victims of parental kidnapping suffer from one or more of five types of trauma ranging from long-term grief to rage to mental indoctrination. Other research has shown that parental kidnapping contributes to a child's depression, anger toward both parents; and obvious disruption of schooling.

Within the borders of our Nation, child abduction by a noncustodial parent has received appropriate and effective statutory attention at both the State and national levels. The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act drafted in 1968 and adopted by all States and the District of Columbia, eliminates the incentive for parental kidnapping by denying an abductor any legal advantage in any State to which he or she removes a child. The act eliminates incentive for parent abduction by providing for the recognition and enforcement of out-of-State custdry decrees of sister States. The Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, Public Law 96-611, is the corresponding Federal statute which requires interstate enforcement of child custody decrees conforming to Federal jurisdictional criteria, provides for the Federal Parent Locator Service to locate absconding parents, and authorizes the FBI to investigate interstate felony parental kidnapping cases.

A need remains to confront the problem of parental abduction of children at the international level. This need was recently addressed by the Hague convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction.

The Hague convention, signed by the United States on December 23, 1981, was transmitted to the Senate by the President in October 1985. Hearings on the convention were completed earlier this month by the Foreign Relations Committee.

The Hague convention has three major purposes:

First, to restore an abducted child to the same status held by that child prior to abduction, in the country of his or her habitual residence.

Second, to provide central offices and procedures in each country by which applications can be made to locate and return abducted children; and

Third, to place the country to which a child has been abducted or in which a child is being wrongfully detained under a treaty obligation to return the child promptly to the parent in the child's country of habitual residence.

Countries which are parties to the treaty are required to establish a central authority which will receive and process requests for locating and returning children. Expected duties of the U.S. central authority will be: To locate children removed or retained in the United States, to determine possibilities of voluntary return of abducted children without court proceedings; to expedite return of children by court proceedings when voluntary return is refused; to arrange for provisional care of the children during return proceedings; and to arrange for transportation of the child when a return is ordered.

Of particular interest is a measure contained in article 26 of the convention requiring that the costs of a successful return proceeding be levied against the wrongfully removing or retaining parent. It is the hope of the convention that this provision will deter the actions of a removing parent.

Other articles in the convention govern legal proceedings for the return of the abducted child. Timing of a custody hearing, visitation rights and exceptional circumstances precluding the return of a child are all enumerated by the convention.

Current parties to the convention include France, Portugal, Switzerland, Hungary, Canada, and the United Kingdom. Australia has completed all steps toward ratification. Our representatives to the convention have been informed that other countries will adopt the convention provided the United States does so.

Mr. President, in order to provide for full and uniform implementation of the Hague convention throughout the United States, the State Department has encouraged passage of legislation accompanying the convention ratification. This legislation would specifically deal with venue, determination of original jurisdiction, the effect of court orders in other U.S. jurisdictions, and necessary measures for the protection of children.

Again, I reemphasize, the approval of the Hague convention and the enactment of enabling legislation will represent a significant step in combating the child abduction problem. I urge my colleagues to lend their unanimous and enthusiastic support to both the Hague convention and ensuing legislation.

I ask unanimous consent to have a letter in this connection printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Re: The Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction.
Attention: Richard Holcomb.

NATIONAL CENTER FOR MISSING AND EXPLOITED CHILDREN,
Washington, DC, October 2, 1986.

Hon. JEREMIAH DENTON,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DENTON: In response to your inquiry concerning the position of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children on the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, I wish to take this opportunity to express the opinion of the Center that the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, which has just been favorably reported out of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, be ratified. Parental kidnapping is a serious problem encountered by many American families as parents increasingly take the law into their own hands by unilaterally removing and often concealing the children from the other parent when the marriage or nonmarital partnership dissolves. Many times parents lose all contact with their children, unable to see or speak to them for years.

Recent research on the effects on the child-victim of parental kidnapping reveals that, in addition to the suffering of the left-behind parent, many of the children who have been kidnapped by noncustodial parents suffer long-term psychological trauma and other consequences. Clinical research (Journal of Pediatrics, July 1983, Terr) has demonstrated that children who are the victims of parental kidnapping suffer one or more of five basic kinds of psychic trauma—from long-term grief to rage to mental indoctrination.

In addition, a study done by Dr. Dorothy Huntington of the Center for the Family in Transition (Corte Madera, California) found that children victimized by parental kidnapping suffer from depression at having been torn from their families, their friends, and their school. These children are not only deprived of the other parent, they are deprived of both parents' families. Children become very angry at both parents as they continue to be a pawn in the struggle between the two parents. Their schooling is disrupted, and they find it difficult to make and keep friends, as the abductor parent may move frequently in order to avoid discovery. Moreover, in some cases these children are abused, neglected, or abandoned by the parents who snatched them vengefully. It is impossible to know whether these children are well cared for until they are located.

Families victimized by parental kidnapping routinely face tremendous difficulties in finding their children and in obtaining court orders for their return. These difficulties are compounded when the abductor parent removes the child from the United States. Court custody orders obtained in American courts are of little value when custody decisions must be relitigated in foreign courts.

The Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of international Child Abduction promises to be of significant assistance in international cases of parental kidnapping, since it will require the return of the child to the country of the child's habitual residence. Disputes about custody rights can then be heard and settled in the courts of the child's habitual domicile. The abductor is, thus, denied legal advantage from the abduction to or retention in a foreign country. Moreover, the establishment of a Central Authority in the ratifying state will provide assistance to the families in locating their children and in securing the cooperation of foreign states.

Since the cooperation of countries other than the United States depends on the reciprocity of obligations, American citizens cannot avail themselves of the services of the Central Authorities of other countries until the United States ratifies this Convention. Nor can they avail themselves of the provisions requiring the return of the children to the country of habitual residence. Over 2,100 American families have experienced the difficulties of international child abduction since 1973. Of these, over one half (1,132) involved countries who have expressed an interest in ratifying the Hague Convention. State Department records reveal that over 137 Americans sought assistance on international child abduction cases in the first five months of 1986 alone.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children views the ratification of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of Child absuction to be an important step in resolving the dilemmas currently faced by families victimized by international child abduction. Accordingly, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children urges the Senate to ratify this Convention and requests your assistance in obtaining expeditious action on this matter.

Sincerely,

JAY HOWELL,
Executive Director.

THE RAMSAR CONVENTION: TOWARD THE PROTECTION OF WETLANDS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations recently reported the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance for Senate Consideration. The so-called Ramsar Convention will lay the groundwork for United States cooperation in international efforts to protect and preserve fragile wetland areas. As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and as a strong supporter of wetland protection, I urge the Senate to give its consent to this convention.

There is a growing recognition in this country of the importance of marshes, swamps, and bogs to the environment. The diversity of wildlife supported by wetlands, the vital role of wetlands in the life cycles of fish and birds, and the tenuous grasp on survival of wetland vegetation have led to strong public actions in support of the protection of these areas.

Wetlands have traditionally been viewed in the context of local or regional ecosystems. But this is only part of the story. Migratory waterfowl and fish depend on viable wetland systems in many countries for their survival. The United States needs to protect its wetlands, but that determination has to be matched in other countries for these migratory animals to survive. The Ramsar Convention, when approved by the Senate, will act as an encouragement for other nations to make similar commitments, and as a foundation for the exchange of information to improve the care and management of wetlands around the world.

The most important benefits for the United States will come from increased cooperation with Latin American and Caribbean countries, where many species of North American migratory birds have wintering habitats. The convention calls for the recognition by each signatory country of at least one wetland area of international importance. The designation of a wetland highlights the decision of that country to ensure its protection and survival. It also provides a focus for international technology and expertise in wetland protection and management.

Four national wildlife refuges have been proposed for designation under the Ramsar Convention. The diverse locations of these sites—Alaska, New Jersey, Florida, and Nevada—show that wetlands in all regions of our country are part of a larger, international ecosystem. The Ramsar Convention helps expand the recognition of the interconnection of seemingly separate wetlands, to the benefit of migratory birds and fish, which know no national boundaries.

The Rasmar Convention does not require any outlays of Federal dollars. However, it does signal a clear commitment on the part of the United States to the preservation and enhancement our wetlands for the good of all. Of equal importance, the convention provides the assurance that our efforts are matched by those in other countries. Approval of the Ramsar Convention serves notice that we are willing to commit our knowledge and experience to other countries who make a similar dedication to their own wetland areas.

One final point: This is not the final step toward international cooperation and understanding of wetlands management and protection; it is just a beginning. Other steps can and should be taken. The United States has clearly been at the forefront of wetland protection. Approval of the Ramsar Convention provides us with framework to put that experience to work on a larger scale.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction the Senate now has before it a treaty which is of major importance to the safety and well-being of our children. Before the 99th Congress come to a close, we should give this treaty, known as the Hague Convention, our resounding approval.

Negotiated in 1981, the Hague Convention deals with the problem of parental kidnaping—specifically, with the legal and practical complications that can result when a child is taken beyond national boundries.

At present, a parent whose child has been abducted to a foreign country in violation of a valid custody decree must go through the costly and time-consuming process of getting a foreign court to recognize that decree. The U.S. Department of State can offer some aid, but its authority in this area is at present quite limited, and the FBI can only become involved if the abduction is a State felony. Criminal extradition treaties have been of little effect under these circumstances.

These are the reasons that the proposed Hague Convention—approved last month by the Foreign Relations Committee and now before the full Senate ratification—represents a major stride forward. This convention requires that children who are wrongfully taken or retained abroad be promptly returned to their country of residence. Thus, it simply requires restoration of the custody status quo that existed before the abduction.

Mr. President, I urge the Members of the Senate to delay no further and to give their prompt approval to this valuable agreement.

HAGUE CONVENTION ON THE CIVIL ASPECTS OF INTERNATIONAL CHILD ABDUCTION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am particularly pleased that the Senate is today approving the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. This treaty establishes an administrative and judicial mechanism to bring about the prompt return of children who have been abducted from their country in parental custody struggles.

In 1980, I coauthored with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act which addressed the problem of domestic parental kidnaping cases. During the hearings I chaired on the problem of parental kidnaping in the 96th Congress, the need for a remedy to deal with international—as well as domestic—parental kidnaping cases was well documented.

On a number of occasions, I have seen the difficulties that parents from California have experienced in attempting to recover their children when they have been taken abroad by a noncustodial parent. Ratification of this treaty by the United States is a significant step forward in dealing with these very difficult cases. Each country that becomes a party to the Hague Convention is obligated to establish a central authority to process applications from aggrieved parents for the return of their abducted children and provide a judicial mechanism for the parent to recover these children.

Although ratification of this treaty will not end the heartache and distress that parental kidnaping brings about, it is designed to provide for a clear and hopefully a swift mechanism for restoring abducted children to their homes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote show in the record as six separate rollcall votes on the resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the treaties.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a good many Senators have left the Chamber not knowing there was going to be another rollcall vote. This one counts for six.

I wonder, while our cloakrooms are alerting, if the distinguished majority leader could tell us whether or not there are going to be any votes following this one today.

Mr. DOLE. I may be able to give the minority leader that reply in about 30 minutes. We are still working on reconciliation. That could occur.

Mr. BYRD. The majority leader would expect the Senate to be late today?

Mr. DOLE. If we have reconciliation we could be as late as 7:30 or 8, not real late.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. We will leave the vote open for a while.

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

I thank the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions of ratification.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announced that the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 98, nays 0 as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 340—Treaty Doc. No. 98-27.]

Mr. KASTEN. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, was there a motion to reconsider the vote by which treaties were ratified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was not.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I have been asked by the majority leader to move to reconsider the vote, and I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions of ratification were agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we go out of executive session, and that I be recognized as if in morning business for not to exceed 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

THE GOVERNMENT OF NICARAGUA'S VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, today, the Government of Nicaragua is in violation of international law. Eugene Hasenfus, a Wisconsinite, a United States citizen, is imprisoned in Nicaragua, and has not been allowed to speak to United States Embassy officials.

By international law, the Nicaraguan Government is violating the Vienna Convention. Under article 36, subparagraph a:

> Consulate officials shall be free to communicate with nationals of the sending state, and to have access to them.

Subparagraph b says that:

> If he so requests, the authorities for the receiving state shall without delay inform the sending state whenever a national is arrested or is detained in any other manner.

Subparagraph c goes on to say:

> Consulate officials shall have the right to visit a national of the sending state who is in prison, custody, or detention.

Mr. President, this treaty was signed by approximately 100 nations around the world, including the United States and Nicaragua. What this means is, all citizens have the right of access to their embassy officials in Nicaragua. The Government of Nicaragua is using Eugene Hasenfus as a pawn in an inflammatory media game. Our efforts must be to protect this man and create an environment that does not give the Nicaraguan Government an incentive to imprison Mr. Hasenfus.

I urge my colleagues here, and all Americans, to speak out against this injustice. I urge my colleagues to contact the Nicaraguan Embassy and protest their violations of international law. If this government continues to mistreat Eugene Hasenfus, we will not stand for it. This man must have his rights protected as an American citizen in a foreign country.

Mr. HARKIN and Mr. McCONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, are we in executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing before the Senate. We are in legislative session.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be able to proceed as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Iowa.

EUGENE HASENFUS AND THE DOWNING OF FLIGHT C-123

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, as more and more news of Eugene Hasenfus, and the Sunday downing of the C-123 cargo plane over Nicaragua comes out, I am reminded of a line from Alice in Wonderland: "This story gets curiouser and curiouser." First, no one claims ownership of the plane.

General Singlaub denies it, so does the Reagan administration, and so does Southern Air Transport which apparently commissioned two of the Americans on the flight.

No one claims responsibility for the Americans on the flight. Yet, Hasenfus' wife claims that her husband worked for the CIA.

The Salvadoran Government claims that it had no knowledge of the Hasenfus flight or any other mission in support of the Contras. Yet, the plane, after leaving Miami, landed in Ilopango, which we know is the Salvadoran military's main airport.

The President totally disavows any connection between the U.S. Government and the downed plane. Yet Hasenfus and his companions were wearing dogtags identifying them as U.S. military advisers.

The President's "absolute denials" and the administration's smoke and mirrors cannot hide from the American people and the Congress the real facts behind this incident.

When dealing with an administration which claims that truth must be protected by deception, we must keep asking questions and keep looking for the truth.

First, we have to ask who owned the C-123 downed over Nicaragua? The Contras deny ownership of the C-123 downed over Nicaragua, but claim that there was a third country involved in purchase of the plane; and General Singlaub, the commander of the private war against Nicaragua, denies that his group owns it and has completely disassociated itself from the Hasenfus mission. We know the Contras have never owned a C-123, yet their spokesman claims that a third country was involved in the mission.

Was the plane purchased with funds from a third country? Did the administration assist in any way in linking that country with the Contras?

What was the country? Why are they involved? Who involved them?

Second, just who is Eugene Hasenfus and what connection is there between Southern Air Transport and the CIA? From the President to Secretary Shultz to the Central Intelligence Agency, the administration claims that no one on the plane was an employee of the CIA or Defense Department.

Yet, Eugene Hasenfus' wife, Sally, admits that her husband worked for the CIA. Furthermore, Hasenfus and two other Americans on board had been employed by Southern Air Transport. Southern Air has a long history of ties with the CIA.

According to the Church Committee Report of 1976, Southern Air was owned by the CIA from 1960 to 1973. The airline has since maintained contact with the Agency, and according to a CBS News story of July 8, 1984, Southern Air flew guns to the Contras at the behest of the CIA.

Furthermore, Hasenfus was an employee of Air America during the Vietnam War. According to the Church Committee, Air America was also a proprietary of the CIA.

Has Mr. Hasenfus ever worked for the CIA? What was the last date of contract between CIA personnel and Hasenfus? Has the CIA or any other U.S. Government agency contracted with Southern Air Transport within the last year for flights in Central America?

Was there any prior knowledge by the U.S. Government? President Reagan admits that the U.S. Government has been aware of private efforts to aid Nicaraguan rebels, but denies any government role in the mission leading to Hasenfus' capture.

Yet, how did Hasenfus and his associates get ID cards from the Salvadoran Air Force identifying them as U.S. military advisers in El Salvador? Did any DOD or other U.S. Government employee approve the issuance of those identification cards by the Salvadoran Air Force?

Where did the Hasenfus flight originate? If it began in Miami, were any U.S. Government personnel aware that the flight was carrying or eventually would carry weapons to the Contras?

Most curious of all, Mr. President, how did the C-123 land at Ilopango Airport without the knowledge of U.S. military personnel at the airport? It is my understanding that a half dozen members of the U.S. milgroup are stationed at Ilopango, and one U.S. adviser is stationed at the control tower at the airport. Were U.S. personnel in Ilopango aware of the cargo on the C-123 flight and aware of its flight path?

Were any of them involved in any way in refueling, loading, transferring material, or in other ways supporting that aircraft at Ilopango Airport?

It seems unlikely to me, Mr. President, that the plane could land at Ilopango Airport yet no one knows anything about it. This C-123 lands, probably refuels, maybe takes on cargo, and yet nobody saw it.

It strains credulity to think that our military personnel there did not know of it or perhaps did not even have something to do with it.

Did U.S. personnel provide any assistance to the Hasenfus flight? Did any Defense Department or other U.S. Government employee assist Hasenfus and his companions in loading or refueling the cargo plane? Did any DOD or other U.S. Government employee meet with Hasenfus, advise them, or in any way assist them in carrying out their supply operation? Were the weapons on board ever the property of the CIA, or purchased by U.S. Government funds?

Getting to the truth in this case is like trying to capture the Cheshire Cat in the Alice in Wonderland story. Every time you think you are getting closer, it disappears.

With the Hasenfus mission, we have entered that grey world of spooks and spies, where the law is an inconvenience and where truth is smothered by lies and half truths.

Mr. President, we have a responsibility to see that the laws, the laws which this body has passed and which previous Presidents have signed—such as the Neutrality Act and prohibitions against the CIA aiding the Contras—are not being broken. We have a responsibility to insure that the American people as well as our colleagues are not victims once again of an elaborate disinformation campaign.

Toward this end, next week I intend to offer an amendment seeking from the President a full and detailed accounting of both direct and indirect association, knowledge, or assistance provided Eugene Hasenfus and the downed flight, by the U.S. Government.

Again, Mr. President, I believe we have taken those final steps which are going to involve us ever more deeply in war in Central America. As I said yesterday, Mr. Hasenfus is the first POW. His American compatriots who were killed will be coming home in the first body bags.

There will be more, if the President continues this illogical, illegal, and damaging policy in Central America.

I am hopeful that we can get answers to these questions. I am hopeful that the Congress will speak before we adjourn and go home for the elections, not to probably meet again until next year in a new Congress. I am hopeful that this Congress will at least insist that we have a reporting from the President and a full accounting, not any coverups, not any grinning Cheshire cat that seems to evaporate when you get closer, but some cold, hard data on where this airplane came from and who owns it, who was the third country involved, and, if that is so, how was that country dragged into this?

Where did the arms come from? Who was Eugene Hasenfus? For whom did he really work?

And, most important of all, is the CIA, under the directorship of William Casey, obeying the law, or is it skirting the law, and possibly violating it, by using proxies such as Mr. Hasenfus and others to carry out what we in the Congress have declared should not be done?

Second, what was the involvement of the U.S. Department of Defense in this, if any, and were personnel aware of this at Ilopango Airport, and what were their orders?

What were the orders to the military group at Ilopango in terms of assisting this type of a mission or this particular mission?

If, in fact, those orders were to assist, then I submit, Mr. President, that certain officers or officials in the Department of Defense are also guilty of violating the laws of this country.

We just had an impeachment proceeding today, the first one in many years, in which the U.S. Senate has taken an official of the U.S. Government, a member of the third coequal branch of our Government, and, according to the procedures set forth in the Constitution of the United States, removed him from that office.

I believe that we ought to be taking a look at certain military officials if they are involved in this operation, if they have given orders to others under their command in clear violation of the laws of the land.

If such is the case, then those officers, no less than Judge Harry Claiborne, ought to also be removed from their positions for violating the laws of the United States.

So Mr. President, as more and more of information leaks out on this flight, and more and more questions are raised, I intend to take the floor on a daily basis to raise those questions and to ask for a full accounting.

As I said, Mr. President, sometime before this body adjourns, I hope to offer an amendment that will ask the President to be forthcoming with a full accounting of just who was involved in this flight, where the flight originated, and what, if any, was the involvement of both the Central Intelligence Agency and the Department of Defense.

Mr. McCONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DR. ABBY NKOMO, CHAIRMAN OF THE ATTERIDGEVILLE/SAULSVILLE CIVIC ASSOCIATION

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. COHEN, Mr. BOREN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. ROTH, and myself, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, this resolution has been cleared on this side of the aisle.

Mr. McCONNELL. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 503) relative to Dr. Abby Nkomo, Chairman of the Atteridgeville/Saulsville Civic Association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, as we all know, on June 12, 1986, the South African Government imposed sweeping state of emergency regulations which grant the military and police broad powers to question and detain individuals.

Since June 12, 1986, the Government has acknowledged detaining close to 10,000 South Africans. Independent monitoring groups estimate more than 12,000 people have actually been detained. But I am not here to talk about these statistics, as horrifying as they may be. I would like to take a moment of my colleague's time to discuss just one victim of apartheid and the state of emergency regulations.

The resolution I have submitted concerns the case of Dr. Abby Nkomo. Over the past several years, Dr. Nkomo has been an active and well respected community leader. In addition to his successful medical practice, he has chaired the Atteridgeville Civic Association and served as vice chairman of the Pretoria Council of Churches. But most importantly, Dr. Nkomo has worked tirelessly for peaceful change in South Africa.

My colleagues probably wonder why I would bring Dr. Nkomo's case to their attention. Has he distinguished himself in some unusual way? the answer is "No." The fact of the matter is Dr. Nkomo is very much like many other community leaders who advocate including the black majority in the South African political process and power.

Inexplicably, it is just these voices of moderation that the South African Government has chosen to harass, detain, and put on trial. Dr. Nkomo is representative of thousands of black citizens and leaders who has advocated dialog with the Government—and the Government has responded with repression.

Over the past year, Dr. Nkomo and his family have been threatened, his clinics have been ransacked, and his car and home have been bombed. In spite of his pleas, none of these incidents have been investigated by the police. In fact, instead, his daughter was detained for 47 days and he has been detained since June 12. He has suffered solitary confinement, he has been separated from his family, and he has been denied adequate medical attention.

Prior to his arrest, Dr. Nkomo was representative of the many moderate voices of reason within the black communities of South Africa who believe in dialog. As a detainee under the state of emergency, he is representative of thousands who have been stripped of their civil liberties and basic rights.

This resolution expresses the Senate's concern with the treatment Dr. Nkomo has suffered. But it is more than a statement of support for an individual victim of apartheid. It is a statement of support for due process and civil liberties for all South Africans. Most importantly, this resolution is a strong statement of support for dialog between the Government and the moderate advocates of peaceful change that Dr. Nkomo represents.

Last week, the Senate made the difficult decision to override the President's veto of the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986. None of us should feel this action resolved the issue or closed discussion of the problems South Africa confronts.

By overriding the veto, we confirmed our responsibility and role in shaping our policy toward South Africa. This sense of the Senate resolution reaffirms our support for those who seek dialog and peaceful ways to dismantle apartheid.

The resolution has been cleared by the majority and minority leaders and the chairman and ranking minority members of the Foreign Relations Committee. I ask my colleagues' support in immediately adopting the resolution.

SOUTH AFRICA'S TREATMENT OF DR. ABBY NKOMO

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as a cosponsor of this amendment. It is important that the Senate make this firm statement on behalf of human rights and civil liberties for all citizens of the Republic of South Africa.

One of the real tragedies in that troubled country is that the Government, which is already oppressing the vast majority of its citizens under its apartheid policies, is harassing the moderate black leaders with whom it should be talking as forces seeking peaceful, rather than violent change in that country.

The case of Dr. Abby Nkomo is representative of many in South Africa today. Dr. Nkomo is a respected community leader, highly regarded by his peers and, I might add, by American Embassy officials in South Africa. He is a successful physician, chairman of the Atteridgeville/Saulsville Civic Association, vice chairman of the Pretoria Council of Churches, and an active member of the Methodist Church. Dr. Nkomo has also been a vocal advocate of peaceful change in South Africa.

Despite this, the Government, when it declared its state of emergency, detained Dr. Nkomo, placing him in solitary confinement on June 12. Since that time, he has been denied adequate medical attention, including medication for diabetes. He has been separated from his family and permitted only infrequent visits by his wife. Even then, the couple has suffered harassment from prison guards.

The harassment of Dr. Nkomo—and of other black leaders like him throughout the country—did not begin on June 12. Dr. Nkomo's clinics have been sabotaged, his home and car have been petrol-bombed, and telephone threats have been made against him and his family. The police have refused to investigate any of these incidents or threats.

Dr. Nkomo represents the majority of South Africans, black and white alike, who seek peaceful change. He is exactly the sort of individual with whom the South African Government should be engaged in dialog, rather than persecution.

The Senate must do all it can to encourage the Government of South Africa to enter into dialgo with moderate forces within that country so that positive action can be taken to bring an end to apartheid policies. This resolution on behalf of Dr. Nkomo, who is representative of thousands of similar victims currently detained under the state of emergency regulations, is a forceful statement in that regard. My hope is that it will have the broad support of Members of this body and win unanimous approval.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the resolution? If not, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 503) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. RES. 503

Whereas, Dr. Abby Nkomo, Chairman of the Atteridgeville,/Saulsville Civic Association, Vice Chairman of the Pretoria Council of Churches and an active member of the Methodist Church, has been detained by the South African police for an extended period without charge or trial;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo has been a vocal advocate of peaceful change in South Africa;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo has been in solitary confinement since his incarceration on June 12, 1986 and has been denied adequate medical attention including medication for diabetes;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo has been separated from his family and permitted infrequent visits by his wife during which the couple suffers harassment from prison guards;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo and his family have been harassed for more than twenty months, including the gasoline bombing of his home and car, the sabotage of the doctor's clinics, and telephone threats on their lives;

Whereas, the police have refused to investigate any of these threats or incidents;

Whereas, the police detained the doctor's daughter Suzan for 47 days and threatened his wife Marjorie with arrest:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Dr. Nkomo is representative of the majority of South Africans who seek peaceful change and with whom the South African government should be engaged in dialogue rather than persecution;

That the government of South Africa be encouraged to enter into dialogue with moderate forces within that country so that positive action can be taken to bring an end to apartheid policies;

That Dr. Nkomo has been subjected to an unreasonable and reprehensible deprivation of his civil rights;

That Dr. Nkomo is representative of thousands of similar victims currently detained under the state of emergency regulations;

That Dr. Nkomo's family has been the victim of continual, excessive harassment by the police authorities of South Africa causing severe emotional and financial loss;

EXTENSION OF SBA PILOT PROGRAM

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I send a bill to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator BUMPERS and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I shall not object. Mr. WEICKER and Senator BUMPERS have cleared this bill on this side of the aisle. We are ready to proceed. Therefore, I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2914) to extend through fiscal year 1988 SBA pilot programs under section 8 of the Small Business Act.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, the legislation before the Senate would extend through fiscal year 1988, two Small Business Administration [SBA] Pilot Procurement Programs, which are designed to enhance the SBA's ability to assist minority-owned firms. This legislation is identical to Title I of H.R. 2787, which was unanimously passed by both the House and Senate. Unfortunately, President Reagan, on October 7, 1986, vetoed H.R. 2787.

In his veto message, the President concentrated his remarks on title II of H.R. 2787, which authorized funding for a technology institute at the University of Bridgeport. Therefore, the pending legislation strikes title II of H.R. 2787 and simply reauthorizes these two important minority business development programs.

The principal program reauthorized by this legislation gives SBA the increased authority to select and reserve certain contracts from one agency designated by the President and to match that contract with a qualified minority-owned business. You might say it gives SBA additional clout to negotiate for quality contracts that foster business development. The administration argues that this authority is unnecessary, but the unanimous testimony of minority business owners at Small Business Committee hearings contradicted that point of view.

Under the regular 8(a) program, minority small business have traditionally received less sophisticated contracts, predominantly in service areas. The nature of the contracts offered to SBA by other agencies for the program has limited the growth potential for firms under the regular 8(a) program. The pilot authority was intended to give SBA authority to address that problem on a limited basis.

The pilot program was originally authorized in 1978. Since 1983 until it expired in 1985, the program operated in the Department of Transportation [DOT]. From testimony at committee hearings, I might add it has worked very well at DOT.

As I stated, each of the minority business owners who testified at committee hearings believed that without the existence of the pilot program their contract opportunity would not have been made available. According to Mr. Robert Jones of AMAF Industries, the pilot authority helps break some of the institutional resistance of procuring agencies to award quality contracts to minority businesses. As Mr. Jones stated,

> The pilot program is a countervailing force which alleviates the internal and external pressures not to make quality contracts available under the program.

In other words, the visibility and importance that Congress and the designated agency give to the program make the program work, even if SBA chooses not to use the additional clout provided under the law.

The second pilot program extended by this legislation is the Surety Bond Waiver Pilot Program. Under this authority the SBA can waive surety bonding requirements for section 8(a) startup firms, if certain other requirements are met. Again, this program is intended to give SBA a tool to help minority firms develop a track record and gain Government contracting experience. Since the program was originally authorized in 1978, SBA has never utilized this authority. Again, the administration has argued that it is unnecessary. Besides the fact that in this instance the administration has simply defied the will of Congress by refusing to test the concept, I am not persuaded by the argument that private surety companies will totally ignore actual performance on a previous job solely because it was done without a bond.

I would also point out that this legislation has been supported by the Latin American Manufacturers Association, the National Association of Minority Contracts, the National Federation of 8(a) Companies, and the Black Presidents' Roundtable—associations representing thousands of minority businesses.

Mr. President, this week, as proclaimed by the President, is "Minority Enterprise Development Week." Since Sunday, there have been celebrations here in Washington and around the Nation honoring the accomplishments and contributions of minority entrepreneurs to our Nation's economy. I am sure that a central question raised in many of the forums discussing issues of concern to minority businesses has been the role and commitment of the Federal Government to continuing the gains made over the past 15 years. It is unfortunate that the President has seen fit to veto reauthorization of these two modest programs. I believe it is important that we pass this legislation to give him another opportunity to reaffirm the Federal commitment to minority business development. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 2914

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) Subparagraph (B) of section 8(a)(1) of the Small Business Act is amended by striking out "(other than the Department of Defense or any component thereof)".

(b) The designation of an agency pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a) shall be made not later than sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. The last sentence of section 8(a)(1) of the Small Business Act is amended to read as follows: "No contract may be entered into under subparagraph (B) after September 30, 1988.".

SEC. 3. The last sentence of section 8(a)(2) is amended to read as follows: "The authority to waive bonds provided in this paragraph (2) may not be exercised after September 30, 1988.".

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, before I move to lay the motion on the table, I want to compliment the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. I think it is a reflection of the high esteem in which he is held in this body that he calls up a bill, introduces it, has it advanced to third reading, voted on, and passed and motion to reconsider made—and the motion to reconsider will, I assume, be tabled—all in the space of less than 5 minutes.

I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the distinguished minority leader, who has been a dear friend of mine in this body, for his kind remarks.

I also thank the ranking member of the Small Business Committee (Mr. BUMPERS) who has assisted in every way in making this action possible.

I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I thank the Chair.

ABUSE OF FEDERAL POWER

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I rise to speak against the raw and awesome power of the Federal agencies of the U.S. Government and about an abuse of that power that I truly believe led to the ultimate conviction in the lower court of Judge Harry Claiborne.

Mr. President, I rise today to speak for the opportunity, if not the basic right, of every American taxpayer to have the right to face an auditor of the Internal Revenue Service Civil Division to explain their tax return before criminal prosecution starts. Judge Claiborne did not have that opportunity. He was denied it.

Mr. President, I rise today to speak against what has become the accepted practice of arbitrarily and capriciously targeting individual citizens of our country, of intimidating witnesses in their trials, of forgiving past crimes to testify against particular people, of ensnaring individuals into crime or become Government bounty hunters.

This is not what our Government or our country must stand for. The framers of our Constitution never intended it this way. In fact, in their wisdom and in their vision, they made it possible, as in this particular instance of Judge Claiborne, for the legislative branch to have a check over the judicial branch of Government.

Our constitutional framers spoke eloquently to the majesty and to the strength of our American system when they permitted one Harry Claiborne to bring his case to the court of last resort, the U.S. Senate.

After sitting for days as a member of the impeachment committee, I have attempted to the best of my ability to fairly judge and determine the case of Harry Claiborne. I must admit to my colleagues that a month ago, I, like most Americans, wondered why we were giving him even the benefit of the doubt. As the weeks passed, after reading transcripts and listening to and observing witness after witness, I must say at this time, and during this day, that at least in my mind there was a reasonable doubt about his willfulness or his deliberate intent to defraud the Government.

But, Mr. President, there is no reasonable doubt in my mind about another aspect of this case, and that is the long arm of the U.S. Government and the abuse of power that ultimately led to Judge Claiborne's conviction.

I have concluded that he was targeted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in a very arbitrary and capricious manner. If we have any doubts about Judge Claiborne having been a target, then I ask these questions:

Why did our Government forgive $16 million in back income taxes to a criminal fugitive named Conforte to come back from Brazil and help make a case against Judge Claiborne?

Why did Harry Claiborne, unlike most other citizens, not have the opportunity to face an IRS audit in the civil division before criminal prosecution charges occurred?

Why did one IRS agent assigned to this sting operation of Harry Claiborne become so incensed and rebelled to the degree that he refused to participate, and ultimately was demoted and sent to another State?

Why was it that after administering a polygraph test to Harry Claiborne, a test which he passed, the polygraph operator, himself, became a target of intimidation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

What is going on in this country when we allow this sort of practice to occur?

In the Article of Impeachment No. III, we were asked by the managers to impeach from office Harry Claiborne. Why? Because, simply, he was convicted by a lower court and a jury.

My question concerning Article III this afternoon was, how was that conviction actually obtained?

Once again, I have concluded in my own mind that had Harry Claiborne not been a target of the Federal Government, had Harry Claiborne's accountant not been intimidated by the U.S. Government, had Harry Claiborne had the opportunity to submit all evidence into the lower court decision and trial, had an appeal en banc to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals been granted, I believe the case of Harry Claiborne might not have been before the U.S. Senate today.

No, Mr. President, I cannot, as one Senator or as one American, defend Harry Claiborne's abysmal tax return, especially for 1980.

No, I cannot defend his cashing checks at the casino and, no, I certainly cannot defend his Elmer Gantry type tax preparer. But especially, Mr. President, I cannot defend how this conviction was ultimately obtained.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation sent a special representative to Nevada by the name of Yablonsky. Mr. Yablonsky evidently was given the widest and unchecked latitude to headhunt in Nevada. He wanted someone big and someone important. Did he go after the drug lords? Did he go after the major crime figures? Did he go after the child pornographers? No. He went after Judge Claiborne, and allegedly he also wanted Senator LAXALT. He said he did not like LAXALT. I ask, is that the criteria our Federal Bureau of Investigation uses in going after someone?

I fear that there are too many Yablonsky's out there in this country, working for various agencies of government, who have become headhunters. They are unchecked. They are unbridled. They are people who arbitrarily and capriciously make these decisions which can suddenly bring to a crushing end the careers and lives of any American citizen they so choose.

The next Yablonsky may not like the names of people like MATSUNAGA or BOSCHWITZ or LAUTENBERG or Iaccoca or Smith or Jones. What happens then? Where do we install this system of checks, and when is our Government finally going to realize that these sorts of operations represent not the best but the worst within our system?

They set up Pete Williams. He was entrapped. They tried it on Senator PRESSLER. He smelled a rat.

The Claiborne conviction, Mr. President, is over. In my opinion, it is the fruit of the poisoned tree.

Judge Harry Claiborne has been found guilty. He has been impeached and removed from office, as I have said.

I hope that the resolution that I and other Members of this body will introduce within the next several hours, or certainly the next several days, calling for a full and total investigation of sting operations—how they are set up, how they are administered, and what checks and balances must be placed in that area of our system of Government—will certainly be passed by the great majority of this body.

Mr. President, we have seen a very sad day today, but I must say, also, that it has been a day when we have seen the majesty and the strength of our system work. I hope it worked well, and I hope it will be a lesson for us in the future, to make certain that such situations do not happen again.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AN INVESTIGATION IS NEEDED

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we have just finished a very historic event in the U.S. Senate; that is, the U.S. Senate has just sat as a court of impeachment and has removed a life-tenured Federal judge from office.

I have some thoughts that I would like to mention in a preliminary manner now, but I will develop and set them forth in a more succinct manner at a later date.

First, I think there is no question that most of the Members of the Senate feel that there should be an investigation by an appropriate committee pertaining to the possible overreaching by the executive branch into the judicial branch and an investigation into the procedure which has been called targeting.

I am not accusing the Executive Branch, the Department of Justice, the FBI or the Internal Revenue Service of improper targeting or of improper activity. But I feel that there is enough smoke to justify whether or not a fire exists.

We also had in recent years the Abscam incidents. It seems to me that if an appropriate committee of Congress investigates what potentially may have been an abuse of power in Nevada—it may not have been, I am not accusing anyone—but they should also take a look into Abscam.

I think that a vast number of the Members of Congress feel that a thorough investigation ought to be made and that we ought to look into both incidents and determine whether or not there was targeting. Further, we should determine whether the targeting was proper or not. I think we all know that sting operations by the Department of Justice are necessary and that they may have to operate in a certain manner to catch some serious violators of the law. I think we must bear in mind that if you are going to apprehend criminals, sometimes it is necessary for FBI agents and others to disguise themselves as being "gutter brothers" and get into the gutter with the criminals. On the other hand, there is the potential for overreaching, there is the potential that someone may be out to get someone and that proper due process is not allowed the targeted person. Therefore, I think a thorough investigation is needed to determine if proper due process was allowed in the above two cases.

Second, I believe that a 100-man jury is too cumbersome and is unworkable. I think that we ought to examine what the States have done relative to the judiciary and the removal from office of judges who have become corrupt.

Most of the States originally followed the Federal pattern if they had a bicameral system of legislation which established the Senate as being the court of impeachment, and required the House of Representatives to act as a grand jury, or the indicting body.

Many of the States found that this procedure presents numerous problems and, therefore, they adopted other methods. Some States have created judicial inquiry commissions which are very representative and have broad-based membership. The members come from the laity, the judiciary, and some members come from the lawyer ranks. The commission in effect serves as the investigating body and the indicting body. There is a separate mechanism, usually composed of something like 10 or 12 people that would be a court of the judiciary, or a judicial commission, which would determine the guilt or innocence of the accused under the articles of the indictment that would come from the judicial inquiry commission. Most of the States have found this procedure to be workable. It has been adopted in their constitutions, and has proved to be very effective. I am going to study the various systems that now prevail in the States and I am going to offer a constitutional amendment to alter the Federal pattern when we return in January at the start the 100th Congress.

I feel like we ought to explore alternatives. In my own home State of Alabama we adopted a different procedure from the Federal scheme. We have a court of the judiciary, and a judicial inquiry commission which serves as the grand jury. There are other systems in the States. I think we ought to study them all.

I think we ought to replace the procedure that we have because in my judgment a 100-man jury is too cumbersome and is unworkable. When Judge Claiborne was giving his argument or testimony here on the floor of the Senate, I counted the number of Senators, in attendance and there were 63 present. Thirty-seven were absent. I think it is very crucial that all Senators should have been in a position to hear what he said at that time.

I suppose that throughout the entire proceedings there could have been as many as 30 Senators that never heard a word of the argument. If we are to sit as a court of impeachment, I think it is necessary that each individual Senator hear the arguments, read the transcripts, read the briefs, and prepare. Because, in effect, we act as judges. And I feel our system is not effective, I think it is unworkable, and I think as we look to the future, we can expect many, many more instances of impeachment or proposed impeachment of members of the judiciary.

The judiciary has grown, and it is now in the neighborhood of around 1,000 judges. There is no question in my mind that there are some bad eggs, or bad apples in the barrel, and that we need to look at this now. But, at the same time, we must protect the independence of the judiciary.

Therefore, I say to the Members of the Senate, let us benefit from the experiences of the States who have experimented with other systems. Some of those procedures have been in existence for 30 or 40 years. I think we can profit from a study. In my judgment, we need to adopt a better forum by which a life-tenure judge is removed from office.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senator from Alabama like to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I will follow the Chair's suggestion, and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOSCHWITZ). Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate that there will be no votes this evening, but we will be in session tomorrow.

I have had a number of Senators make inquiries: "Are we going to have any votes tomorrow?" I really believe we will have two or more, but I cannot say that with certainty.

Reconciliation should be available tomorrow morning, and we would like to work out some way to resolve any outstanding issues on the drug bill and dispose of those two matters tomorrow.

There are other matters that I understand could require votes, and it may be that we can dispose of one or two of those.

So we will be in session tomorrow. I am almost certain there will be votes. There will be no votes before noon, but there could be votes starting at noon and continuing into the afternoon.

I hope we will be able to complete our work by early afternoon, but I have no assurance and have no control over whether or not that can be done.

CALENDAR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I inquire of the distinguished minority leader if he is in a position to pass or indefinitely postpone any of the following calendar items: Calendar Nos. 216, 592, 593, 775, 1027, 1067, 1068.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the first four items enumerated by the distinguished majority leader have been cleared for postponement on this side, and the three closing ones—1027, 1067, and 1068—are cleared for action on this side.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar items just identified, and that they be considered en bloc, and passed or indefinitely postponed en bloc, and that all committee-reported amendments be agreed to en bloc.

the PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INFORMATION AGE COMMISSION

[SEC. 12. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $3,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this Act.]

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I rise in support of legislation that Senator LAUTENBERG and I introduced last year, the Information Age Commission Act. The purpose of this bill is to create a forum for discussions on the present and future impact of computer and communications systems on our Nation and its citizens, and to present critical choices to the President, the Congress, and the public that will maximize the benefits of the "information age" to our society.

Mr. President, information systems of all kinds are playing an increasingly important and controlling role in our society. Sophisticated computer technology is being used routinely in business, education, government, and the military. It is being used in information storage, processing, management, and decisionmaking. Most of this technology was not even in the conceptual phase several years ago.

Furthermore, the introduction of additional information technology is driving social and economic changes. Most of these changes are benefiting our society and generally improving the quality of our lives. In the next few years, information technology will continue to undergo rapid development and will be applied to a growing number of activities. However, these technologies changes also appear to be rapidly outpacing the capability of our economic and legal system to respond.

To date, policy development regarding the "information age" has been a piecemeal effort, and generally reactive to situations that have come to our attention. For example, in the last Congress we adopted changes to the copyright laws for protecting computer chips. We adopted legislation, which I cosponsored with Senator TSONGAS, to provide assistance to small business in the areas of computer security and education; this legislation was the first of several "computer crime" bills adopted in the 98th Congress. We enacted several laws making it a crime to alter medical records or use a computer to obtain classified information.

Nevertheless, the 40 or so criminal laws which are on the books today, even coupled with the actions we took previously, are not sufficient to provide a firm basis for combating computer crime. Many States were not able to wait for the Federal Government, and have adopted their own set of laws on computer crime and security.

Mr. President, I will not take the time here to spell out the litany of congressional reports, executive agency actions, or private sector studies that demonstrate that fragmented nature of our "information age" policy, or the need for a comprehensive review of this issue. Suffice it to say that our current understanding of these issues, and our ability to respond, is neither adequate nor satisfactory.

We cannot continue to tackle these critical national issues in such a piecemeal fashion. In my view, it is worth the time and effort to take a step beyond our current reactive efforts and try to identify in advance those issues that need to be addressed at the national level. It is for this reason that the Information Age Commission Act is essential.

The Commission, to be composed of 23 members, will draw from government at all levels, industry, labor, education, and academia. Under the legislation, the Commission will conduct studies and analyses of the "information age" that will include the efforts and resources needed to:

First, maximize the benefit to society of computer and communications systems; second, maintain the lead of the United States in the world information marketplace; third, educate and reeducate our people; fourth, assess the impact of computers and communications systems on our national security, labor, and employment; and fifth, encourage technological innovations.

The Commission is to complete its work within 2 years and then submit its final report to the Congress and the President. I would hope that there would be interim reports as necessary when the Commission identifies critical issues which Congress or the Executive should immediately address.

We have purposely structured the Commission to select the best resources that are available within and outside the Federal Government. For example, we have specifically included the Secretaries of Commerce, Defense, and Education as members of the Commission. Each of these departments are directly and significantly affected by the use of computers and communications systems, and each has a critical role in any comprehensive solution to the problems of the "information age."

Of the public members, we have specified that at least three representatives be drawn from the information industry, labor, and academe. This will ensure that each of these perspectives are made available to the Commission for its deliberations. In fact, under the terms of the bill, the non-Federal members of the Commission have a majority of the votes on the Commission. We believe that such broad participation will enable the Commission to conduct its work with a diverse perspective that can only strengthen the product of its labors and lend credibility to its effort.

Mr. President, the $3 million authorization in the original bill Senator LAUTENBERG and I introduced has been deleted. In my view this $3 million authorization represented a modest commitment by the Federal Government to the important work of the Commission. In light of the serious budgetary constraints which exist at the Federal level, I believe this was all that could reasonably have been allocated to this function at this time.

However, in an effort to move this legislation through the Governmental Affairs Committee, I complied with Chairman ROTH's request to strike the funding provision from the bill. It is my understanding that private industry has agreed to underwrite the work of the Commission.

While the private sector is expected to make a significant contribution to the work of the Commission, Government participation is essential to provide a balance against protective or biased action by industry. Federal responsibilities in the areas of national security, trade policy, and education will broaden and complement the private sector perspective.

Mr. President, in the development of this legislative proposal, we have been working with many of the "information age" industry associations and companies. The Association of Data Processing Service Organizations [ADAPSO] has been particularly helpful in framing this issue and assisting me in developing the outlines of this legislation. However, this bill is not, and cannot be, a competitive proposal, with one group or company or type of technology seeking to use this Commission for its own purposes.

While this legislation is the culmination of substantial time and effort, it is also the beginning of a long, arduous process that we as a nation must undertake if we are to adequately deal with the complexities and multifaceted nature of our computer and communications society. But we cannot delay the process much longer. Upon enactment of this bill, I look forward to working with the Commission to provide answers to questions that have, thus far, in my view, received far too little attention.

Mr. President, identical legislation, H.R. 5515, has been introduced and cosponsored by Representatives GEORGE BROWN of California, and PAT SWINDALL and DOUG BARNARD both of Georgia. I am hopeful that in the little time remaining in the current session of Congress, this measure will be approved in the House so that the Information Age Commission's important work can begin without further delay.

I urge adoption of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ARTHUR R. MARSHALL LOXAHATCHEE NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 511) to change the name of the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge, FL, to the Arthur R. Marshall Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the Senate is now acting on legislation I introduced to honor an individual who has contributed greatly to the enhancement and protection of my State's natural resources.

S. 511, as reported by the Environment and Public Works Committee, renames the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge in south Florida after Arthur R. Marshall. Art's academic work and personal efforts in the field of environmental protection have had tremendous impact on south Florida's ecosystem, particularly the everglades.

The Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge is, in fact, a small portion of the Florida Everglades and is one of the largest freshwater marshes on the North American continent. It is fitting, therefore, that this particular refuge bear the name of Arthur Marshall.

Art Marshall is highly regarded as an early champion of theories regarding the impact of growth on south Florida's natural system. He designed and advocated policies aimed at restoring the everglades system to permit the sheet flow of water across them, as once had occurred naturally.

He supported acquiring lands now known as the Big Cypress National Preserve, an area purchased by the Federal Government in order to ensure protected sheet flow of water necessary for the survival and livelihood of Everglades National Park.

Art Marshall was a pioneer in environmental conservation and has justly earned the respect and recognition of major environmental organizations in the State of Florida. He served as advisor to three Florida Governors and worked for 15 years for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in south Florida.

Art felt the protection of our south Florida ecosystem was worth fighting for. He waged one conservation battle after another and was fortunate to see many of his ideas and initiatives put into constructive action. Art died on February 18. His death will be a loss to the fighters of conservation battles yet to be waged. It is highly appropriate that an example of the habitat and natural systems he worked so diligently to preserve bear his name.

For this reason, I am pleased the Senate is acting on legislation to rename the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge in honor of the contributions of Arthur R. Marshall.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 511

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge, in the State of Florida, shall hereafter be known and designated as the "Arthur R. Marshall Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge". Any reference in any law, regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States to such wildlife refuge, shall be held and considered to be a reference to the "Arthur R. Marshall Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

(d) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to amend, modify or otherwise affect the Secretary's duties under the National Environmental Policy Act, or the Forest and Rangelands Renewable Resources Planning Act as amended by the National Forest Management Act, including his duties to involve the public in his decisionmaking and planning for the national forests.

RELEASE OF RESTRICTIONS ON CERTAIN AIRPORT LAND

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1000, S. 2852, dealing with the Peninsula Airport Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2852) to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to release restrictions on the use of certain property conveyed to the Peninsula Airport Commission, Virginia, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3265

(Purpose: To provide that the release of the use of certain property conveyed to the Peninsula Airport Commission, Virginia, be subject to certain conditions.)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator TRIBLE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. TRIBLE, proposes an amendment numbered 3265.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, add after line 21 the following new paragraphs:

(3) Any release granted by the Secretary of Transportation under subsection (a) of this section may not apply to more than 7.5 acres of real property.

(4) The Peninsula Airport Commission may not lease or convey any interest in any of the property which the United States conveyed to such Commission by the deed described in subsection (a), to any person or business concern other than the city of Newport News, Virginia.

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, the Peninsula Airport Commission which operates the Patrick Henry Airport in Newport News, VA, would like to grant a right-of-way to the city of Newport News for the construction of a public road that would provide access to a presently unusable tract of airport land. In addition the public road would serve a planned residential and commercial project adjacent to the airport property. In return for the right-of-way the public road and other improvements will be built by the developer of the adjacent project at no cost to the airport commission. The developer will also deed other adjacent land to the commission for airport use.

The current airport deed restricts land use to airport purposes. The Federal Aviation Administration cannot grant this right-of-way without legislative action, they lack the administrative flexibility under the Federal Airport Act which allowed the United States to transfer the property in 1947.

This is a local issue that can best be handled by the FAA and the Peninsula Airport Commission. The amendment to S. 2852 protects the public interest in the airport property by limiting the total amount of land that can be used for the right-of-way and by requiring that the grantee of the right-of-way be the city of Newport News, VA.

Mr. President, I believe that this measure has been cleared on both sides. Therefore I move the adoption of the amendment and the passage of S. 2852 as amended, and thank my colleagues for their support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3265) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 2852

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) notwithstanding section 16 of the Federal Airport Act (as in effect on May 14, 1947), the Secretary of Transportation is authorized, subject to section 4 of the Act of October 1, 1949 (50 U.S.C. App. 1622c) and subsection (b) of this section, to grant releases from any of the terms, conditions, reservations, and restrictions contained in the deed of conveyance dated May 14, 1947, under which the United States conveyed certain property in Newport News, and York County, Virginia, to the Peninsula Airport Commission for airport purposes.

(b) Any release granted by the Secrectary of Transportation under subsection (a) of this section shall be subject to the following conditions—

(1) The Peninsula Airport Commission shall agree that in leasing or conveying any interest in the property which the United States conveyed to such Commission by the deed described in subsection (a), the Commission will receive an amount for such interest which is equal to the fair lease value or the fair market value, as the case may be (as determined pursuant to regulations issued by the Secretary).

(2) Any amount so received by the Peninsula Airport Commission shall be used by the Commission for the development, improvement, operation, or maintenance of a public airport.

(3) Any release granted by the Secretary of Transportation under subsection (a) of this section may not apply to more than 7.5 acres of real property.

(4) The Peninsula Airport Commission may not lease or convey any interest in any of the property which the United States conveyed to such Commission by the deed described in subsection (a), to any person or business concern other than the City of Newport News, Virginia.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 1001, H.R. 5379, the House companion bill, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar No. 943, H.R. 2205, the Korean War Veterans Memorial.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2205) to authorize the American Battle Monuments Commission to establish a memorial to honor members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in the Korean conflict.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

(1) recommending the site and selecting the design for the memorial, subject to the approval of the American Battle Monuments Commission and in accordance with section 7(a) of H.R. 4378, as approved by the Senate on September 10, 1986; and

(2) promoting the establishment of the memorial and encouraging the donation of private funds for the construction and maintenance of the memorial.

FEDERAL AUTHORIZATION AND PRIVATE FUNDING

SEC. 3. (a) The American Battle Monuments Commission shall establish the memorial with private funds except as provided in subsection (b) of this section. For the purpose of carrying out this Act, the American Battle Monuments Commission is authorized to solicit and accept private contributions. The Commission is directed to establish an account into which these private funds shall deposited and to maintain documentation of such contributions.

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated:

(1) $500,000 for site preparation, design, planning and associated administrative costs for the establishment of the memorial; and

(2) $500,000 for construction of the memorial, to be available only after a construction permit has been issued for the memorial.

(c) Private funds donated in excess of the cost of construction and maintenance of the memorial shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts to reimburse the United States for funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (b) of this section.

AMENDMENT NO. 3266

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the committee substitute to the desk on behalf of Senator MCCLURE and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. MCCLURE, proposes an amendment numbered 3266.

On page 3, line 5, of H.R. 2205 as reported by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, strike "Senate on September 10, 1986 (S. Rept. 99-421)" and insert in lieu thereof "House of Representatives on September 29, 1986".

On page 3, line 20, of H.R. 2205 as reported by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, strike "Senate on September 10, 1986" and insert in lieu thereof "House of Representatives on September 29, 1986".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3266) was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to see the Korean War Veterans Memorial Act finally come before the full Senate. This legislation would authorize the erection of a memorial to honor those members of the U.S. Armed Forces who so bravely and honorably served more than three decades ago, without reservation, in the struggle against the Communist threat to the country of South Korea. This is legislation which I have supported and advocated for quite some time. With this in mind, it gives me even greater pleasure to rise in support of this act.

Mr. President, on that day in June 1950 when the Communist forces of North Korea invaded South Korea, the people of the United States were outraged. Shortly after that, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China joined North Korea in its attempt to lay the cloak of communism over the people of South Korea. It soon became obvious that the free people of South Korea could not alone, even with their vast determination, withstand the surge from the North.

It was at this time that President Truman, honoring his commitment to South Korea, authorized U.S. combat support of what we may call the Korean freedom fighters; and entered, along with 16 other nations, into the Korean war. And, Mr. President, that is exactly what it was—war. Time and time again, we have heard this war called a "conflict" or a "police action." But it was war, Mr. President.

For 3 long years, brave American men and women gave of their all in a fierce struggle for freedom. What is more, these heroic men and women gave of their all for the freedom of the people of another country. They did this because they believed in the institution of liberty for all. The most accurate figures show that nearly 6 million Americans served in the Korean war. Of those, close to 5,000 were captured or missing in action. More than 100,000 were wounded and close to 55,000 paid the supreme sacrifice, giving their lives to the cause of freedom.

Mr. President, there are close to 90,000 Korean war veterans in my home State of Alabama. Many of these have spoken to me personally concerning the absence of a Korean war memorial in Washington. Others have either written or phoned, asking for something to be done about this indiscretion. There is a monument in this city honoring the veterans of every other war in which the United States has been engaged; but there is no memorial honoring the brave American veterans of the Korean war. Mr. President, the time for something to be done about this is long overdue.

This legislation would do just that. The Korean War Veterans Memorial Act would justly honor those brave men and women of the U.S. Armed Forces who so unselfishly gave of themselves when freedom was in need.

Mr. President, I urge speedy passage of this act.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of S. 1223 introduced by my distinguished colleague from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG,] I rise as a strong supporter of this legislation as amended.

This memorial is long overdue. Our Nation's veterans of the Korean war deserve this recognition for having fought successfully under extremely harsh conditions.

As a Korean war veteran myself, serving with the U.S. Marine Corps, I experienced firsthand the adversities that confronted our troops. From 1950 to 1952, I served as a first lieutenant and communications officer with the First Marine Air Wing.

Our soldiers, sailors, marines, and airmen, together with the troops of other United Nations countries, fought valiantly, honorably and successfully to stop the advance of communism in Asia.

From Pusan to the Yalu River, in summer heat and arctic cold, almost always outnumbered and—in the beginning—ill-equipped, our men wrote a shining chapter of valor in the long history of the U.S. Armed Forces.

Their reward was not victory parades, but, unfortunately, public indifference and confusion at America's first "limited" war.

The memorial the Senate authorizes today is a belated step toward giving our Korean war veterans the honor they so richly deserve.

Their true monument, of course, is a free and prosperous South Korea, a strong ally of the United States and a bastion of freedom in the Far East.

To paraphrase Sir Christopher Wren's memorial in St. Paul's Cathedral in London, "If you would see their monument, look around you."

Nevertheless, it is fitting and proper that we should, before the Korean war fades from the national memory, recognize the bravery and sacrifice of our Armed Forces in a tangible form in the Nation's Capital.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, as we take up the Korean War Memorial bill, I am proud to rise as a cosponsor of this important and long overdue legislation.

For over three decades since the conclusion of the Korean war, our recognition of the tremendous sacrifices and ultimate triumph of our Korean war veterans has, I believe, been incomplete. Nearly 6 million Americans served in that 3-year conflict and 54,000 paid the ultimate price, yet in our Nation's Capital we have erected no memorial to their noble service.

I visited the Republic of Korea last winter and found a thriving nation that itself stands as the greatest living monument to the American veterans of the Korean war. Every visitor to that country can see what our American heroes won in battle: they won a future of freedom and prosperity for 40 million people who otherwise would have been doomed to a life of oppression, poverty, and unrelieved suffering. And they won for America the lasting and palpable gratitude of the Korean people and nation.

Today, in authorizing the construction in Washington, DC, of a national memorial to the American veterans of the Korean war, we are acting to build a tangible symbol of the respect, admiration, and gratitude that up to now has been inadequately expressed, but that has lived within our hearts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended, in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the committee amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 2205) as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read "An Act to authorize the erection of a memorial on Federal land in the District of Columbia and its environs to honor members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in the Korean War.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL LEASES IN THE EL PORTAL ADMINISTRATIVE SITE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar No. 764, H.R. 1390, dealing with the Yosemite National Park.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1390) to authorize additional long-term leases in the El Portal administrative site adjacent to Yosemite National Park, California, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following with amendments, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant long-term leases with respect to lands in the El Portal administrative site adjacent to Yosemite National Park, California, and for other purposes", approved July 21, 1968 (82 Sat. 393; 16 U.S.C. 47-2), is amended—

(1) by striking out "fifty-five years to any operator of concession facilities in the park, or its successor for purposes of providing employee housing.", in the first sentence of the first section and inserting in lieu thereof "not to exceed ninty-nine years to any individual, including an employee of the United States Government, to any operator of concession facilities in the park, or the administrative site, or its successor, or to any public or private corporation or organization (including a nonprofit corporation) for purposes of providing employee housing, community facilities, administrative offices, maintenance facilities, and commercial services.";

(2) by striking out "the concessioner may sublease the property to its employees" in the second sentence of the first section and inserting in lieu thereof "if the lessee is a concessioner, corporation, or other organization (including a nonprofit corporation) such lessee may sublease the property to its employees, employees of the United States Government, or other individuals whose residence on the leased premises is solely in support of Yosemite National Park or the El Portal administrative site,";

(3) in the proviso to the first section by striking out "an annual", inserting a period after "him", and deleting the remainder of the sentence; and

(4) by redesignating "SEC. 2." as "SEC. 3." and inserting the following new section after the first section:

"SEC. 2. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the proceeds from any leases issued by the Secretary pursuant to the first section of this Act may be credited to the appropriation bearing the cost of administering (directly or by contract) the leases and of constructing, improving, and maintaining roads, utilities, buildings, and other facilities within the El Portal administrative site. In the administration of the leases, the Secretary may contract for the management of the leases and of the leased premises, subject to such terms and conditions, including the right of the Secretary to purchase and sell the unexpired terms of leases and subleases, as will protect the interests of the United States. The Secretary may also contract for the use by him of any improvements to leased property for purposes of the El Portal administrative site or for purposes of Yosemite National Park, and he may use the proceeds from any leases for the purpose of making payments under any such contract.

"(b) The Secretary may at any time acquire the unexpired term of any lease or sublease issued or entered into pursuant to this Act by purchase with funds available from the proceeds of leases, or with donated or appropriated funds, or by donation or exchange."; and

(5) by adding at the end thereof the following new [section:] sections:

"SEC. 4. After the date of enactment of this section, no lease may be issued for the purpose of providing housing or other facilities in the El Portal administrative site except in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior. Such regulations shall establish the qualifications of natural persons and corporations who may be eligible to acquire a lease and a sublease, and they shall set forth the circumstances under which the Secretary may elect to acquire any unexpired lease or sublease. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3267

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator MCCLURE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] for Mr. MCCLURE, proposes an amendment numbered 3267.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 4, line 12, after the word "sublease," insert the following:

"the process to be used in establishing fees for such leases and subleases,".

On page 6, line one, delete "Sec. 6." and insert in lieu thereof: "SEC. 2.".

On page 6, after line 7, add the following new section 3:

"SEC. 3. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior shall, within six months of the enactment of this Act, complete the exchange of all lands in four isolated federal parcels within the boundaries of Inks Creek Ranch, Tehama County, California, as described in Exhibit A of the July 25, 1986, letter of intent to exchange issued by the District Manager, Ukiah District Office, Bureau of Land Management.".

The amendment (No. 3267) was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Energy Committee for successfully completing action on the bill before us, H.R. 1390. It will go a long way toward relieving the congested housing situation in Yosemite Valley, and thereby help to enhance the natural setting within the park.

The only question I have with regard to the committee's action on this bill relates to the intent of section 4. My reading of this section suggests to me that the Secretary is directed to allow for the full participation of the affected community and park employees in the writing of the regulations that will govern leases issued for the purpose of providing housing or other facilities in the El Portal administrative site.

Would the distinguished chairman of the Energy Committee state for the record whether my interpretation of section 4 of the bill is correct?

Mr. MCCLURE. I am happy to respond to my friend from California and would like to assure him that it is the intent of the committee that the Secretary will make every reasonable effort to solicit input from affected employees and residents during the period in which the regulations relating to the making of leases are being drafted.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the chairman for clarifying this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 1390) as amended, was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL COMMISSION TO PREVENT INFANT MORTALITY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 1028, S. 1209, to establish the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1209) to establish the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Governmental Affairs, with amendments, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares that:

(1) The United States ranked seventeenth in the world in 1982 with an infant mortality rate of eleven and two-tenths deaths per thousand live births, a higher rate than many developed nations of the world.

(2) The infant mortality rate in some areas of the United States is twice the national rate.

(3) The main cause of a high infant mortality rate is low birthweight. Some 6.7 per centum of all infants born in the United States are of low birthweight.

(4) Inadequate prenatal care is associated with an increased risk of low birthweight. Some twenty-five percent of all pregnant women in the United States do not begin prenatal care until after the first three months of pregnancy, if at all.

(5) In certain areas throughout the United States, there exist barriers to medical services, nutritional support, educational opportunities, and financial support for adequate health care for pregnant mothers and infants. The absence of needed support services during prenatal care, labor and delivery, and post-partum care through the age of one year contributes substantially to a high national infant mortality rate.

(6) Our Nation, which benefits from many diverse governmental and private resources, has a patchwork, uncoordinated, and little understand approach to the delivery of services associated with preventing infant mortality.

(7) The Congress and the President can act to prevent infant mortality and the incidence of low birthweight infants by establishing a commission by law, whose purpose shall be to address respective governmental and private roles in the delivery of services associated with preventing infant mortality, and to recommend actions designed to change and improve the Nation's comprehensive approach to this national problem.

DEFINITION

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act, the term "infant mortality" refers to the number of infants born alive but who die before their first birthday.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL COMMISSION

SEC. 4. (a) To accomplish the purpose set forth in section 2 of this Act there is established the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b) The Commission shall be composed of fifteen members, as follows:

(1) Two members of the Senate, one to be selected by the majority leader of the Senate, the other to be selected by the minority leader of the Senate.

(2) Two members of the House, one to be selected by the Speaker of the House, the other to be selected by the minority leader of the House.

(3) Three members from representatives of State and local government; to be selected by the President and no more than two of whom shall be members of the same political party. One shall be a Governor; one shall be a State legislator; and one shall be a representative of local government.

(4) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall be a member.

(5) The Comptroller General of the United States shall be a member.

(6) Six at large members, with demonstrated expertise in maternal and child health, shall be jointly selected by the majority leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

(c) The Commission shall select a Chairperson and Vice Chairperson from among its members.

(d) Eight members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may hold hearings.

(e) The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairperson.

(f) Members shall be appointed for the life of the Commission. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

(B) the effectiveness of current Federal and State policies under the Medicaid Program to ensure adequate access to prenatal and postnatal care for low-income pregnant women and mothers;

(C) the role of income maintenance and other programs that impact infant mortality such as Aid to Families With Dependent Children and Federal housing subsidies; and

(D) the adequacy of current Federal and State efforts to enable an appropriate distribution of properly trained health care professionals to provide comprehensive maternal and child health services.

(2) Identify current financial, intergovernmental, and within the Federal Government, interagency barriers to the health care needed to prevent high infant mortality.

(3) Review recommendations made in recent regional and national reports that promote the health status of childbearing women and their infants and carry forward such recommendations as deemed appropriate.

(b) The Commission shall—

(1) recommend a national policy designed to change and improve the current approach to preventing infant [mortality. Such recommendations shall include] mortality, including recommendations concerning appropriate roles for the Federal Government, States, local governments, and private institutions;

(2) recommend to the Congress and the President what specific changes are needed within Federal laws and Federal programs to achieve an effective Federal role in preventing infant mortality; and

INTERFERENCE TO THE BROADCASTS OF VOICE OF AMERICA AND RFE/RL, INCORPORATED

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 391, dealing with the Voice of America, now being held at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on August 12, 1986, Senators HATCH, DIXON, LAXALT, RIEGLE, HATFIELD, and I submitted Senate Concurrent Resolution 160, expressing the sense of Congress that the jamming of radio broadcasting is contrary to the best interests of the people of the world and should be terminated, and urging the President to try to negotiate an end to this practice with the Soviet Union. Our resolution has 21 cosponsors.

Most of those who cosponsored our concurrent resolution also signed a letter to Mr. Charles Z. Wick, Director of the United States Information Agency, urging him to use his good offices to increase awareness of Soviet jamming and the ill will it creates internationally. This letter was sent to coincide with the sixth anniversary of the resumption of Soviet jamming of the Voice of America on August 20, 1986.

The House of Representatives passed a slightly different version, House Concurrent Resolution 391, which calls on Poland and Czechoslovakia, in addition to the U.S.S.R., to cease jamming Western radio broadcasts, with special reference to the Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, and Radio Liberty. I am pleased to join with my colleagues today in bringing up House Concurrent Resolution 391 for Senate consideration, because I believe that this measure will go a long way to expressing Senate dissatisfaction with Soviet and East European jamming practices.

These harmful activities set back East-West dialog and lead us away from understanding each other's concerns. We are not trying to propagandize. Our radios inform. They get out the news where none exists. They present a variety of Western views on issues of concern to the people of the Soviet Bloc. I hope that General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev realizes just how counterproductive his jamming practices are, and that an agreement can be concluded soon on removing this barrier between the people of East and West.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the concurrent resolution?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 391) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES ACT OF 1986

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 2032.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill (H.R. 2032) entitled "An Act to amend the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to provide improved protection for investors in the government securities market, and for other purposes", with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the aforesaid amendment, insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE AND FINDINGS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Government Securities Act of 1986".

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that transactions in government securities are affected with a public interest which makes it necessary—

(1) to provide for the integrity, stability, and efficiency of such transactions and of matters and practices related thereto;

(2) to impose adequate regulation of government securities brokers and government securities dealers generally; and

(3) to require appropriate financial responsibility, recordkeeping, reporting, and related regulatory requirements; in order to protect investors and to insure the maintenance of fair, honest, and liquid markets in such securities.

TITLE I—GOVERNMENT SECURITIES BROKERS AND DEALERS

SEC. 101. ESTABLISHMENT OF GOVERNMENT SECURITIES REGULATORY AUTHORITY.

The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (hereafter in this title referred to as "the Act") is amended by inserting after section 15B (15 U.S.C. 78o-4) the following new section:

"GOVERNMENT SECURITIES BROKERS AND DEALERS

"SEC. 15C. (a)(1)(A) It shall be unlawful for any government securities broker or government securities dealer (other than a registered broker or dealer or a financial institution) to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to effect any transaction in, or to induce or attempt to induce the purchase or sale of, any government security unless such government securities broker or government securities dealer is registered in accordance with paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(B)(i) It shall be unlawful for any government securities broker or government securities dealer that is a registered broker or dealer or a financial institution to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to effect any transaction in, or to induce or attempt to induce the purchase or sale of, any government security unless such government securities broker or government securities dealer has filed with the appropriate regulatory agency written notice that it is a government securities broker or government securities dealer. When a government securities broker or government securities dealer ceases to act as such it shall file with the appropriate regulatory agency a written notice that it is no longer acting as a government securities broker or government securities dealer.

"(ii) Such notices shall be in such form and contain such information concerning a government securities broker or government securities dealer that is a financial institution and any persons associated with such government securities broker or government securities dealer as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall, by rule, after consultation with each appropriate regulatory agency (including the Commission), prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Such notices shall be in such form and contain such information concerning a government securities broker or government securities dealer that is a registered broker or dealer and any persons associated with such government securities broker or government securities dealer as the Commission shall, by rule, prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"(iii) Each appropriate regulatory agency (other than the Commission) shall make available to the Commission the notices which have been filed with it under this subparagraph, and the Commission shall maintain and make available to the public such notices and the notices it receives under this subparagraph.

"(2) A government securities broker or a government securities dealer subject to the registration requirement of paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection may be registered by filing with the Commission an application for registration in such form and containing such information and documents concerning such government securities broker or government securities dealer and any persons associated with such government securities broker or government securities dealer as the Commission, by rule, may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Within 45 days of the date of filing of such application (or within such longer period as to which the applicant consents), the Commission shall—

"(i) by order grant registration, or

"(ii) institute proceedings to determine whether registration should be denied. Such proceedings shall include notice of the grounds for denial under consideration and opportunity for hearing and shall be concluded within 120 days of the date of the filing of the application for registration. At the conclusion of such proceedings, the Commission, by order, shall grant or deny such registration. The Commission may extend the time for the conclusion of such proceedings for up to 90 days if it finds good cause for such extension and publishes its reasons for so finding or for such longer period as to which the applicant consents.

The Commission shall grant the registration of a government securities broker or a government securities dealer if the Commission finds that the requirements of this section are satisfied. The Commission shall deny such registration if it does not make such a finding or if it finds that if the applicant were so registered, its registration would be subject to suspension or revocation under subsection (c) of this section.

"(3) Any provision of this title (other than section 5 or paragraph (1) of this subsection) which prohibits any act, practice, or course of business if the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce is used in connection therewith shall also prohibit any such act, practice, or course of business by any government securities broker or government securities dealer registered or having filed notice under paragraph (1) of this subsection or any person acting on behalf of such government securities broker or government securities dealer, irrespective of any use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce in connection therewith.

"(4) The Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Secretary'), by rule or order, upon the Secretary's own motion or upon application, may conditionally or unconditionally exempt any government securities broker or government securities dealer, or class of government securities brokers or government securities dealers, from any provision of subsection (a), (b), or (d) of this section or the rules thereunder, if the Secretary finds that such exemption is consistent with the public interest, the protection of investors, and the purposes of this title.

"(b)(1) The Secretary shall propose and adopt rules to effect the purposes of this title with respect to transactions in government securities effected by government securities brokers and government securities dealers as follows:

"(A) Such rules shall provide safeguards with respect to the financial responsibility and related practices of government securities brokers and government securities dealers including, but not limited to, capital adequacy standards, the acceptance of custody and use of customers' securities, the carrying and use of customers' deposits or credit balances, and the transfer and control of government securities subject to repurchase agreements and in similar transactions.

"(B) Such rules shall require every government securities broker and government securities dealer to make reports to and furnish copies of records to the appropriate regulatory agency, and to file with the appropriate regulatory agency, annually or more frequently, a balance sheet and income statement certified by an independent public accountant, prepared on a calendar or fiscal year basis, and such other financial statements (which shall, as the Secretary specifies, be certified) and information concerning its financial condition as required by such rules.

"(C) Such rules shall require records to be made and kept by government securities brokers and government securities dealers and shall specify the periods for which such records shall be preserved.

"(2) Rules promulgated and orders issued under this section shall—

"(A) be designed to prevent fraudulent and manipulative acts and practices and to protect the integrity, liquidity, and efficiency of the market for government securities, investors, and the public interest; and

"(B) not be designed to permit unfair discrimination between customers, issuers, government securities brokers, or government securities dealers, or to impose any burden on competition not necessary or appropriate in furtherance of the purposes of this title.

"(3) In promulgating rules and issuing orders under this section, the Secretary—

"(A) may appropriately classify government securities brokers and government securities dealers (taking into account relevant matters, including types of business done, nature of securities other than government securities purchased or sold, and character of business organization) and persons associated with government securities brokers and government securities dealers;

"(B) may determine, to the extent consistent with paragraph (2) of this subsection and with the public interest, the protection of investors, and the purposes of this title, not to apply, in whole or in part, certain rules under this section, or to apply greater, lesser, or different standards, to certain classes of government securities brokers, government securities dealers, or persons associated with government securities brokers or government securities dealers;

"(C) shall consider the sufficiency and appropriateness of then existing laws and rules applicable to government securities brokers, government securities dealers, and persons associated with government securities brokers and government securities dealers; and

"(D) shall consult with and consider the views of the Commission and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, except where the Secretary determines that an emergency exists requiring expeditious or summary action and publishes its reasons for such determination.

"(4) If the Commission or the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System comments in writing on a proposed rule of the Secretary that has been published for comment, the Secretary shall respond in writing to such written comment before approving the proposed rule.

"(5) No government securities broker or government securities dealer shall make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to effect any transaction in, or to induce or attempt to induce the purchase or sale of, any government security in contravention of any rule under this section.

"(c)(1) With respect to any government securities broker or government securities dealer registered or required to register under subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section—

"(A) The Commission, by order, shall censure, place limitations on the activities, functions, or operations of, suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months, or revoke the registration of such government securities broker or government securities dealer, if it finds, on the record after notice and opportunity for hearing, that such censure, placing of limitations, suspension, or revocation is in the public interest and that such government securities broker or government securities dealer, or any person associated with such government securities broker or government securities dealer (whether prior or subsequent to becoming so associated), has committed or omitted any act or omission enumerated in subparagraph (A), (D), or (E) of paragraph (4) of section 15(b) of this title, has been convicted of any offense specified in subparagraph (B) of such paragraph (4) within 10 years of the commencement of the proceedings under this paragraph, or is enjoined from any action, conduct, or practice specified in subparagraph (C) of such paragraph (4).

"(B) Pending final determination whether registration of any government securities broker or government securities dealer shall be revoked, the Commission, by order, may suspend such registration, if such suspension appears to the Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, to be necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Any registered government securities broker or registered government securities dealer may, upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may deem necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors, withdraw from registration by filing a written notice of withdrawal with the Commission. If the Commission finds that any registered government securities broker or registered government securities dealer is no longer in existence or has ceased to do business as a government securities broker or government securities dealer, the Commission, by order, shall cancel the registration of such government securities broker or government securities dealer.

"(C) The Commission, by order, shall censure or place limitations on the activities or functions of any person associated, or seeking to become associated, with a government securities broker or government securities dealer registered or required to register under subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section or suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months or bar any such person from being associated with such a government securities broker or government securities dealer, if the Commission finds, on the record after notice and opportunity for hearing, that such censure, placing of limitations, suspension, or bar is in the public interest and that such person has committed or omitted any act or omission enumerated in subparagraph (A), (D), or (E) of paragraph (4) of section 15(b) of this title, has been convicted of any offense specified in subparagraph (B) of such paragraph (4) within 10 years of the commencement of the proceedings under this paragraph, or is enjoined from any action, conduct, or practice specified in subparagraph (C) of such paragraph (4).

"(2)(A) With respect to any government securities broker or government securities dealer which is not registered or required to register under subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, the appropriate regulatory agency for such government securities broker or government securities dealer may, in the manner and for the reasons specified in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection, censure, place limitations on the activities, functions, or operations of, suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months, or bar from acting as a government securities broker or government securities dealer any such government securities broker or government securities dealer, and may sanction any person associated with such government securities broker or government securities dealer in the manner and for the reasons specified in paragraph (1)(C) of this subsection.

"(B) In addition, where applicable, such appropriate regulatory agency may, in accordance with section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1818), section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464), or section 407 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730), enforce compliance by such government securities broker or government securities dealer or any person associated with such government securities broker or government securities dealer with the provisions of this section and the rules thereunder.

"(C) For purposes of subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, any violation of any such provision shall constitute adequate basis for the issuance of any order under section 8(b) or 8(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, section 5(d)(2) or 5(d)(3) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, or section 407(e) or 407(f) of the National Housing Act, and the customers of any such government securities broker or government securities dealer shall be deemed, respectively, 'depositors' as that term is used in section 8(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 'savings account holders' as that term is used in section 5(d)(3) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, or 'insured members' as that term is used in section 407(f) of the National Housing Act.

"(D) Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to affect in any way the powers of such appropriate regulatory agency to proceed against such government securities broker or government securities dealer under any other provision of law.

"(E) Each appropriate regulatory agency (other than the Commission) shall promptly notify the Commission after it has imposed any sanction under this paragraph on a government securities broker or government securities dealer, or a person associated with a government securities broker or government securities dealer, and the Commission shall maintain, and make available to the public, a record of such sanctions and any sanctions imposed by it under this subsection.

"(3) It shall be unlawful for any person as to whom an order entered pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection suspending or barring him from being associated with a government securities broker or government securities dealer is in effect willfully to become, or to be, associated with a government securities broker or government securities dealer without the consent of the appropriate regulatory agency, and it shall be unlawful for any government securities broker or government securities dealer to permit such a person to become, or remain, a person associated with it without the consent of the appropriate regulatory agency, if such government securities broker or government securities dealer knew, or, in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, of such order.

"(d)(1) All records of a government securities broker or government securities dealer are subject at any time, or from time to time, to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by representatives of the appropriate regulatory agency for such government securities broker or government securities dealer as such appropriate regulatory agency deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest, for the protection of investors, or otherwise in furtherance of the purposes of this title.

"(2) Information received by any appropriate regulatory agency or the Secretary from or with respect to any government securities broker or government securities dealer or with respect to any person associated therewith may be made available by the Secretary or the recipient agency to the Commission, the Secretary, any appropriate regulatory agency, and any self-regulatory organization.

"(e)(1) It shall be unlawful for any government securities broker or government securities dealer registered or required to register with the Commission under subsection (a)(1)(A) to effect any transaction in, or induce or attempt to induce the purchase or sale of, any government security, unless such government securities broker or government securities dealer is a member of a national securities exchange registered under section 6 of this title or a securities association registered under section 15A of this title.

"(2) The Commission, after consultation with the Secretary, by rule or order, as it deems consistent with the public interest and the protection of investors, may conditionally or unconditionally exempt from paragraph (1) of this subsection any government securities broker or government securities dealer or class of government securities brokers or government securities dealers specified in such rule or order.

"(f)(1) Nothing in this section except paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be construed to impair or limit the authority under any other provision of law of the Commission, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and the Government National Mortgage Association.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, the Commission shall not have any authority to make investigations of, require the filing of a statement by, or take any other action under this title against a government securities broker or government securities dealer, or any person associated with a government securities broker or government securities dealer, for any violation or threatened violation of the provisions of this section or the rules or regulations thereunder, unless the Commission is the appropriate regulatory agency for such government securities broker or government securities dealer. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to limit the authority of the Commission with respect to violations or threatened violations of any provision of this title other than this section, or the rules or regulations under any such other provision.

"(g)(1) The authority of the Secretary to issue orders and to propose and adopt rules under this section shall terminate on October 1, 1991.

"(2) All orders and rules—

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, for several years, savings institutions have been attempting to resolve a serious problem that is interfering with their ability to take full advantage of certain new powers they have been granted. Specifically, they have been impeded in their efforts to issue signature guarantees because of the unwillingness of stock transfer agents to accept signature guarantees from thrifts. There is no basis for this refusal, which continues notwithstanding advice from the SEC's Division of Market Regulation that discrimination among signature guarantors solely by reference to the type of financial institutions issuing the guarantee appears to be inconsistent with State and Federal law. Although the SEC has attempted to resolve this situation on a voluntary basis, insufficient progress has been made.

Accordingly, the committee expects the SEC to move promptly to issue regulations to remedy this situation. These regulations should require that transfer agents apply the same reasonable standards to all institutions, including securities exchanges, banks, savings institutions, credit unions and similar institutions, in evaluating the acceptability of their signature guarantees. Regulatory agencies such as the SEC should exercise their regulatory authority to prevent the disparate treatment of thrift institutions with regard to signature guarantees.

Because savings institutions historically have been overwhelmingly mutual in form, their involvement with the SEC over the years has been minimal. This situation has been changing, however, as more and more thrifts have converted to stock charters in order to improve their capital positions, and as the industry has become more active in the capital markets generally. Although the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has primary responsibility for the securities regulation of thrifts, that agency basically follows SEC rules and procedures, and the SEC has direct securities jurisdiction over savings and loan holding companies. Nevertheless, the level of familiarity between the SEC and thrift institutions could be increased.

Given the well-known finanical problems of the savings institution industry, and significance of this industry for the Government and the public, it is extremely important that the SEC be cognizant of the impact of its actions on thrift institutions. While such institutions can participate in the public comment process associated with SEC rulemaking proceedings, we believe the need for increasing the degree of industry-agency understanding is sufficiently great to warrant creation by the SEC of a Savings Institutions Advisory Committee, and it is our expectation that the agency will act very promptly to establish one.

The Committee would consist of knowledgeable industry representatives who would meet with the SEC Chairman and Commissioners, as well as key SEC staff, on a regular basis to discuss matters of joint interest and importance, and should be large enough to assure diversity of membership—there should be at least two members from each of the twelve Federal Home Loan Bank districts.

It should be noted that the Federal Reserve Board for several years has had a body of this kind in place—the Thrift Industry Advisory Committee—and it has been very successful as a device for enhancing the quality of industry-agency communication.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. I would like to engage now in a brief colloquy with Senator GARN to establish legislative history on a point that has been of concern to me for some time. Specifically, I would like to establish that it is the sense of the Senate that it is extremely important given the problems besetting the thrift industry and that industry's increasing involvement with the SEC, that the SEC take steps to create a Savings Institutions Advisory Committee.

● Mr. GARN. I agree that such committee would do much in raising the level of familiarity between the SEC and the thrift industry, to the benefit of both as well as of the general public. The Federal Reserve Board established a body of this sort several years ago, the Thrift Industry Advisory Committee, which has been very successful as a device for improving the quality of industry-agency communications. Senator D'AMATO, could you give us some idea of how the committee you envision would operate?

● Mr. D'AMATO. Certainly, the committee would consist of knowledgeable thrift industry representatives who would meet with the SEC Chairman and Commissioners, as well as key SEC staff, on a regular basis to discuss matters of joint interest and importance. The committee should be large enough to assure diversity of membership, with at least two members from each of the 12 Federal Home Loan Bank districts.

● Mr. GARN. The idea of a committee is an excellent one. The Senate anticipates that the SEC should move very promptly to establish the Savings Institutions Advisory Committee in accordance with your description.

● Mr. D'AMATO. I would like at this time to engage in a colloquy with Senator GARN to establish legislative history on a point of considerable concern to me. Specifically, I would like to ask the Senator whether in his view adequate progress has been made in resolving the problem created by the unwillingness of stock transfer agents to accept savings institutions' signature guarantees.

● Mr. GARN. The answer is no. Despite the efforts of the SEC to achieve a voluntary end to this disparate treatment, very little improvement has occurred. There is simply no basis for the refusal of stock transfer agents to accept thrifts' signature guarantees, and I believe the time has come for the SEC to solve the problem by regulation.

● Mr. D'AMATO. I agree with the Senator. The SEC should use its authority to issue regulations that will assure that transfer agents apply the same reasonable standards to all institutions, including securities exchanges, banks, savings institutions, credit unions, and similar institutions, in evaluating the acceptability of their signature guarantees.

● Mr. GARN. The Senator is correct. This completely reflects the sense of the Senate on this issue, in my opinion. Regulatory agencies such as the SEC should use their regulatory authority to remedy the current inequities that exist with regard to the acceptability of signature guarantees.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise to urge my colleagues to support the Government Securities Act of 1986. Passage of this legislation is the culmination of a process that began over a year ago. Each provision of the bill has been carefully crafted because this legislation will have a profound effect on the manner in which the Department of the Treasury finances and manages the Federal debt. The bill that we enact today will ensure that the market in U.S. Government securities, the largest securities market in the world, will remain the safest, the most efficient, stable, and liquid securities market in the world. Maintaining investor confidence and the integrity of the market in these securities is of paramount importance to the effective, low-cost financing of the national debt.

The importance of this legislation cannot be underestimated. Given the depth and breadth of the Government securities market, the Government Securities Act of 1986 is perhaps the most important Securities legislation since the enactment of the Securities Act of 1933—Securities Act—and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934—Exchange Act. The Government Securities Act of 1986 would provide, through an amendment to the Exchange Act, a comprehensive and coordinated pattern for the regulation of brokers, dealers, and financial institutions trading Government securities. The lack of Federal regulation of the conduct of Government securities professionals and the trading market for Government securities has encouraged the proliferation of fraudulent practices resulting in substantial losses to investors. Such a result presents a serious threat to the integrity of the capital-raising system upon which the U.S. Government relies to finance the Federal debt and to conduct monetary policy.

The market in U.S. Government securities is expanding, increasingly active, in recent years increasing volatile and, ironically, the least regulated securities market in this country. The expansion and volatility of the market has been driven by the amount of Federal debt to be financed, both new debt resulting from Government deficits and old debt that must be refinanced. The absence of a coordinated regulatory structure for this market generally, and specifically for unregistered brokers and dealers, was cited in testimony before the Securities Subcommittee as a major factor in the recent failures of Government securities dealers. This legislation was necessitated by the failures of several unregistered Government securities dealers with losses to investors in exess of $1 billion.

Between July 1975 and April 1985, several failures of unregistered Government securities dealers have occurred. The failures include Financial Corp. of Kansas City, MO, 1975; Winters Government Securities, 1977; Drysdale Government Securities, 1982; Lombard-Wall, 1982; Comark, 1982; Lion Capital Group, Inc., 1984; and most recently E.S.M. Government Securities, Inc. and Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Management Corp., 1985. All of the dealer failures occurred in firms outside of the Federal regulatory structure.

After extensive hearings that addressed the appropriate form of regulation of the Government securities markets, two legislative proposals—S. 936 and S. 1416—were introduced in the Senate. After these hearings and many hours of exhaustive study, debate, and analysis of these proposals by my colleagues, committee staff and representatives of the Federal regulatory agencies and Government securities industry, substantial amendments were made to S. 1416 by the time it was considered by the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

As a result of the deliberations on this issue, the committee determined that legislation regulating the Government securities market must accomplish three purposes: First, the legislation should contain certain safeguards to maintain a fair and orderly market in Government securities; second, the regulation of the Government securities market should not adversely affect the liquidity and efficiency of the market; and third, the legislation should, where possible, rely upon existing regulation, since many Government securities brokers and dealers are already subject to some of Federal regulation. The legislation which we consider today is specifically designed to satisfy these requirements and to protect the public interest in the Government securities market. Because the legislation addresses identified weaknesses in the Government securities market, it would not result in excessive regulation that would impair the efficient operation of the market, increase the costs of financing the Federal debt or compromise the execution of domestic monetary policy.

On August 13, 1986, S. 1416—containing the committee amendment—was unanimously reported from the Banking Committee. The substance of S. 1416 was offered and accepted by the Senate as an amendment to H.R. 2032. Therefore, the language of S. 1416 as reported by the Senate Banking Committee was offered and passed as an amendment which struck the language of H.R. 2032 as passed by the House on September 17, 1986. H.R. 2032, containing the Senate amendment subsequently passed the Senate on September 16, 1986. The legislation that we consider this morning is, with a few modifications, almost identical to the bill that was passed by the Senate on September 16, 1986. These few modifications to H.R. 2032 as passed by the Senate are reflected in an amendment which was passed by the House under House Resolution 547 on October 6, 1986. House Resolution 546 provided for the concurrence of the House to amendments of the Senate to H.R. 2032 with an amendment.

Without providing an exhaustive explanation of the House amendment before the Senate, I think an explanation of some of the most important provisions of H.R. 2032, in its present form, is required.

In its present form the legislation adds a new section to the Exchange Act, section 15C, and provides for various conforming amendments to the Exchange Act, the Investment Company Act of 1940, and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940. The legislation requires currently unregulated Government securities brokers and dealers to register with the Commission and other Government securities brokers and dealers, specifically registered brokers and dealers and financial institutions, to file a notice with their appropriate regulatory agencies.

In addition, the bill grants specific rulemaking authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt rules regarding: financial responsibility including capital adequacy, custody and use of customers' securities, and the transfer and control of Government securities in repurchase transactions; financial statements; and recordkeeping exemptions from registration. The enforcement of these rules would be the responsibility of the Commission as to currently registered brokers and dealers and those Government securities brokers and dealers required to register with the Commission under the bill. The enforcement of the rules promulgated by the Secretary would be the responsibility of other appropriate regulatory agencies as to banks and other institutions specified in the bill.

Government securities would continue to be treated as exempted securities for purposes of the Exchange Act except for section 17A of the Exchange Act. Therefore, a registered securities association would have no new authority with respect to Government securities brokers, Government securities dealers, or Government securities transactions except as specifically authorized in the bill or as already exists under current law.

The legislation invests the Secretary with the rulemaking authority due to the expertise of the Treasury in these markets and to ensure that the rules will accomplish the purposes of the bill. I am confident that the Secretary possesses the exquisite expertise and the commitment to pursue fully and faithfully the rulemaking authority granted in this legislation.

Since rulemaking authority is vested in the Secretary, the establishment of a new self-regulatory organization as required by the original House bill becomes unnecessary. Moreover, the legislation affords significant advantages over granting rulemaking authority to an existing self-regulatory organization such as the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board [MSRB]. The creation of a new self-regulatory organization would fail to take advantage of existing regulatory structures and would be unnecessarily duplicative and expensive. To grant rulemaking authority to the MSRB, or a self-regulatory organization created specifically to regulate the Government securities market, would be unwarranted.

The legislation would grant to the Secretary specific rulemaking authority in the areas of financial responsibility and related practices, financial statements, recordkeeping, and exemptions from registration. Rulemaking authority in additional areas does not appear to be necessary to address the weaknesses that have been identified in the Government securities market. The Secretary, in exercising rulemaking authority under the bill, will account for the differences between types of transactions engaged in by brokers or dealers participating solely in the markets for securities of Government agencies and Government-sponsored corporations and transactions of brokers or dealers participating in the general market in Government securities.

In adopting rules under section 15C, the Secretary must consider the adequacy of rules already applicable to Government securities brokers and Government securities dealers. The provisions of section 15C(a)(4) together with section 15C(b)(3) authorize the Secretary to exempt Government securities brokers or dealers from the rules under section 15C in areas where such brokers or dealers already are adequately regulated. As a result, the Secretary should be able to avoid applying duplicative and unnecessarily costly requirements to brokers and dealers registered under section 15 of the Exchange Act and financial institutions, which are already subject to Federal regulations in areas covered by section 15C(b)(1). This exemptive authority is intended to avoid, to the maximum extent consistent with achieving the objectives of the bill, subjecting registered broker-dealers and financial institutions to conflicting or unnecessary regulation in the areas of financial responsibility or recordkeeping.

To preserve flexibility and to guard against the negative effects on the efficiency and liquidity of the government securities markets, the Secretary would also be empowered to exempt any Government securities broker or dealer or class of Government securities broker or dealer from registration or any rules or regulations that the Secretary promulgates pursuant to this legislation.

The business relationship the Federal Reserve Bank of New York has with primary dealers—and those seeking to become primary dealers—is protected by this legislation.

Although no formal conference was convened to reconcile the differences between H.R. 2032 as passed by the House and H.R. 2032 containing the Senate amendment—which passed the Senate on September 16, 1986—staffs from both bodies conducted extensive negotiations and ultimately reconciled the differences between the two bills. No formal conference was required due to the acceptance of most of the Senate amendments to H.R. 2032. I thank my colleagues in the Senate and the House, especially Congressman DINGELL, for their efforts to resolve their differences in such an expeditious and considerate manner.

Since no formal conference met, thereby obviating the need for a conference report, an explanation of those few House amendments made in to the Government Securities Act, as passed by the Senate, is required. The statement of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Banking Committee and the chairman and ranking minority member of the Securities Subcommittee which appears at the end of my remarks identifies those few provisions of the Government Securities Act, as passed by the Senate, which were amended by the House in accordance with House Resolution 547. As detailed in the statement, these amended provisions affect: First, the duration of the Secretary's rulemaking authority; second, the scope of the rulemaking authority; third, the registration requirements for primary dealers; fourth, the registration requirements for clearing agencies; and fifth, inclusion of a study regarding the blind broker trading system that was contained in H.R. 2032 as passed by the House on September 17, 1986. For those provisions unique to the Senate bill that were not modified by the House amendment in accordance with House Resolution 574, the Senate report—Report 99-426—which accompanied S. 1416 explains those provisions of the Government Securities Act as passed by the Senate on September 16, 1986.

While the statement that appears at the conclusion of my remarks is intended to provide guidance regarding the House amendment to the bill approved by the Senate on September 16, 1986, I would like to explain the significance of a few of these amendments to the bill as reported by the Senate. Briefly, I would like to address five points.

First, the provision in the legislation addressing the registration of clearing agencies is not designed to single out one specific company that would be required to register under section 17A of the Exchange Act. In providing for the applicability of the registration and other requirements of section 17A of the Securities Exchange Act to clearing agencies for Government securities, the Commission has broad authority under section 17A—as well as under section 23—to take into account the distinctions between membership clearing agencies and proprietary clearing agencies. In the report accompanying S. 249, the Securities Act Amendments of 1975, the legislation which first provided for the regulation of clearing agencies, the committee stated—at pages 124-125—that:

> The rules of the clearing agency must assure fair representation of its shareholders (or members) and participants in the decision making process of the clearing agency. (17A(b)(3)(c)) The reference to shareholders or members makes it clear that the bill establishes no norm as to whether clearing agencies should or should not be operated for profit. The bill makes no attempt to set up particular standards of representation or participation. Rather, it provides that the Commission must assure itself that the rules of the clearing agency regarding the manner in which decisions are made give fair voice to participants as well as to shareholders or members.

In light of the foregoing, the Commission, under the expanded scope of section 17A, should recognize distinctions between proprietary and membership clearing agencies, and exercise its discretionary authority to interpret and adapt the requirements of section 17A, where appropriate, to proprietary clearing agencies for Government securities.

Second, new section 15C(b)(2) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by the bill, provides certain guidelines regarding the nature of the rules to be proposed and adopted by the Secretary under section 15C(b)(1). These guidelines are not intended, however, either to expand or to limit the scope of the Secretary's rulemaking authority under the bill.

Third, the new definition of "registered broker or dealer" added by the bill would encompass those intrastate brokers and dealers—within the definitions in existing sections 3(a)(4) and 3(a)(5) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934—who are required to register under section 15B but not under section 15 of that act, and is not intended to cover banks or separately identifiable departments or divisions of banks that do not fall within the definition of broker or dealer.

Fourth, this bill and the existing legal structure, as well as the successful working relationships between the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board and the Government securities industry, are adequate to deal with such issues as when-issued trading and margin and other issues—such as operational capability—not expressly referred to in the areas of rulemaking set out in the bill.

Finally, one provision of H.R. 2032 as passed by the Senate on September 16, 1986, section 208, has been deleted from the legislation presently pending before the U.S. Senate. Section 208, which was the subject of much discussion subsequent to its passage by the Senate, would have provided that debt securities guaranteed by an insurance policy of the highest rating would have been exempt from the registration requirements of the Securities Act of 1933. This provision was not intended to exempt such securities from any other provisions of the securities laws.

Section 208 arose from the competitive inequities created by the ability of banks, under section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, to issue letters of credit assuring payment to investors of interest and principal of corporate debt instruments. Because a bank letter of credit protects security holders from default by the bond's issuer, the Securities Act of 1933 exempts those bonds from registration. However, securities covered by insurance policies do not receive the same treatment. Securities guaranteed by an insurance policy would not qualify for an exemption from registration under section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 since the promise of indemnification comes from an insurance company and not a bank. The Securities Act's exemptive provisions do not apply to securities backed by insurance policies and, therefore, issuers have to register those securities with the SEC.

Since the Comptroller of the Currency has determined that guarantees provided by bank letters of credit and insurance policies are functional equivalents, there is much merit to the argument that securities covered by insurance policies be treated in the same manner as securities guaranteed by bank letters of credit. Like bank letters of credit, insurance policies would offer similar protections to purchasers of corporate debt by insuring payments of interest and principal. However, the Securities Act's distinction between bank and insurance company guarantees makes it virtually impossible for insurance companies to provide cost-effective coverage to issuers and raises important competitive issues.

Section 208 was deleted from the legislation because it was a legislative proposal that required further analysis and refinement. Such a detailed examination was not possible during the waning days of the 99th Congress. Although the concept embodied in section 208 was worthwhile, time limitations prevented the formulation of legislative language that would permit securities guaranteed by an insurance policy of the highest rating to be treated in the same manner, with regard to the registration requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, as securities guaranteed by a bank letter of credit.

While the language of section 208 may have been imprecise, it caused the Congress and the SEC to focus upon the competitive inequities that presently exist under the Securities Act of 1933 between securities guaranteed by insurance policies and securities guaranteed by a bank letter of credit. Realizing the need for more study of this proposal, as chairman of the Securities Subcommittee, I asked the SEC to make recommendations on legislative proposals which would improve upon section 208 and would solve the competitive inequities created by the Securities Act while maintaining investor protection. The SEC should be commended for its expeditious response to the subcommittee's inquiry. Therefore, I would like to place into the RECORD the SEC's response to the subcommittee's inquiry to acknowledge the Commission's efforts.

Further, section 105 of the bill pending before us directs the SEC to conduct a study of section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 which exempts from registration securities that are guaranteed by banks. The scope and purpose of this study are articulated in section 105 of the bill. It is incumbent upon the Banking Committee, and specifically the Securities Subcommittee, to hold hearings to determine whether the current statutory scheme is adequate or whether section 3(a)(2) requires amendment to enhance competition among the providers of financial services in a manner consistent with the protection of investors and the public.

The statement describing the differences between H.R. 2032 as amended by the Senate on September 16, 1986, and the concurrence of the House, with an amendment to the Senate amendments to H.R. 2032 provided by House Resolution 547, which I referred to earlier in my remarks is provided below. Again, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation because it would provide comprehensive regulation of Government securities brokers and Government securities dealers and would not impair the efficiency or liquidity of the market in Government securities.

H.R. 2032, THE GOVERNMENT SECURITIES ACT OF 1986

On September 17, 1985, the House passed H.R. 2032, the Government Securities Act of 1985, and, on September 16, 1986, the Senate passed the bill with an amendment. On October 6, 1986, the House passed House Resolution 574 providing for the concurrence of the House to amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2032) with an amendment. In lieu of a conference report, this floor statement represents the views of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, and the chairman and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Securities and is intended to serve as the legislative history, along with S. Rpt. 99-426 (September 3, 1986) and CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (September 16, 1986) at S12699-S12706 and H. Rpt. 99-258 (September 9, 1985) and CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (September 17, 1985) at H7479-H7490.

ANALYSIS OF MAJOR PROVISIONS

The Rulemaker.—The amendment grants specific rulemaking authority to the Secretary of the Treasury (Secretary) and provides that the authority of the Secretary to issue orders and to propose and adopt rules shall terminate on October 1, 1991. All orders and rules which have been issued or adopted by the Secretary and which are in effect on the sunset date shall continue in effect according to their terms.

It is our intent and belief that, should Congress fail to renew or transfer this authority by October 1, 1991, the Secretary has the authority to respond to emergency situations and make technical corrections beyond October 1, 1991, pursuant to the Secretary's authority to interpret such rules. The government securities market is vital to the financing of the national debt and the implementation of monetary policy. For this reason, we believe that responsible regulation of this market will be a continuing necessity.

In this regard, the amendment requires certain studies and recommendations with respect to extension of the rulemaking authority of the Department of Treasury (Treasury). The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to conduct a study of the regulation of government securities brokers and government securities dealers and the effectiveness of the amendments made by the legislation, and submit a report, not later than March 31, 1990, with recommendations with respect to, among other things, the extension of the Secretary's authority.

The Secretary, together with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Federal Reserve Board) are charged to evaluate the effectiveness of the rules promulgated and submit to Congress, not later than October 1, 1990, their recommendation with respect to, among other things, the extension of the Secretary's authority. Although the Committee expects the Task Force recommendation required by section 103 to reflect a consensus, the Committee understands that such unanimity, while desirable, is not always attainable. Therefore, the recommendation, if appropriate, will contain any divergent viewpoints of the Task Force participants.

These studies and recommendations, along with effective oversight and hearings over the intervening five years, will form the basis for a fair and timely evaluation of the extension or transfer of the Secretary's authority in order to provide the government securities markets with certainty and continuity.

The Rules.—The amendment maintains the core rulemaking areas agreed to by the House and Senate versions of the bill. These include: financial responsibility, recordkeeping and financial statement rules, including the requirement to file annually or more frequently a balance sheet and income statement certified by an independent public accountant. The amendment drops specific reference to rulemaking authority relating to when-issued trading in government securities since the Secretary currently possesses that authority under 31 USC subsection 3121. Furthermore, we believe that our concerns about operational capability and margin can be addressed through capital adequacy requirements and early warning rules.

The amendment incorporates the House positive and negative standards and prohibitions, along with two Senate requirements, for Treasury rulemaking, including authority to classify, a requirement to consult with the SEC and the Federal Reserve Board, and a requirement that the rules not be designed to permit unfair discrimination between customers, issuers, government securities brokers or government securities dealers, or to impose any unnecessary or inappropriate burden on competition. Further, the rules, as specified under the rulemaking authority under 15C(b)(2), will be designed to prevent fraudulent and manipulative acts and practices.

In order to avoid duplicative rulemaking, the amendment also requires the Secretary to consider the sufficiency and appropriateness of existing laws and rules of appropriate regulatory agencies which, to varying degrees, exercise some existing authority over the entities affected by this legislation. For example, the SEC has promulgated extensive net capital and other related rules with respect to currently registered brokers and dealers that will probably be sufficient for government securities brokers and government securities dealers that are currently registered with the SEC.

Registration.—The amendment requires unregulated government securities brokers and government securities dealers to register with the SEC. The amendment requires currently registered brokers and dealers and financial institutions to file a notice with their appropriate regulatory agencies. The Federal Reserve Board shall, after consultation with the appropriate regulatory agencies, prescribe a common notice form for financial institutions in order to ensure the necessary and appropriate consistency in form and content. The amendment does not create an exemption for the so-called primary dealers. Although the Secretary does have authority to exempt and to develop appropriate classifications of registrants, primary dealer status alone should not be a sufficient basis for such a classification.

Clearing Agencies.—The amendment includes the House provision to require clearing agencies, as defined in Section 3(a)(23) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, to register with the SEC pursuant to Section 17A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. Under this amendment, for example, the MBS Clearing Corporation, the proposed Federal National Mortgage Association clearing corporation and the subsidiary established by Security Pacific Corporation to provide clearing functions with respect to government securities options would be required to register with the SEC pursuant to Section 17A. We believe that this treatment is consistent with the general purpose of H.R. 2032 to ensure that adequate public safeguards exist for transactions in government securities.

Studies. —The amendment retains the House provision for a study of the current blind broker trading system in the secondary market for government securities and a report to the Congress by the Comptroller General. It is essential that Congress have sufficient information available to it to facilitate an evaluation of whether quotations for such securities and the services of government securities brokers are available on terms which are consistent with the Exchange Act and the public policy goals of H.R. 2032.

The amendment also includes a requirement that the SEC study the use of the exemption contained in section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 for securities guaranteed by banks, and the use of insurance policies to guarantee securities in competition with banks. We are concerned about broad application of the principle of national treatment under the International Banking Act and recent administrative interpretations which raise competitive and investor protection questions as regards the applicability of the federal securities laws to foreign and domestic banks and domestic financial guarantee insurance companies. We anticipate that at least one public hearing shall be held during the course of conducting the study and that the views of the Department of State and insurance and banking industry representatives will be solicited. It is our intent that there be Congressional hearings as soon as practicable after receipt of the SEC's report.

U.S. SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION,
Washington, DC, October 6, 1986.

Hon. ALFONSE M. D'AMATO,
Chairman, Securities Subcommittee, Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN D'AMATO: With reference to Section 208 of the Government Securities Act of 1986, this letter summarizes four alternative approaches, including revised language concerning the proposed amendment that you provided on October 1st.

Section 208 and the October 1 proposed amendment address the competitive disparities between bank and insurance company guarantees. On October 2, the Commission carefully reviewed the October 1 proposed amendment and various alternatives. The Commission recognized that repeal of the bank exemption from registration under Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act would effectively resolve the competitive disparity issue.

If Congress does not repeal the bank exemption, the Commission can revisit the question of whether bank letters of credit should continue to be treated as "guarantees" for purposes of the Section 3(a)(2) exemptions (i.e., whether securities backed by bank letters of credit should be exempt from the Securities Act). The competitive disparity might be alleviated adminstratively by the Commission reinterpreting the word "guaranteed" as it appears in Section 3(a)(2) to exclude bank letters of credit.

If, however, Congress decides to enact legislation that would exempt securities guaranteed by insurance companies, Congress could consider: (a) authorizing the Commission to exempt by rule from the registration requirements securities guaranteed by insurance; or (b) enacting the enclosed revision of the October 1 proposed amendment.

COMPETITIVE DISPARITY BETWEEN BANKS AND INSURANCE COMPANIES

Under Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, any security guaranteed by a bank is exempt from registration. Section 3(a)(8) exempts insurance policies issued by state-regulated insurers, but not securities guaranteed by insurance policies. As a result, while an issuer may choose to enhance the credit rating of its securities through either bank or insurance guarantees, bank guarantees also exempt the securities from Securities Act registration. Insurance guarantees do not.

Vice President Bush's Task Group on Regulation of Financial Services included the heads of all the bank and other federal agencies that regulate financial services. The Task Group unanimously recommended consolidating within the SEC the securities registration and reporting requirements of banks and thrifts. This recommendation is expected to be formally transmitted to Congress in the near future. The Commission supports this recommendation.

ALTERNATIVES

The competitive disparities between banks and other guarantors of securities might be addressed in four ways.

First, Congress could repeal the bank exemption under Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act.

Second, without legislation, the Commission could address the disparities through regulatory action. The Commission has interpreted the Section 3(a)(2) exemption to include securities backed by bank letters of credit. However, federal banking law, and the banking laws of many states, preclude banks from guaranteeing securities of other parties. The Commission, in consultation with the bank regulatory authorities and through the rulemaking process, can reconsider whether bank letters of credit should be treated as guarantees for Section 3(a)(2) exemptive purposes.

Third, the competitive disparity can be addressed legislatively by granting the Commission rulemaking authority to exempt securities guaranteed by insurance companies from the registration requirements of the Securities Act. This would provide flexibility by permitting the Commission to adapt exemptions to new financial instruments as the markets evolve. A draft of this legislative approach is set forth under Tab A.

Fourth, Congress could create an insurance guarantee exemption. This is the approach reflected in Section 208 and in the October 1 proposed amendment. Both of these formulations raise Securities Act questions which the Commission has attempted to resolve in the revised language set forth under Tab B. The revised language amplifies and also makes explicit implicit provisions of the October 1 proposed amendment. It makes it clear that the guaranteed security is subject to the antifraud provisions of the securities laws; that it must be a debt instrument rated in the highest category by at least two nationally recognized statistical ratings organizations, pursuant to such rules and regulations as the Commission may adopt in the public interest or for the protection of investors; that there must be public information available concerning the issuer and the guarantor; and that the guarantor is among those responsible for the accuracy of the offering documents.

The Commission has approved sending this letter. One Commissioner also requests that a potential revision to part (i) of the alternative set forth at Tab B be forwarded. That revision (enclosed at Tab C) would subject the insurer, but not the issuer, to certain disclosure and filing requirements.

The views expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the Administration. [See Section 111 of Pub. L. No. 93-495, 88 Stat. 1500 (Oct. 28, 1974).] A copy of this correspondence is being sent to the Office of Management and Budget. The Commission will promptly provide any views received from OMB.

The Commission's staff and I will be pleased to answer any questions and lend any assistance you desire.

Sincerely,

JOHN SHAD.

LEGISLATIVE ALTERNATIVE NO. 1—SEC RULEMAKING

SEC. 208. (a) Section 3 of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C. 77c] is amended by adding after paragraph (c) the following paragraph:

"(d) The Commission may, having due regard for the public interest and the protection of investors, by its rules and regulations, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed therein, add to the securities exempted as provided in this section, any note, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, or collateral trust certificate, or any guarantee of any of the foregoing, which is guaranteed as to the payment of interest, principal, and premium, if any, and any other amounts when due, pursuant to an insurance policy described in Section 3(a)(8) of this title. In any action under Section 12(2) of this title, both the corporation issuing the insurance policy and the issuer of the guaranteed security shall be included among those persons deemed to have sold the guaranteed security."

(b) Section 304(a)(4) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 [15 U.S.C. 77ddd(a)(d)] is amended by adding after Subsection (B) the following paragraph:

"(C) any security exempted from the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, pursuant to Subsection 3(d)."

LEGISLATIVE ALTERNATIVE NO. 2—STATUTORY EXEMPTION

SEC. 208. (a) Section 3(a) of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U.S.C. 77c(a)] is amended by striking the period at the end of paragraph (11), inserting "; and" in lieu thereof, and adding the following thereafter:

"(12)(A) Any note, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, or collateral trust certificate, or any guarantee of any of the foregoing, which is guaranteed as to the payment of interest, principal, and premium, if any, and any other amounts when due, pursuant to an insurance policy described in Section 3(a)(8) of this title; provided that:

(i) both the issuer of such guaranteed security and the corporation issuing such insurance policy, for at least the twelve months immediately preceding the first date upon which such guaranteed security is bona fide offered to the public, have timely filed all reports (including at least one annual report) that would be required by Section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 [15 U.S.C. 78m(a), 78o(d)], and

(ii) the guaranteed security is rated at the time of the first bona fide sale of such security in the highest rating category by at least two nationally recognized statistical rating organizations, pursuant to such rules and regulations as the Commission may adopt in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(B) In any action under Section 12(2) of this title, both the corporation issuing the insurance policy described in Clause (A) of this paragraph (12) and the issuer of the guaranteed security shall be included among those persons deemed to have sold the guaranteed security.

(b) Section 304(a)(4)(A) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 [15 U.S.C. 77ddd(a)(4)(A)] is amended by deleting "or (11)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(11), or (12)".

ALTERNATIVE LANGUAGE FOR PROPOSED SECTION 3(a)(12)(A)(i)

(i) the corporation issuing such insurance policy has filed with the Commission such information as would be required to register a security under section 12 of this title and, since the filing of such information, such information as would be required pursuant to section 13 of this title in respect of a security registered pursuant to section 12 of this title.

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, the Government Securities Act of 1986 is much needed legislation which I support.

The health and integrity of the market for the obligations of the United States, its agencies, and related entities is important for the protection of the savings of our citizens, and an important element in the ability of the Government to finance its debt at the least possible cost of them as taxpayers.

The failures of several Government securities dealers, which have resulted in losses of hundreds of millions of dollars to investors since 1977, have raised questions about the need for some form of oversight, and this legislation addresses that need.

Failures, or near failures since 1977 include Winters Government Securities, Inc. (1977), Hibbard & O'Connor Government Securities, Inc. (1982), Drysdale Government Securities, Inc. (1982), Comark, Inc. (1982), Lombard-Wall, Inc. (1982), Lion Capital Group, Inc. (1984), RTD Securities, Inc. (1984), ESM Government Securities, Inc. (1985), Bevil Bresler Schulman Asset Management Corp. (1985), and Parr Securities Corp. (1985).

These failures occurred for a variety of reasons including the fraudulent use of customer securities and margin payments, improper use of accrued interest, the transfer of large losses from affiliates, as well as normal trading reverses.

A repurchase agreement is an agreement to sell securities with a commitment to repurchase the same securities from the buyer at a future date. Buyers in these transactions generally view them as investments carrying little risk. In particular, the buyer in a repurchase agreement transfers cash to a seller and receives collateral—or has securities held on its behalf—as "collateral," and the seller agrees to repurchase the securities for the cash plus interest at a future date.

In several of the failures since 1977, repurchase customers found upon the failure to the firm in question that the securities subject to repurchase had been in other transactions, or that the value of securities subject to repurchase had declined. In addition, repurchase customers that had provided excess margin lost the difference in value between the securities provided as margin for these transactions and the cash received. Among the more prominent of these failures were Drysdale, Lion, ESM, and Bevil Bresler.

The legislation which we are currently considering establishes a responsible foundation of regulation by requiring the registration of all Government securities brokers and dealers; financial responsibility, record-keeping, and audit rules; and regulations directly affecting market safety such as collateralization of repurchase agreements. This measure also provides for parity of treatment between primary dealers and other Government securities dealers.

During the course of the legislative process it was agreed that the treasury should be the appropriate rulemaker, acting in close consultation with the Federal reserve, and that the Securities and Exchange Commission and bank regulators should be the enforcement agencies. In this regard, the Secretary of the Treasury together with the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission are in accord with the responsibilities of their respective department and agencies.

More specifically, this legislation provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is invested with the authority to promulgate rules that are designed to prevent fraud on the part of Government securities brokers and dealers.

In pertinent part, the Secretary's rulemaking authority includes rules that:

(1) "Provide safeguards with respect to the financial responsibility and related practices of Government securities brokers and Government securities dealers including, but not limited to, capital adequacy standards, the acceptance of custody and use of customers' securities, the carrying and use of customers' deposits or credit balances, and the transfer and control of Government securities subject to repurchase agreements and in similar transactions."

(2) "Require every Government securities broker and Government securities dealer to make reports to and furnish copies of records to the appropriate regulatory agency, and to file with the appropriate regulatory agency, annually or more frequently, a balance sheet and income statement certified by an independent public accountant, prepared on a calendar or fiscal year basis, and such other financial statements (which shall, as the secretary specifies, be certified) and information concerning its financial condition as required by such rules."

(3) "Require records to be made and kept by Government securities brokers and Government securities dealers and shall specify the periods for which such records shall be preserved."

A great deal of careful consideration on the part of a number of Government agencies as well as interested parties has gone into the drafting of this legislation. The regulatory apparatus that has been established is designed to be streamlined and limited in nature to address the problems that have been identified. I am aware of no opposition to this measure, and the fact that consensus has been achieved is no small tribute to the drafters and principal authors.

In conclusion, I want to acknowledge the chairman of the Senate Securities Subcommittee, as well as the Chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection and Finance for their work on this bill. Senator D'AMATO and congressmen DINGELL and WIRTH are to be particularly commended for their efforts on this legislation. Their respective counsel, Tom Lykos, Consuela Washington and Marti Cochran are also to be highly commended for their work on the Government Securities Act of 1986.

I believe that the Senate should enact this legislation without further delay.●

● Mr. HART. Mr. President, we are considering legislation of great importance to Americans who have invested in Government securities. With prompt Senate approval, we can provide overdue protections for small investors whose faith in our financial system was badly shaken less than 2 years ago.

This bill was written in response to a crisis which shook our financial system. An $18 trillion market in Government securities was destabilized when unsupervised dealers were found to be engaged in fraudulent and unsafe activities. A number of unsupervised dealers went bankrupt. Consumers lost their savings. Two banks in Colorado were threatened with significant losses. The entire banking system of Ohio was closed down. Confidence in our financial system was shaken internationally.

How did this occur? While broker-dealers in corporate and municipal securities must register with the SEC, and bank dealers are supervised by bank regulators, dealers who trade in Government securities operate totally outside the U.S. system of financial regulation. This is troubling because transactions by Government securities dealers now exceed $75 billion per day. Without supervision, frauds of the kind the system experienced can harm virtually every bank and savings institution in this country—nearly all invest in these securities.

The legislation we're debating today will close this gap in financial supervision. It requires Government securities dealers to register with the SEC. It provides enforcement powers to the SEC and the bank regulators. The Secretary of the Treasury will write rules relating to capital, financial responsibility, custody, and use of customers' securities, financial statements, and other matters. It is a prudent approach that will restore confidence to this market.

I commend Senators CRANSTON, PROXMIRE, RIEGLE, and D'AMATO for bringing this compromise legislation before the Senate.

But I am also proud to support this legislation because it was crafted by the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Finance, a fellow Coloradan, Congressman TIM WIRTH. Congressman WIRTH has been a leader in the House on behalf of a sound and competitive financial marketplace. He has worked tirelessly and with great effectiveness to see that this gap in our system of financial supervision is filled.

On this issue, as with so many others, Congressman WIRTH understands that consumers and the integrity of the financial system can be protected without burdensome regulation. Colorado investors, and investors across this country, owe Congressman WIRTH a debt of gratitude for his work on this legislation.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

GREAT BASIN NATIONAL PARK, NEVADA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 2506.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 2506) entitled "An Act to establish a Great Basin National Park in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes", do pass with the following amendments:

(1) Page 2, line 5, strike out [fourty-four], and insert: seventy-six

(3) Page 2, line 8, strike out [20,016, and dated April 1986.], and insert 20,017, and dated October 1986.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the Senate is about to send to the President this legislation to create the Great Basin National Park in Nevada.

When the Senate passed S. 2506 a few weeks ago, I was confident that we had done an excellent job designing a park that took in the most impressive features of the Snake Range, while still protecting the mainstays of the local economy: mining and ranching. Another very important provision in the Senate-passed bill involved language protecting water rights in Nevada. Finally, the boundaries of the bill excluded private land from the 44,000-acre park. Everyone who has a national park in their State understands the complex, chronic, and emotionally charged problems that almost always occur when private land is put inside a national park.

One of the main reasons I introduced a modest 44,000-acre bill was simply because I expected the Senate would have to give some ground on the grazing issue, and a bill affecting a small number of acres would also limit any damage that would result from the House weakening our Senate language on grazing.

I was pleased to see that the House's only change to the Senate bill was in the acreage involved. I was also plesently surprised to see that even with the larger acreage, the House was willing to keep private land outside of the park, and accept the Senate language with regard to water rights and grazing.

With the Senate language left intact, I feel comfortable agreeing to the House amendment to my bill, which expands the Senate bill to 76,800 acres.

After I had a chance to review the House amendment, I spoke with Interior Secretary Hodel, and George Dunlop, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Natural Resources and Environment. On the basis of these conversations, I am satisfied that the administration will support the amended Senate bill.

I must compliment Congressman VUCANOVICH on her defense of the Senate language, and Congressman VENTO for his willingness to be cooperative and for his efforts to help Congressman VUCANOVICH pass this bill through the House with an amendment that we in the Senate could accept.

Mr. President, this legislation will add a new crown jewel to our Nation's National Parks System. It will give Nevada its first national park. It will protect forever a beautiful piece of our Nation, and it will also protect the rights and way of life of the good citizens of White Pine County, NV.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to act on this legislation, and bring to a close in a fair and gratifying manner the 60 years of debate and conflict that has revolved around the creation of this park.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. DOLE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL SEEK AND COLLEGE DISCOVERY DAY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 735, "National SEEK and College Discovery Day" just received from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (H.J. Res. 735) to designate December 11, 1986, as "National SEEK and College Discovery Day".

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the importance of education to our Nation's youth cannot be overstated. It is vital to our future as a nation to offer educational opportunities to every student who wishes to pursue them from kindergarten through college.

That is why I rise today to draw attention to the passage of House Joint Resolution 735, designating December 11, 1986, as "National SEEK and College Discovery Day." I introduced the companion measure to this resolution in the Senate on September 24, 1986, in order that the Nation might come to know of some very special educational programs being conducted at the City University of New York.

The City University of New York will always have a special place in my life. I attended CUNY for 1 year before entering the Navy and though I could not afford an expensive private college at the time, I was able to experience a full and rich college education through the City University system.

CUNY is also partly responsible for my being a U.S. Senator. I decided to run for the Senate the day the City University system was forced to shut down because it couldn't meet its payroll. Catastrophes such as these had to be avoided and if anyone was willing to work on the Federal level to preserve CUNY, I was and still am, 10 years later, in order that as many students have the same opportunity for a quality college education that I had.

This quality education is indeed still offered today and enhanced by such programs as SEEK, Search for Elevation, Education and Knowledge, and College Discovery. Both these programs provide specialized remedial instruction and tutorial services to nearly 14,000 disadvantaged students a year.

By passing this resolution today, we encourage colleges all across the country to follow the example of the City University of New York and employ innovative methods of meeting the extra needs of our Nation's disadvantaged students. I congratulate my colleagues on passing this important resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 735) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF REAL PROPERTY TO CITY OF MESQUITE, NV

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of H.R. 3352, dealing with Mesquite, NV, just received from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. There is no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3352) to transfer certain real property to the City of Mesquite, Nevada.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 565.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 565) entitled "An Act to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey, without consideration to the Town of Payson, Arizona, approximately 30.96 acres of Forest Service lands", do pass with the following amendments:

SEC. 4(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law or regulation, the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Bureau of Land Management, is authorized and directed to transfer title to certain land in Arizona in accordance with the terms of the Memorandum of Agreement Regarding the Disposal of Federal Lands at Lake Havasu City among the U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, the Arizona State Land Department, the Arizona State Parks Board and Lake Havasu City, dated November 25, 1985. The transfer of title to land along the shoreline of Lake Havasu shall be to elevation 450 feet above sea level: Provided, That the United States shall reserve unto itself the right to maintain the shoreline and to flood up to elevation 455 feet above sea level.

(b) The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to process an application by the County of Santa Cruz, Arizona, pursuant to the Recreation and Public Purposes Act for the following described lands: Provided, That, the processing shall be in accordance with the Memorandum of Understanding among the U.S. Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management and Santa Cruz County, dated September 17, 1986: S½NW¼ Section 5, and Lots 10 and 11, Section 6, T. 24 S., R. 14 E., G&SM. Executive Order No. 1398, dated August 15, 1911, which temporarily withdrew the above described land for use by the U.S. Forest Service for administrative purposes, is hereby revoked in its entirety, effective on the date of patent of the above described lands pursuant to the Recreation and Public Purposes Act to the County of Santa Cruz, Arizona.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to provide for the transfer of certain lands in the State of Arizona, and for other purposes.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments with a further amendment which I send to the desk on behalf of Senator MCCLURE and Senator DECONCINI.

AMENDMENT NO. 3270

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senator MCCLURE and Senator DECONCINI, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. MCCLURE and Mr. DECONCINI, proposes an amendment numbered 3270.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the House amendment insert the following new section 5 as follows:

SEC. 5. Section 205 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1715(c)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of subsection (c) by striking out "Lands and interests" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in subsection (e), lands and interests"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Lands acquired by the Secretary pursuant to this section or section 206 in exchange for lands which were revested in the United States pursuant to the provisions of the Act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218) or reconveyed to the United States pursuant to the provisions of the Act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. 1179), shall be considered for all purposes to have the same status as, and shall be administered in accordance with the same provisions of law applicable to, the revested or reconveyed lands exchanged for the lands acquired by the Secretary.".

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior, if he determines it necessary and appropriate for the purpose of consummating an exchange of lands or interests therein under applicable law, is hereby authorized and directed to:

(2) revoke the withdrawal under the First Form by Order of the Secretary of the Interior dated December 14, 1904, and as interpreted by Order of Interpretation of the Secretary of the Interior dated May 19, 1964, insofar as said withdrawal applies to section 31 (lots 1, 2, 3, W½E½, E½NW¼, SE¼SE¼) T. 5 N., R. 7 E., Gila and Salt River Meridian, Arizona.

Add a new section to S. 565 as follows and number accordingly:

"SEC. . Notwithstanding any provision of law or order based thereon, the Secretary of the Interior, at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, is authorized to take such actions (including but not limited to the revocation of withdrawals and the issuance of patents) as may be necessary to facilitate and consummate a land exchange in Idaho known as the Mesa Falls Exchange, as described in a Land Exchange Notice by the Department of Agriculture published in the Post-Register newspaper published in Idaho Falls, Idaho on November 12, 1985 (p. B-5), if the Secretary of Agriculture decides to proceeed with such exchange.".

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to S. 565, a bill to convey approximately 31 acres of Forest Service land to the town of Payson, AZ. The Payson legislation passed the Senate on August 9, 1986 and was sent to the House, where it passed with amendment. Two amendments were added in the House by Congressman UDALL to allow two very important land exchanges involving Bureau of Land Management lands in the State of Arizona to be finalized. Those amendments, which I heartily endorse, authorize the Secretary of the Interior to revoke two land classification withdrawals in Arizona. The land exchanges are being held up because of a court injunction in the National Wildlife Federation versus Burford lawsuit, which challenged certain withdrawal revocations. The Secretary of the Interior has been temporarily enjoined from revoking certain withdrawals and land classifications and the injunction is now being applied to all withdrawals and classifications. In the case of the Arizona exchanges which are included in the Payson bill, the National Wildlife Federation and the Department of the Interior have been contacted and have no objection to the exchanges. One exchange involving Bureau of Land Management lands in the Lake Havasu Area, known as Pittsburg Point, would allow the Federal Government to virtually repay the State of Arizona for lands that were taken from the State as a result of the construction of the Central Arizona Project. The State land department of Arizona has worked long and hard on this exchange and feels it is urgent that the exchange be completed without further delay. The other exchange involved some Bureau of Land Management lands in Santa Cruz County, AZ that the county wishes to acquire to provide space for the construction of a greatly needed county courthouse and public park. The BLM supports this exchange and it has been endorsed by the National Wildlife Federation.

In order to take care of one remaining exchange in Arizona that is important to wildlife habitat and at the same time, reduce the large number of checkerboard forest lands, I am sponsoring an amendment which will authorize the Secretary of the Interior to revoke a reclamation withdrawal so an exchange of private and Forest Service lands in Maricopa County, AZ can be completed. This exchange has the support of the National Wildlife Federation, Congressman UDALL, and many others in the State of Arizona.

I know of no objections to this amendment, Mr. President, and I ask that the Senate approve this amendment to S. 565. I further request that the Senate adopt S. 565 as amended.

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I rise to strongly support the passage of S. 565. The purpose of this bill is simply to effect changes in ownership between the Federal agencies and private or local government entities. These changes should not be controversial. They give force of law to agreements already reached between the interested parties.

My amendment to S. 565 allows the Forest Service to complete a land exchange with Sunlight Development Co. This exchange is in the best interests of the United States, the development company and several individuals who own structures on Forest Service land under special use permits. When the exchange is completed these uneasy tenants will have title to the land they occupy, the Forest Service will have control of a particularly scenic and vulnerable stretch of Hanry's Fork of the Snake River and the Sunlight will be fairly compensated for property no longer available for the purpose for which it was acquired. This exchange should have been accomplished very quickly administratively. However, due to legal action in which the Forest Service is only indirectly involved it appears that legislation is necessary.

This is an almost unique transaction where all parties benefit. I want to express my appreciation to my distinguished colleague Senator MCCLURE who has used his influence, as chairman of the Energy Committee, to move this bill forward rapidly. Mr. President, this is good legislation and I urge its passage.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment (No. 3270) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 1082) entitled "An Act granting the consent of Congress to the Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge Construction Compact", do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

SECTION 1. CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO COMPACT.

The Congress consents to the Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge Construction Compact, which was entered into between the States of Arkansas and Mississippi and was approved by law in the State of Arkansas on February 7, 1985, and in the State of Mississippi on March 19, 1985. The compact is substantially as follows:

"ARKANSAS MISSISSIPPI GREAT RIVER BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION COMPACT

"ARTICLE I

"The purpose of this compact is to promote the construction of a highway bridge or a combined highway-railroad bridge connecting the States of Mississippi and Arkansas at, near or between Rosedale, Mississippi, and McGehee and Dumas, Arkansas, and to establish a joint interstate authority to assist in these efforts.

"ARTICLE II

"This compact shall become effective immediately as to the States ratifying it whenever the States of Arkansas and Mississippi have ratified it and Congress has given consent thereto.

"ARTICLE III

"(a) The states which are parties to this compact (hereinafter referred to as 'Party States') do hereby establish and create a joint agency which shall be known as the Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge Authority (hereinafter referred to as 'The Authority'). The membership of The Authority shall consist of five (5) members from the State of Mississippi, to be selected in such manner as may be provided by laws enacted by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, and five (5) members from the State of Arkansas, to be selected in such manner as may be provided by laws enacted by the Arkansas General Assembly. The terms of the members of such Authority from each of the Party States, the method of appointing successor members, and the method of filling vacancies on The Authority, shall be determined by the laws of Mississippi and Arkansas.

"(b) The members of The Authority shall not be compensated for services on the Authority, but each member shall be entitled to actual and reasonable expenses incurred in attending meetings or incurred otherwise in the performance of his/her duties as a member of The Authority.

"(c) The members of The Authority shall meet upon the call of the chairman and hold such other meetings as its business may require. Special meetings of The Authority may be called by the chairman or upon written request of a majority of the members of The Authority from each of the Party States. The Authority shall choose annually a chairman and vice chairman from its members, and the chairmanship shall rotate each year among the Party States, in order of their acceptance of this compact.

"(d) The Secretary of The Authority (hereinafter provided for) shall notify each member in writing of all meetings of The Authority in such a manner and under such rules and regulations as The Authority may prescribe.

"(e) The Authority shall adopt rules and regulations for the transaction of its business; and the secretary shall keep a record of all its business and shall furnish a copy thereof to each member of The Authority.

"(f) It shall be the duty of The Authority, in general, to promote, encourage, and coordinate the efforts of the Party States to secure the development of the Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge at, near or between Rosedale, Mississippi, and McGehee-Dumas, Arkansas. Toward this end, The Authority shall have power to:

"(i) Hold hearings;

"(ii) Conduct studies and surveys of all problems, benefits, and other matters associated with the construction of the Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge, and to make reports thereon;

"(iii) Acquire by gift, grant or otherwise, from local, federal, or private sources, such money or property as may be provided for the proper performance of their function, and to hold and dispose of the same and to expend such monies as is necessary to defray the cost of establishing and operating The Authority;

"(v) Formulate and execute plans and policies for emphasizing the purpose of this compact before the Congress of the United States and other appropriate officers and agencies of the United States;

"(vi) Negotiate with one or more railroads in the State of Mississippi and the State of Arkansas and with the appropriate Federal authorities for the construction of the Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge as a combined highway-railroad bridge. If necessary, The Authority may enter into a contract with one or more railroads and/or the appropriate agencies of the United States to borrow funds for the construction of the railroad portion of the bridge, to be reimbursed, including all costs of principal, interest and other costs in connection with such indebtness, by revenues derived from rental fees, grants, or other charges, with such indebtedness to be secured solely by a pledge of such revenues; and

"(vii) Exercise such other powers as may be appropriate to enable it to accomplish its functions and duties in connection with the construction of the Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge as a highway bridge or a combined highway-railroad bridge, and to carry out the purposes of this compact.

ARTICLE IV

"The Authority shall appoint a secretary, who shall be a person familiar with the nature, procedures, and significance of the bridge construction and the informational, educational, and publicity methods of stimulating general interest in such developments, and who shall be the compact administrator. The term of office of the secretary shall be at the pleasure of The Authority and such officer shall receive such compensation as The Authority shall prescribe from monies provided to The Authority under Article III(f)iii). The secretary shall maintain custody of The Authority's books, records, and papers, which shall be kept by the secretary at the office of The Authority, and shall perform all functions and duties and exercise all powers and authorities which may be delegated to the secretary of The Authority.

"ARTICLE V

"Nothing in this compact shall be construed so as to conflict with any existing statute, or to limit the powers of any Party State, or to repeal or prevent legislation, or to authorize or permit curtailment or diminution of any other bridge project, or to affect any existing or future cooperative arrangement or relationship between any federal agency and a Party State.

"ARTICLE VI

"This compact shall continue in force and remain binding upon each Party State until the Legislature or Governor of each or either state takes action to withdraw therefrom; provided that such withdrawal shall not become effective until six (6) months after the date of the action taken by the Legislature or Governor. Notice of such action shall be given to the other Party State by the secretary of state of the Party State which takes such action.".

SEC. 2. FEDERAL JURISDICTION RETAINED.

Nothing in the compact approved by section 1 shall be construed as impairing or in any manner affecting any right or jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 3. RESERVATION.

The right to alter, amend, or repeal this Act is expressly reserved.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 1082, as amended by the House, a bill to authorize the States of Arkansas and Mississippi to create an interstate compact for the purpose of building a highway-railroad bridge across the Mississippi River. I would like to commend my friends and colleagues, Senators PRYOR, STENNIS, and COCHRAN, as well as our Representatives from Arkansas and Mississippi in the House, for their efforts in connection with this important legislation which will provide for a vital link between our great States.

The Arkansas-Mississippi Great River Bridge Authority to be established under the compact will coordinate and promote the efforts of the two States to construct an auto and train bridge between Rosedale, MS, and a point near McGehee, AR. The new bridge will be a positive and essential ingredient in ongoing efforts to attract new industry to our region of the country.

Mr. President, the people in Arkansas and Mississippi have worked long and hard on this project, focused on revitalizing the economies in our State, and I ask the Senate today to give its stamp of approval to this compact so that these State officials and local citizens can move forward with their construction plans. I would note that this body has previously given its unanimous approval to this piece of legislation and we need now only agree to a minor, technical amendment made by the House to correct an error in the compact language.

In addition, Mr. President, I am pleased to be able to point out that this legislation will not require the Federal Government to spend one dime. It will instead create an authority that will coordinate local, State, and Federal agencies in planning for a bridge that will be a commercial boon to southeast Arkansas and western Mississippi.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to table the motion to reconsider.

S.J. RES. 407

Whereas the success of America's schools stems from the competence and dedication of their instructional staffs, combined with the commitment of students, parents, and other community members;

Whereas citizen volunteers are a vital component of an effective educational experience, assisting professional educators to deliver quality instructional services;

Whereas many States and communities have demonstrated that citizen volunteers in the classroom enhance, extend, and enrich student learning as they contribute to the work of dedicated professional educators;

Whereas numerous communities encourage groups, such as business and civil groups, to create mutually beneficial working partnerships with their schools, thus offering positive support from the community which, in turn, both encourages staff and benefits the students;

Whereas the Congress recognizes that four million unpaid citizen volunteers in thousands of classrooms coast to coast contribute daily to the enhancement of the quality of instruction in our schools and thus, to the development of an educated citizenry; and

Whereas the magnitude, quality, and selflessness of these contributions of America's citizen school volunteers merit the highest appreciation and gratitude: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That November 12, 1986, is designated as "Salute to School Volunteers Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

S.J. RES. 359

Whereas all veterans are to be recognized, honored, and thanked for making sacrifices in order to make the United States a free and peaceful Nation;

Whereas the China-Burma-India Veterans Association is composed of men and women who most admirably served in the China-Burma-India theatre of operations during World War II, and the members of such Association deserve the right to preserve the recollections, comradeships, and experiences of Americans who have served in the Orient;

Whereas all Americans should become better acquainted with the situations and problems of the Far East; and

Whereas members of the China-Burma-India Veterans Association deserve the right to pay tribute to and preserve the memory of fellow veterans who died in defense of the United States and to maintain a proper standard of dignity and honor among all veterans of World War II: Now, therefore, be it

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE TO ISSUE CERTAIN PERMANENT EASEMENTS FOR WATER CONVEYANCE SYSTEMS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Energy Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 2921, the "ditch right-of-way" bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection to the committee discharge and there is likewise no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2921) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to issue permanent easements for water conveyance systems, in order to resolve title claims arising under Acts repealed by the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, as discharged, this Act, H.R. 2921, would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to issue permanent easements for certain water conveyance systems upon request of the owners, who are solely agricultural and livestock watering users, in order to resolve title claims, which claims arise under acts repealed by the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 [FLPMA]. The bill is intended to provide an optional method of confirming the status of certain irrigation systems which were constructed on Federal lands prior to the enactment of FLPMA, and to transfer administration of pre-FLPMA rights-of-way across National Forest System lands from the Department of Interior to the Department of Agriculture.

There exist on Federal lands ditches, canals, reservoirs, and other systems for the conveyance of water to the ultimate consumers. Many of those systems have existed under claim of right for long periods of years prior to the passage of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976. The committee has been acquainted with cases where despite this long established usage under claim of right, there is inadequate documentation or nonexistent of the right. In some cases it is difficult to demonstrate that the owners and users of these water conveyance systems had fulfilled the record keeping requirements of the General Land Office and successor agencies so as to establish clearly the right to continued, peaceable enjoyment of these rights-of-way. When the matter first came to the attention of our committee, we urged the agricultural interests and the Department of Agriculture to work together to develop a mutually agreeable statutory solution to the problem. The bill before us is the result of that effort.

In testimony before our committee, however, other concerned Federal lands users pointed out that the bill is so narrowly drawn that it is sure to create problems for the very intended beneficiaries of the legislation. For example, many ditches and ditch rights-of-way are owned in common by cotenants in the ditch, or by the shareholders in mutual ditch and reservoir companies, or other entities, public and private in nature, formed for the delivery of water to consumers off the Federal lands. The water rights carried in such ditches are generally, under the appropriation doctrine prevailing in the public lands States of the West, marketable without constraint from the other co-tenants or shareholders in the ditch system. It will lead to absurd results if a permanent easement obtained under H.R. 2921 and valid only so long as the use of the water is "solely agricultural" were then terminated because one, or several, of the common owners exercised their right to alienate their property interest in water rights to nonagricultural users. Amendments were proposed to cure this problem, and to assure that a change in the end use of water would not destroy the benefits of the legislation. Such a change in end water use places no greater burden on the actual usage of Federal lands.

A further concern expressed to the committee has to do with the consequences of the transfer of administrative jurisdiction over existing rights-of-way from the Department of Interior to the Department of Agriculture. Owners of these rights-of-way question whether the Department of Agriculture may use its new administrative powers to seek forfeiture of rights-of-way granted under the Act of March 3, 1891, (26 Stat. 1095, as amended by the Act of May 11, 1898, 30 Stat. 404), where the end use of waters carried on such rights-of-way are no longer used for the main purpose of irrigation, but instead have, through the operation of the free market system, undergone conversion to municipal and related beneficial uses pursuant to State law.

A further area of concern devolving from the proposed transfer of jurisdiction over existing rights-of-way to the Department of Agriculture was stated to be the deviation in the administration of pre-FLPMA rights-of-way under the long-settled principles, decisions, policies and regulations developed by the Department of Interior. Particular concern was advanced that those established principles continue to apply.

Amendments were proposed to lay to rest these concerns. One specific amendment would have deleted this transfer of jurisdiction from the bill until such time as all of the effects of the transfer can be studied and discussed fully before the Congress. These proposed amendments would also maintain existing conditions, policies and procedures of the Department of Interior in order to maintain rights of grantees.

The committee inquired of the Department of Agriculture for its views on these points. The response is appended to this report. In it, we were again requested to refrain from amendments to the bill. With respect to the narrowness of the "solely agricultural" standard by which eligibility for the new category of rights-of-way has been defined, the Department has assured the committee that it will devote a good faith effort, in cooperation with concerned water users, to develop amendments for consideration by the Congress in a subsequent session to cure the problems flowing from the narrowness of the eligibility standard. This broadening will enable market forces to allow a multiplicity of uses of the water rights associated with rights-of-way on Federal lands.

With respect to the prospect of a departmental construction of the act of March 3, 1891, as amended by the Act of May 11, 1898, whereby the holders of grants thereunder would face loss of their rights-of-way by reason of a change in the end use of the water carried to purposes other than primarily agricultural irrigation, the committee has been assured that no such construction of the statute is advanced by the Department. Re-permitting with its attendant substantial costs and uncertainties for such existing conveyance systems is not intended by the Department or by Congress. Accordingly, no amendments to preclude such a construction are required. With respect to the potential disruption on pending administrative matters, the Department of Agriculture has assured the committee that it will continue to employ the applicable rules, policies, and regulations of the Department of the Interior. Holders of existing rights-of-way shall continue to have the full use of the estate granted in accordance with the terms of the grant and applicable law. These include the right to cure defects discovered during administration, whether they be minor or require an application to amend the granted rights-of-way. No administrative action will preclude the full enjoyment of the granted rights-of-way nor alter the nature of the interest granted. No requirement for re-permitting is intended by the Department.

With these representations of the Department in mind, we determined to accede to the request to refrain from amendments, to discharge the bill without amendment, and to defer amendments until we have considered further the suggested areas of amendment to H.R. 2921 described in the letter from the Department and the testimony before the committee. In so doing, we rely on the Department's representation that until Congress has had a full opportunity to consider proposed amendments, no action to divest users who would qualify for the benefits of H.R. 2921 but for their inability to qualify as "solely agricultural * * *" will be undertaken by the Department. We fully expect the Department of Agriculture to take care to avoid any action that will diminish or reduce the rights conferred under a right-of-way granted prior to October 21, 1976, including any deviation or amendments required subsequent to the original grant.

We expect the Department to work with holders of rights-of-way to preserve the full extent of rights vested prior to FLPMA, and to develop any necessary amendments to the act securing holder these benefits.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter received from the Department of Agriculture dated October 1, 1986, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, DC, October 1, 1986.

Hon. MALCOLM WALLOP,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Public Lands, Reserved Water, and Resources Conservation, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WALLOP: At the September 23, 1986, hearings on H.R. 2921 before the Senate Subcommittee on Public Lands, the Colorado Water Congress testified to the need for amendments to the bill. You asked for the Department of Agriculture's views on these suggested amendments.

In our view, the concerns expressed relate to three somewhat different issues. The first concern expressed was that the limitation in H.R. 2921 to "solely agricultural or livestock watering purposes" unnecessarily constricted the benefits of the legislation. The legislation has the purpose of recognizing the rights of a certain class of ditch owners who cannot document a right of way issued prior to October 21, 1976. It was pointed out that many ditches on the Federal lands have a multiplicity of owners, any one of whom under State law may change the ultimate use of his share of the water right carried in the ditch to other than agricultural irrigation purposes. Many such changes have occurred over the past 90 years and many are occurring today. Thus it was observed that intended beneficiaries of this bill may lose any entitlement under it from the operation of State sanctioned market systems in water rights by or among co-users of ditches.

The Department understands the desire of the Subcommittee to avoid amendments now, considering the lack of time remaining in the session. We acknowledge that further amendments, carefully drawn and considered, would be appropriate to cure these situations. The end use of water off the Federal lands, as it may change over time, casts no greater burden on the Federal property to carry the water to its place of use. The Department contemplates administrative procedures under H.R. 2921 which obviate much of this concern, particularly a procedure whereby easements allowed by H.R. 2921 may be automatically converted for permits under FLPMA. The Department will work with your committee and other concerned persons to develop and support appropriate administrative action or statutory amendments for the consideration of Congress in a future session. In that way, relief from uncertainty can now be provided for certain irrigators and stockmen without creating unintended implications for other water users. In a succeeding Congress the full, necessary consideration of the scope of the amendments can be achieved. The Department reemphasizes that H.R. 2921 does not create any implication attributable to any pre-existing rights of way, the owners of which may elect not to avail themselves of the benefits of H.R. 2921.

Second, concerns were expressed at the hearing that the Department of Agriculture, under the jurisdictional authority proposed to be transferred to it as part of H.R. 2921, contemplates asserting forfeitures against those holders of rights of way issued pursuant to the Act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat 1095) as amended by the Act of May 11, 1898 (30 Stat. 404), whose end use of water off the public lands is no longer for the primary purpose of irrigation.

Third, concerns were expressed that rights of way previously granted by the Act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat. 790), and the Act of February 1, 1905 (33 Stat. 628), will not be administered by the Department of Agriculture in accordance with the settled procedures and laws that have developed over the past 85 years during which the administration of such rights of way have been subject to the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. To resolve these concerns, amendments to H.R. 2921 were suggested which would preclude administrative changes to the detriment of holders of pre-FLPMA rights of way.

For reasons which follow, the Department does not believe that such amendments are now appropriate or required. The construction placed on the Act of 1891, as amended, by the Department for the rights of way it will administer does not prejudice or diminish the rights of grantees thereunder. We do not assert that the end-use of water, which may change from irrigation to municipal or other beneficial uses recognized under State law, in and of itself occasions a forfeiture of such rights of way.

The Department is fully aware of the decision of the United States Court of Appeals in City and County of Denver v. Bergland, 695 F.2d 465 (1982). Concern has been expressed that with its acquisition of administrative jurisdiction, the Department will diminish the entitlements of rights of way holders under existing grants. The Department disavows any such intention. The Department will be careful to avoid any action that will reduce the rights conferred under pre-FLPMA grants, and will process pending application for amendment and other pending administrative matters in accordance with the applicable regulations, policies, and procedures of the Department of the Interior.

The Department must of course maintain its authority to assure that holders of rights of way on Federal Lands use those lands in sound ways. However, we do not assert that pre-FLPMA rights of way for water conveyance and storage systems must be subjected to a repermitting process. The Department recognizes that long-standing uses ought not be diminished by insignificant defects in survey or description made many years ago, or a change in the end use of the water off the Federal lands.

We hope that this letter has adequately clarified the Department of Agriculture's position on concerns that have been raised related to H.R. 2921.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS W. MACCLEERY,
Deputy Assistant Secretary for Natural Resources and Environment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I rise to lend my support to the passage of H.R. 2921 sponsored by Congressman MIKE STRANG of Colorado. I wish, however, to make certain that the understandings that have been arrived at in discussions with the Department of Agriculture and the Forest Service regarding its administration of ditch rights of way on national forest lands are clear and unequivocal.

I strongly support the basic objectives of H.R. 2921, but share the concerns about the limited scope of the bill and possible unintended effects of its passage that were expressed by the representatives of the Colorado Water Congress at the hearing on September 23, 1986. Subsequent to the hearing, extensive discussions of H.R. 2921 were held between the representatives of the Colorado Water Congress and Mr. Douglas MacCleery, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Natural Resources and Environment, regarding the administration of the bill, should it be enacted. There was also extensive discussion regarding the administration of all other rights of way which would result from the transfer of administrative jurisdiction over existing rights of way from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture. As a result of those discussions, Mr. MacCleery has written a letter to Senator WALLOP describing the Department's views and policies on the administration of ditch rights of way on national forest lands.

With the receipt of the letter from Deputy Secretary MacCleery and its incorporation into the record by Senator WALLOP, I have been advised by the Colorado Water Congress that most of the major concerns that stem from the passage of this bill have been alleviated. But, because there continue to be serious reservations expressed to my office by municipal and agricultural water users with rights of way on forest lands, I want to make it clear that my support of this bill is contingent upon the good-faith effort by the Department of Agriculture and the Forest Service to carry out the policies and objectives outlined in the MacCleery letter. I regard this legislation as only one step in the process of resolving these ditch rights of way issue and I accept the representations in the letter that the Forest Service does not claim the power and will not undertake or embark on a policy of re-permitting of pre-FLPMA rights of way.

Passage of this specific legislation to cure a unique problem in no way implies or should be construed as an intent by Congress to restrict or preclude further oversight amendments to address other problems. Congress has no intention to provide by implication or exclusion any directive to the Department of Agriculture or other Federal agencies that applies in an adverse way to any other water use, easement, access, or permit on or utilizing lands of the United States.

Key commitments by the Department expressed in Deputy Secretary MacCleery's letter are, and I quote: "* * * we do not assert that pre-FLPMA rights of way for water conveyance and storage must be subjected to a re-permitting process. The Department recognizes that longstanding uses ought not be diminished by insignificant defects in survey or description made many years ago, or a change in the end use of the water off Federal lands." In addition, the Department has committed to assist to, and I quote from the letter, "* * * develop and support appropriate amendment for the consideration of Congress * * *" to cure situations not covered by H.R. 2921.

I fully recognize, as does the Department and other water experts who have studied the rights of way problem, that much remains to be done before a long term, stable resolution or the rights of way problem can be achieved. Most important, we cannot allow the administration of ditch rights of way on public lands to diminish or damage longstanding water rights that form the basis of the economies of Western States.

It is absolutely essential to the water systems of the West that all pre-FLPMA ditch rights of way be fully protected, either by confirmation of the continued validity of these pre-existing rights of way, or by issuing new permits in perpetuity. It is also essential that no cost be attached to the permitting for agricultural uses. Many of these agricultural ditches are as old as the Forest Service, and the economies of agricultural use of water cannot sustain the extra burdens of fees for ditch rights of way. At the same time, it is well recognized that water users have the obligation to maintain these rights of way in a manner that will protect adjoining forest lands from damage.

In conclusion, I want to express my appreciation to Senator WALLOP for his efforts to resolve this very complex and difficult problem. His understanding of water and the history of its development in the West give him unique qualifications to deal with the issues we now confront. I appreciate the leadership the distinguished Senator from Wyoming provides in water issues so crucial to the West. I look forward to working closely with him to develop future legislation that may be required to finally resolve the ditch right of way issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 2921) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I inquire of the distinguished minority leader if he is in a position to confirm the following executive calendar nominations: Calendar No. 1065, Paul A. Russo; Calendar No. 1103, Robert B. Barker.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, both of those calendar numbers have been approved on this side by all Members and we are ready to proceed.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the minority leader.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session to consider the nominations just identified and that the nominations be considered en bloc and confirmed en bloc.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations are considered en bloc and confirmed en bloc.

Mr. DOLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the nominations were considered and confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Paul A. Russo, of Virginia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Barbados, and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Commonwealth of Dominica, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Saint Lucia, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Antigua and Barbuda, and Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to St. Christopher and Nevis.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Robert B. Barker, of California, to be Chairman of the Military Liaison Committee to the Department of Energy.

PAUL RUSSO, AMBASSADOR TO BARBADOS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate has confirmed Paul A. Russo as the new U.S. Ambassador to Barbados. He has solid governmental experience at the highest levels, having completed outstanding work for President Reagan in the White House as Special Assistant for Political Affairs and as a Deputy Undersecretary at the Department of Labor, to name but two of Mr. Russo's recent responsibilities.

The Senator from Kansas has known the new Ambassador for a number of years and can attest to his hard work ethic and integrity. Barbados and its nearby island nations play a key role in the Caribbean for the United States in both their economic and strategic importance, and I am confident he will serve his country well.

Mr. Russo is a graduate of Ohio State University who has compiled a superb career in politics and Government. He will continue to do the same good work in his new assignment in the Barbados.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Energy and Natural Resoures be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 2826, amending the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, and that the Senate turn to its immediate consideration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I shall have to object at this time. I hope the matter can be cleared before the end of the session and we shall make every endeavor to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. President, does the Senator from Alaska seek recognition?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the majority leader.

ALASKA NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to the immediate consideration of H.R. 4162, Calendar Item No. 1083.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I regret that I have to object on behalf of several Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I wonder if the minority leader has any idea or if he feels that this might be cleared prior to the end of the session?

Mr. BYRD. I understand that there is a substitute for the measure. It has been printed in the RECORD and is being studied by various Senators. Perhaps it can be cleared before the end of the session.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank my friend, the minority leader. I do wish to assure him for the record that I shall make every attempt, as will my senior colleague, Mr. STEVENS, I am sure, to meet with any Senators on the minority side who object to the proposed bill. I shall try to answer any questions that they may have.

I do thank the minority leader for his consideration on this matter at this time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I wonder if it is in order that somehow or other, we be given a list of bills that are going to be cleared for the consent calendar for the balance of the session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no such list.

Mr. STEVENS. I am in a conference committee. It is a continuing conference committee now that I think will be continued right up until the end of the session. It is awfully difficult to be here at the same time that bills are coming and going. I know it is an extreme burden on the staff, but I think that in view of the timing of the winding down of this session, it is fair that we have some information concerning the bills other Members are seeking to clear.

I note with some respect that there are a series of measures that pertain to our State that are not being cleared. It happens, in my judgment, that they are being objected to by the same Senators. Since we are in this unanimous consent mode, I felt that perhaps we might be able to obtain information concerning matters that other Senators may be seeking unanimous consent on so I might be present to lodge an objection when it is appropriate.

Is there some way we can ask for advance notice of items that are cleared? I note that we no longer have the rule that matters appear on the calendar for 1 day, which pertained in all prior Congresses where I was involved in management on the floor. It is not easy to follow these matters under the current procedures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no such list and does not have access to such list. He regretfully states that he cannot be of assistance to the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I wonder if the Senator from Alaska will yield on this question—and I defer to the minority leader—if it is a policy or procedure to have available the information relative to the number of Senators who might have a hold or, as I understand it, the information available currently on H.R. 4162 does not give the name of the individual Senator and the difficulty is the inability to respond to that Senator. I wonder if I could direct this to the President for a ruling, a question specifically as to whether or not if we cannot get the name of the individual Senator with the hold, whether we can get an indication if there is more than one. I will ask that of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would tell the junior Senator from Alaska that there is no procedural status, and the Chair is not able to provide the Senator from Alaska with such information and respectfully suggests that the junior Senator from Alaska address the question to the minority leader inasmuch as he has indicated the objection.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the Chair.

I assume there is not much more that the minority leader could impart as far as information as to whether there might be more than one hold or not on this matter?

Mr. BYRD. Yes. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, there is an objection on the part of several Senators, or various Senators, I do not remember the word that I used, but there is more than one objection.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the minority leader, and I assume the procedure then is to informally do the best you can.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I think that is correct. I am sure that the staff on the distinguished Senator's side of the aisle will continue to work with staff on this side of the aisle and will attempt to clear the item.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Let me reassure the minority leader of our willingness to work with those who have questions on this legislation. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy and I thank the Chair.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

SENATOR MATHIAS DEPARTS

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, it is with a real sense of impending loss that I note the retirement from this body of the distinguished, unique, and able senior Senator from Maryland, Mr. MATHIAS.

"MAC" MATHIAS is one of those rare people in public life who has never let the trappings of office overwhelm his true nature. His grace and good humor are constant qualities that he brings to every occasion, thereby making even the most daunting task seem easier.

For me, he has become a true friend and wise counsel, as well as an ally in many a good cause.

It has been my special good fortune to have him as a colleague on the Committee on Foreign Relations where his perception and sense of fairness have contributed greatly to the balance of the committee.

I particularly commend him for his work on the South African sanctions bill, where his leadership was critical in ensuring that the committee take a strong stand in opposition to apartheid.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy, Senator MATHIAS was among the first to sound the alarm about the threat to international stability posed by the burgeoning debt of underdeveloped countries.

He also has taken a keen interest in our relationship with our NATO allies. For many years, he served as chairman of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly, and he is currently finishing up a year of service as the Assembly president. His expert knowledge, diplomatic skill, and personal grace have greatly strengthened the United States-European interparliamentary relationship in support of NATO.

On the Committee on Rules and Administration, where he succeeded me as chairman, Senator MATHIAS has presided with notable equanimity and fortitude over the often-vexing problems involving internal management of the Senate.

Telephone procurement, Capitol security, computer services, campaign finance regulation, oversight of the Smithsonian Institution and the Library of Congress and a host of other matters have received calm and patient consideration under the chairmanship of the Senator from Maryland.

By all odds, the most historic achievement of Chairman MATHIAS' tenure at the helm of the Rules Committee is the smooth, and I might say beneficial, transition of the Senate to the television age.

I must admit that I myself came only late and with reluctance to support TV coverage of Senate proceedings. But Senator MATHIAS was perhaps more farsighted than some of the rest of us in recognizing some time ago not only that the Senate owed it to itself and to the Nation to adapt to the times, but that the institution would not suffer from doing so. I believe our experience to date has amply confirmed his judgment.

"MAC" MATHIAS will be remembered fondly for many things but perhaps most of all for his sense of scholarship and erudition. To the wonderment of us all, he is never at a loss for an appropriate literary allusion to sum up an occasion.

In the words of one of his most frequent sources of inspiration, Dr. Samuel Johnson, he is indeed "a Lord among wits."

Notwithstanding Dr. Johnson's abiding prejudice against Scotland, CHARLES MCCURDY MATHIAS, JR., is probably just the man Dr. Johnson had in mind when he said:

"Much may be made of a Scotsman if he be caught young."

The Senator from Maryland was indeed caught young. He started public life as an assistant State attorney general at the tender age of 31 and has been at it ever since. He first entered elective office in 1958 and has been reelected time and again, proving that Maryland respects his independent style and political courage. He has served his State with great distinction and while many of us are sad to see him leave the Senate, everyone would agree that he richly deserves a respite.

I only hope that he maintains his contacts and friendship with all of us he leaves behind in the Senate.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRASSLEY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 8 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF THE MERCHANTS NATIONAL BANK OF MOBILE, AL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 593.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 593) entitled "an Act for the relief of the Merchants National Bank of Mobile, Alabama", do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $809,609, to the Merchants National Bank of Mobile, Alabama, for compensation for losses sustained during the period January 1, 1976, through December 31, 1978, concerning the issuance and cancellation of a Government loan guarantee and the subsequent issuance of a second loan guarantee on reduced terms, resulting from actions and misrepresentations of the Defense Logistics Agency of the Department of Defense and its fiscal agent, the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta.

SEC. 2. (a) The payment made pursuant to the first section of this Act shall constitute full settlement of the legal and equitable claims by the Merchants National Bank of Mobile, Alabama, against the United States, covered by this Act.

(b) No part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Violation of the provisions of this subsection is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amended version of S. 593, a bill for the relief of the Merchants National Bank of Mobile, introduced by Senator HOWELL HEFLIN and myself on March 6, 1985. Passage of the bill would conclude a congressional reference proceeding that began in the U.S. Senate more than 6 years ago. On October 31, 1985, the original bill was considered by the Judiciary Committee and was unanimously reported to the full Senate for consideration. On December 6, 1985, the Senate approved the original bill by voice vote. Today, the House approved an amended version of the bill.

The bill complements the legislation that was introduced by Senator HEFLIN in the 96th Congress (S. 2052), and referred in November 1979 by Senate Resolution 291 to the Chief Commissioner of the U.S. Claims Court.

The reference sought the court's consideration of whether the Merchants National Bank of Mobile [the bank] was legally or equitably entitled to compensation for losses sustained in connection with a defective Federal loan guarantee issued by the Department of Defense. After a lengthy trail before a hearing officer, and argument before a review panel, the U.S. Claims Court, through its chief judge, has advised the Senate that the bank has an equitable claim for $809,609, and that payment of the amount would not constitute a gratuity.

The losses sustained by the bank relate to loans made to a Government contractor in Mobile, AL, which was attempting to perform two contracts, awarded by the Defense Logistics Agency in 1976, to assemble combat rations for the military. In the early stages of the contracts, lengthy delays and mishandling of materiel by the Government, generated substanial unforseen costs to the contractor. To assist the contract in securing financing for the costs, the Agency approved a loan guarantee to the bank pursuant to the Defense Production Act V-Loan Guarantee Program.

When the bank had advanced virtually the entire guaranteed sum—almost $2 million—the Agency abruptly cancelled the guarantee because it discovered that no funds had been appropriated to support the guarantee agreement. Nevertheless, stressing the importance of the combat rations contracts to the defense effort, the Agency pledged its full assistance to Merchants Bank and the contractor to encourage them to proceed with the contracts. The Agency even drafted legislation to allow the issuance of a suitable replacement guarantee. Based upon these assurances, the bank agreed to continue supporting the Government's contractor.

Soon thereafter, appropriate language was included in the 1978 DOD Appropriations Act to make available $5 million for the express purpose of authorizing new loan guarantee agreements. At this point, the bank applied for a new v-loan guarantee consistent with the assurances it had received from the Defense Logistics Agency. Notwithstanding the availability of suitable loan guarantee authority and the assurances that the Agency would do everything possible to restore the guarantees upon which the bank had relied, the Agency refused the application. Instead, it offered a guarantee substantially less favorable than the first, and only after requiring the bank to extend an additional half-million dollars in unguaranteed credit to the Government's contractor.

Meanwhile, the Agency acknowledged that its handling of the contracts had substantially increased the cost of performance. Consequently, it enlarged the credit requirements of the contractor. Because the second loan guarantee was wholly insufficient to support these credit requirements, and since the Bank could not prudently extend further credit in light of its alreay substantial unguaranteed exposure, the contractor was forced to close its doors and file for bankruptcy in 1978. Both before and after the bankruptcy petition was filed, the bank expressed its willingness several times to join with the Agency in cooperative financing arrangements that would save the company. The Agency refused to entertain these suggestions, and in April 1978 the contractor was adjudged bankrupt.

In extending credit for the performance of the Government contracts, the bank understandably relied upon representations and assurances of the Defense Logistics Agency. When the first guarantee was suddenly cancelled, the bank again relied upon the assurances of senior Agency officials that, pending enactment of new guarantee authority, a replacement loan guarantee would be established in an amount sufficient to protect the bank. When the Agency ultimately refused to stand by those assurances, the resultant credit limitations left the contractor facing bankruptcy and caused the bank to suffer losses of nearly $1.7 million.

Because the bank's losses were primarily the result of its reliance upon a guarantee that exceeded the authority of the responsible Government officers, it was apparent that a successful legal cause of action for the recovery of these losses was extremely unlikely. Where Government officials act beyond the scope of their authority, the obstacles to maintain a legal cause of action to recover from the United States are virtually insurmountable. For that reason, S. 2052 was introduced in the 96th Congress and was referred by Senate resolution to the court of claims for consideration.

After a lengthy trial, which filled 2,000 transcript pages, Judge Spector, a senior judge of the claims court, on April 30, 1984, issued an exhaustive 65-page report in which he recommended that Congress authorize payment to Merchants Bank of $809,609 in full settlement of all its legal or equitable claims against the United States. The report concluded that the Government was responsible for a series of wrongful acts, including several unfulfilled assurances upon which the bank had relied in extending credit to the contractor. Judge Spector also found that the bank's cooperation with the Government and its contractor was in part motivated by the Agency's insistence that continued production under the contract was urgently required to support national defense needs.

Government counsel took exception to many of the findings, and a three-judge review panel of the claims court considered yet another round of briefs and oral argument from the parties.

The resulting 22-page report of December 6, 1984, confirmed Judge Spector's conclusions and recommended that the chief judge transmit to the Senate its conclusion that Merchants Bank has an equitable claim against the Government for $809,609. Copies of the decisions of both judge Spector and the review panel were referred to the Secretary of the Senate by the chief judge of the claims court on December 19, 1984.

The bill would give effect to the conclusions rendered after careful adjudication by the claims court. It does not compensate the bank for all of the losses it has suffered in supporting this Government contractor. Indeed, the bank has never sought total compensation from the United States for its losses, nor does it seek to recover the painful costs generated by some 5 years of watching this congressional reference proceeding take its long and careful course.

The bill would confirm the efficacy of some of the longstanding traditions of a congressional reference, traditions founded in part upon a simple recognition that there should be an avenue by which the Government can be held accountable for its mistakes and excesses. Accountability is particularly important when, as in this case, losses are suffered expressly because of the trust and reliance that was placed quite naturally in a Government agency responsible for the national defense.

Mr. President, the House version of the bill contains language which makes clear that no part of the amount appropriated in the bill in excess of 10 percent thereof could be paid or delivered to any agent or attorney of the bank on account of services rendered in connection with the claim. The purpose of this language is to prohibit any agent or attorney of the bank from receiving funds due from the bank on a contingent fee or success fee basis as a result of its representation of the bank; the language makes clear that payments by the bank to any agents or attorneys on a contingent basis in excess of 10 percent of $809,609 are unlawful. The section is not intended to apply to traditional hourly arrangements made by the bank for attorneys in connection with representation of the bank in handling this congressional reference claim through the detailed process set out in title 28, United States Code, sections 1492, 2509. This additional language is acceptable to Senator HEFLIN and myself.

Mr. President, the bill involves a unique, unprecedented set of facts, and will provide compensation only to the Merchants National Bank of Mobile for its own proven losses.

I urge my colleagues to again support equitable compensation for the Merchants National Bank of Mobile by concurring with the House amendment and passing the bill.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NAVY RABBI JOINS ICELAND TEAM

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as the President departs for the summit meeting in Iceland with Soviet leader Gorbachev, the Nation's Jewish community prepares to observe one of the most important dates on the Jewish religious calendar, the high holiday of Yom Kippur.

For this reason the President has asked Rabbi Arnold Resnicoff, a Navy chaplain stationed at the Naval Chaplains School in Newport, RI, to fly to Iceland with President Reagan and conduct Yom Kippur services for the President's staff.

This is not the first time that Rabbi Resnicoff has been a part of momentous events. In 1983, the rabbi cared for the injured and dying in the aftermath of the terrorist bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut, Lebanon. The President took note of Rabbi Resnicoff's actions in Beirut and asked him to prepare a report on the terrorist attack and subsequent rescue effort.

Mr. President, the Providence Journal recently reported on Rabbi Resnicoff's participation in the Iceland summit and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the article, entitled "Navy Rabbi To Join Iceland Team," be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY RABBI TO JOIN ICELAND TEAM

NEWPORT.—Rabbi Menachem Resnicoff and his family immigrated to America nearly a century ago, in flight from the persecution that haunted Jews in their native Russia.

Today, his grandson will complete the journey that his grandfather began more than 80 years ago, Rabbi Arnold Resnicoff, a Navy chaplain, will fly to Iceland to lead Yon Kippur services for President Reagan's summit staff.

"I'm only sorry that my father is not alive to see this, that one generation after they escaped to America, one of our family will lead a service at a meeting with Russia," Rabbi Resnicoff said from his office at the Naval Chaplains School in Newport.

"My grandfather used to thank God that there was a country like America. It was that feeling he bequeathed to me."

ONLY CHAPLAIN AT SUMMIT

Rabbi Resnicoff isn't sure why he was chosen to be the only chaplain at the presummit between Mr. Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev that begins Friday. All he knows is that the White House asked the Armed Forces Chaplain Board to select a rabbi, and the Navy's chief of chaplains picked him.

Perhaps someone in the administration remembered the Navy chaplain who cared for the dying and wounded in the aftermath of the 1983 terrorist bombing of a Marine barracks in Beirut, Lebanon.

Mr. Reagan asked Rabbi Resnicoff to write an account of the attack and the rescue effort that followed. The President later read the report during a national convention headed by the Rev. Jerry Falwell.

"My first feeling was one of pride in America," Rabbi Resnicoff said of his trip to Iceland. "(It's) the thought that someone in Reagan's staff felt comfortable bringing in religion as a matter of course, that this was an important time of the year."

The summit falls during the high holy days of the Jewish religion. Yom Kippur—the day of atonement—is the holiest day in the Jewish year, capping a period of reflection, study and prayer.

Rabbi Resnicoff believes there is a certain lovely irony to the timing of these two "events."

"Jews believe they can learn from the past," he explained. "We're telling ourselves as individuals, as a people and as a nation that we should learn from past actions and break out of unhealthy cycles."

Someone recently asked Rabbi Resnicoff what he would say if he met the Soviet leader.

"What would I say to Gorbachev if I could stand in front of him in the uniform of a U.S. Navy officer with the Ten Commandments—the symbol of a Jewish chaplain—on my sleeve? I would not have to say another word. My uniform says it all."

Rabbi Resnicoff joined the Navy because of his father's love of America. But it was his experience in the Navy that led him to become a rabbi. It was in Vietnam's Mekong Delta that he began to lead services for fellow Jews.

He said he returned to the Navy after completing his rabbinical studies for two reasons. "Loyalty. If it hadn't been for the Navy, I wouldn't have become a rabbi. And second, almost never did I see a rabbi in the Navy."

The rabbi isn't sure what he will say in his sermon on Sunday, the beginning of Yom Kippur. He said he might draw on the historic message of Yom Kippur—the notion that people can learn from their mistakes.

The idea I got from my father is you can make things better or worse. Just as individuals can make a difference, so can nations. A nation is not an evil thing. It can either be a force for good or for suffering.

"I believe it's my responsibility not only to be a good individual but to be a good citizen."

What hopes does Rabbi Resnicoff have for the first meeting of the two superpower leaders?

"It may be impossible, but if Russia could understand that America does not negotiate based only on what's good for us (and that) we really care about individual liberties and human rights, that would be a step forward."

The only thing Rabbi Resnicoff regrets is not being able to spend Yom Kippur with his wife and daughter. But after 10 years in the Navy, the rabbi has grown accustomed to missing holidays with his family.

If his father were alive today. Rabbi Resnicoff thinks he would be thrilled with the honor bestowed on his son.

"For my father, I know there would be tears on his cheeks. He'd say that he's only sorry that his father wasn't alive to see this."

STATUS OF IMPORTS FROM YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I am today offering a bill that deals with a problem that has arisen where an American citizen has been tried by a court in Yugoslavia and sentenced to a 7-year prison term for activities that this American citizen carried out in the United States—activities of a proper political sort. Expressing his views here in the United States is the reason he has been jailed, tried, and now convicted to a 7-year term in Yugoslavia.

The man in question, Pjeter Ivezaj, is a U.S. citizen from Sterling Heights, MI. I am greatly distressed by this development, as are others in my State. Certainly his family is greatly distressed, as are others who have followed this case, because of what is obviously improper conduct by the Government of Yugoslavia.

This afternoon, my colleague in the House of Representatives from Michigan, Congressman WILLIAM BROOMFIELD, who is the senior Michigan Republican in the House and ranking Republican on the Foreign Affairs Committee, filed a bill that is exactly the same as the one I will now file, containing the cosponsorship of the 18 House Members in both parties from the State of Michigan, as well as several dozen other colleagues in the House of Representatives.

What the bill would do is, if passed, suspend the most-favored-nation trading status with Yugoslavia until such time as this illegal detainment of an American citizen comes to an end and this, and any other similarly incarcerated individual, is released.

This is a very serious matter. I say to the officials of Yugoslavia that this is unacceptable behavior and conduct toward citizens of this country and toward our country, and I, for one, feel strongly that unless this matter is resolved quickly and properly, we ought not to be seeing Yugoslavian goods of any sort coming into the United States, because this is just unacceptable and intolerable conduct between our Nations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of the bill and two articles from the Detroit News and the Detroit Free Press relating to this matter.

There being no objection, the text of the bill and articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2915

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. DENIAL OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT.

Nondiscriminatory treatment (Most-Favored Nation treatment) shall be denied to any product of Yugoslavia that is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in the customs territory of the United States on or after the 10th day after the date of enactment of this Act unless prior to that 10th day, the President determines and reports to the Congress that the Government of Yugoslavia has released all citizens of the United States who the President finds have been imprisoned or otherwise detained in the custody of government authorities in Yugoslavia without adequate justification and that the Government of Yugoslavia has ceased to implement any policy or program which results in such unjustified imprisonment or detainment of United States citizens.

SEC. 2. DURATION OF DENIAL.

In the event that the denial of nondiscriminatory treatment (Most-Favored-Nation treatment) to any product of Yugoslavia required under section 1 of this Act takes effect, such denial shall continue in effect until such time as the President determines and reports to the Congress that the Government of Yugoslavia has released all citizens of the United States who the President finds have been imprisoned or otherwise detained in the custody of government authorities in Yugoslavia without adequate justification and that the Government of Yugoslavia has ceased to implement any policy or program which results in such unjustified imprisonment or detainment of United States citizens.

YUGOSLAVS CONVICT AMERICAN

DETROIT AREA MAN GETS 7-YEAR TERM

(By Roddy Ray)

Pjeter Ivezaj, a U.S. citizen from Sterling Heights, was sentenced Wednesday to seven years in prison by a panel of judges in Yugoslavia for participating in peaceful anti-Yugoslav activities in this country.

The sentence prompted outrage in Washington and at the Ivezaj family's home. His lawyer in Yugoslavia entered an immediate appeal.

"Please help us," his father, Leka, a 56-year-old Chrysler Corp. worker, said through an interpreter. The family had declined previously to be interviewed for publication, fearing their statements would adversely affect the outcome of Ivezaj's trial.

"I was told that I should button my lips, so to say," said his brother Frano, 28. "I've buttoned my lips enough. Now I intend to take this matter to the court of world opinion. If U.S. citizenship has any value, which I believe it does, now is the time for the U.S. government to make a move."

Ivezaj, 30, of Albanian descent, was arrested in August after flying to Yugoslavia with his wife and daughter to visit relatives, family members said. He has been a naturalized U.S. citizen for 10 years and has worked as a bilingual technician with the Detroit Public Schools.

A statement released Wednesday by the U.S. Embassy in Belgrade said the charges apparently stemmed from his "alleged membership in an alleged Albanian-American student organization and participation in an 'Anti-Yugoslav' demonstration" in Washington in 1981.

"The U.S. Government will continue to press vigorously for Mr. Ivezaj's release. We have informed senior Yugoslav officials of our outrage that an American citizen could be arrested and tried for . . . exercising his constitutional rights in the United States. We have also informed Yugoslav government officials that actions such as these can only harm bilateral relations between Yugoslavia and the United States," the statement said.

In Washington, U.S. Rep. William Broomfield of Birmingham, the ranking Republican on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, joined with four other congressmen in drafting a letter asking Secretary of State George Shultz to revoke Yugoslavia's favored-nation trade status.

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., asked the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to investigate Ivezaj's "deplorable case."

Broomfield, whose district includes Sterling Heights, and Levin said U.S. diplomatic officials expressed optimism that Ivezaj's sentence would be overturned.

Ivezaj's trial began Friday and ended Monday. The news of his sentence apparently hit hardest at home, when the family took the 8:45 a.m. telephone call from his wife, Juliana, in Titograd, Yugoslavia. Juliana Ivezaj, who is pregnant, attended the trial with other family members, including Ivezaj's mother, Pashka, 55. Juliana Ivezaj told relatives in the United States that her husband was forbidden to face her or other supporters in the Titograd courtroom.

"Everything had gone through my mind about what might have happened," said Frano Ivezaj, as he sat among about a dozen family members and reporters at the well-kept, single-story brick ranch home. "I thought he would be found not guilty. Or I thought he would be sentenced to 50 days, which he already has served. And the third possibility, I didn't want to think about it, that he would be found guilty."

In a gesture of typical Albanian hospitality, the family poured cognac for visitors.

Associated Press quoted unnamed sources in Yugoslavia as saying the five-judge panel at the Titograd district court charged Ivezaj with participating in demonstrations "in Detroit, Chicago and Washington" that were "directed against the Yugoslav constitutional system and were aimed at toppling the socialist government."

Tanjug, the official Yugoslav news agency, quoted Judge Sreten Ivanovic as saying the trial proved Ivezaj had been a member of an Albanian-American student organization in Detroit since 1978, AP reported. The judge said the group includes political emigres from Albania and Yugoslavia and promotes anti-Yugoslav activity, it reported.

Frano Ivezaj said his brother had attended a meeting of such a group about 10 years ago, but "he thought it was a social organization, and he quit when he found out they were political." He said Ivezaj had attended the Washington demonstration but no other.

Said Nua Ivezaj, 22, a cousin: "We just want Pjeter back."

YUGOSLAVS CONVICT IVEZAJ

(By Diane Katz and Lou Fintor)

WASHINGTON.—A seven-year prison sentence imposed on a suburban Detroit man by a Yugoslav court has prompted threats from lawmakers to sever U.S. relations with the European nation.

After learning that Pjeter Ivezaj, 30, of Sterling Heights, was convicted Wednesday of crimes against the state, congressmen vowed to rescind trade agreements and expel Yugoslav diplomats unless he is released.

Ivezaj, a naturalized U.S. citizen, had been accused of participating in an anti-Yugoslav demonstration in Washington in 1981.

But U.S. Ambassador John Scanlan, during telephone calls from Yugoslavia to Michigan Rep. William Broomfield, R-Birminghan, and Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., expressed optimism that Ivezaj could be freed soon.

"The ambassador is very optimistic that the case will be satisfactorily resolved, and in a matter of days," Levin said during a speech Wednesday on the Senate floor. "That optimism is based upon discussions our ambassador has had with Yugoslav officials at the highest levels."

Ivezaj, a language technican for the Detroit public schools and computer science student at Wayne State University, was convicted by a five-judge panel in Titograd on two charges of violating Article 136 of the Yugoslav criminal code. That statute prohibits membership in anti-government groups and hostile acts against the state.

The verdict followed two days of testimony during which Ivezaj, represented by a Yugoslav lawyer, affirmed his innocence. When the court pronounced sentence, Ivezaj burst into tears, observers told his family in Metro Detroit.

According to Yugoslav authorities, Ivezaj, who is Albanian, had joined an outlawed Albanian-American student group in Detroit and participated in an anti-government demonstration at the Yugoslav Embassy.

Although Ivezaj holds U.S. citizenship, Yugoslav officials still consider him a citizen of their country. Ivezaj remains in custody in a jail outside Titograd. But under Yugoslav law, he will not begin serving his sentence until an appeal is heard. That procedure is under way, authorities said.

During a briefing Wednesday for the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Human Rights, lawmakers threatened to cancel export-import loans to Yugoslavia, rescind trade agreements and expel Yugoslav diplomats from the United Nations in New York and their embassy here unless Ivezaj is released.

"The American people are fed up with the Yugoslavs' disregard for the most basic rights of American citizens at the same time our government is helping bail out the Yugoslav economy," Broomfield said.

Broomfield, along with Michigan Rep. Dennis Hertel, D-Harper Woods, and several members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, sent letters Wednesday to President Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz, urging them to support trade sanctions. The letters also recommend that a travel advisory be issued to warn Americans about the risk of arrest and detention in Yugoslavia.

Also angered by Ivezaj's plight, Rep. Philip Crane, R-Ill., called Yugoslav agents "creeps and slimebags" for their surveillance here of U.S. citizens who then are prosecuted in Yugoslavia.

Ekrem Bardha of West Bloomfield, chairman of the Albanian-American Republican Clubs of America, appealed to lawmakers at the briefing to press for Ivezaj's release.

"Can the United States, the leader of the free world, permit a foreign Communist country to dictate to American citizens which of their constitutional rights they can or cannot exercise?" Bardha asked.

And Michigan's two senators, Levin and fellow Democrat Donald Riegle, requested a review of U.S. relations with Yugoslavia in a letter to Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind. Lugar is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The State Department and U.S. Embassy officials in Belgrade, the Yugoslav capital, also condemned the court action and warned that the case could harm diplomatic relations between the two countries.

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 2916. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to retain a capital gains tax differential, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX DIFFERENTIAL

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I will introduce a bill this evening with respect to capital gains. I was a very enthusiastic supporter, Mr. President, of the tax bill that passed here in the Senate and passed by such an overwhelming majority and if I have one exception with it, and really I have several, but one major exception, it is the treatment of capital gains.

Capital gains, which in my State of Minnesota prior to the new tax law, had a maximum rate of 22.8 percent, now under this new tax law has a maximum rate of 39 and 40 percent and as a result there is great penalty put on capital and the accumulation of capital and the investment of capital, and it makes it much more difficult, of course, for small businesses, large businesses, to invest or to get capital to either to begin or to expand their facilities.

Of course, the reason that has occurred, Mr. President, was that although rates were higher under the old tax law there was an exclusion. Under the old tax law there was a 60 percent exclusion so that if you made a $1,000 gain only $400 of it was taxed, 60 percent was excluded, and the $400 that was left was taxed at 50 percent or 20 percent of the entire gain.

Now, without the exclusion, 28 percent applies to the entire gain and also the State tax applies to the entire gain as well because many of the States follow the Federal rule.

The bill that I will be introducing will change that by once again bringing the exclusion into play. There would be two holding periods, Mr. President, rather than the one holding period of the old law.

One holding period would be for 1 year and then there would be a 40-percent exclusion. This would bring the overall rate down to about where it was or slightly above where it was when both the State and the Federal rates are included.

Then, in the event that a taxpayer were to hold the asset for more than 3 years, there would be a 60 percent exclusion. This would bring the tax rates down very, very substantially to about 16 percent of the whole as opposed to about 23 percent under the old law.

The capital gains rates, Mr. President, in other nations are either nonexistent or they are certainly lower than the capital gains rates of the United States. In fact, they are lower than they used to be and certainly enormously lower than they presently are under the new law.

Also, Mr. President, under the new law of higher capital gains rates, nearly 40 percent as I said in our State, there is no assurance that more revenue will inure to the benefit of the Federal Government. As a matter of fact, there is a good deal of evidence to suggest that if you raise the capital gains rates in the manner that we are now doing that the revenue to the Federal Government would go down.

Studies that have been done by Martin Feldstein and his associates at Harvard University would suggest that at a rate of 16 percent the Federal Government will collect the most money and if there is a 3-year holding period with a 60-percent exclusion under present rates it would indeed amount to approximately 16 percent.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my outline in support of the proposal and a table prepared by the American Council for Capital Formation.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUTLINE IN SUPPORT OF THE BOSCHWITZ TWO-TIERED CAPITAL GAINS PROPOSAL

1. Mr. President, I am an enthusiastic supporter of the "Tax Reform Act of 1986". Nevertheless, I very much disagree with the new law's treatment of capital gains.

2. While tax rates are lowered substantially—the top bracket tax rate is reduced from 50 percent to 28 percent—the tax rate on long-term capital gains increase substantially:

a. The top federal rate on long-term capital gains increases from 20 percent (50 percent top × 40 percent subject to tax) to 33 percent (top marginal rate under the new law). That's a 65 percent increase!

b. But that only tells half the story. We must also look at the combined state and federal tax on long-term capital gains:

(i) Current law: The top combined rate is in Arkansas and North Carolina—$235 per $1,000 of gain. In California and New York, tied for third highest, the maximum combined federal/state tax is $228 per $1,000 of gain.

(ii) Under a new law, the combined federal/state tax in New York will go as high as $422 per $1,000 of gain. That's an 85 percent increase, and will give New York the highest combined rate in the country. There will be four states (and also the District of Columbia) where the combined federal/state tax on $1,000 of long-term capital gains will exceed $400. In no state will the maximum combined rate be less than $330. Again, the maximum under current law is $235 per $1,000 of gain.

3. Such increase is unwise.

a. Consider: For the wealthiest taxpayers, the top federal tax rate on long/term gains will go from 20 percent to either 28 percent or 33 percent. At most, a 65 percent increase.

However, for a middle-income family with $32,000 of taxable income, the top federal tax rate on long-term capital gains will increase from 11.2 percent (28 percent marginal rate × 40 percent subject to tax) to 28 percent. A 150 percent increase!

And that's not the only way middle-income taxpayers will be hurt by an increase in the capital gains tax rate. For many of these taxpayers, their single largest capital gain often comes from the sale of an asset—such as a farm or a business—which they have held for years. In many cases the asset represents a substantial portion of their net worth. An unexpected and very substantial increase in their capital gains rate could be very difficult for these people to bear.

Indeed, in many cases the capital gain being taxed is not real economic gain, but merely "inflationary gain" which does not add to personal wealth. When we remove the capital gains exclusion, the taxpayer will no longer have any cushion against inflationary gain.

b. Such a substantial increase in the capital gains rate will reduce venture capital that leads to new businesses, new jobs, new technology, new R & D.

Certainly new business will continue to be created, but fewer new businesses and projects will be created. Many innovative but risky projects will not go forward. The preference will be to invest in less risky, dividend paying securities as opposed to risky, growth oriented ventures.

In fact, our competitors seem to agree about the importance of preferential treatment for capital gains. According to the American Council for Capital Formation, 11 industrialized countries including Japan, Taiwan, West Germany, Hong Kong, Italy and South Korea impose no taxes on long-term capital gains, and Canada's maximum tax is only 17 percent.

4. Accordingly, I am introducing legislation to provide a two-tiered capital gains exclusion for individuals. In the case of assets held more than one year but less than three years, the exclusion would be 40 percent. As a result, the top combined federal/state tax would be $254 on $1,000 of gain. That would be higher than current law ($235), but certainly not anywhere near $422 per $1,000.

For assets held three years or more, the exclusion would be 60 percent. That would mean a top combined rate of $179 per $1,000 of gain. Investors would really have an incentive to invest in longer term, higher risk ventures.

5. The available evidence suggests that this bill, standing alone, could be "revenue neutral":

a. Capital gains collections are not only a function of the rate applied, but equally important, of the amount subject to tax. Professor Lawrence Lindsay of Harvard University has estimated that each 1 percent increase in the maximum rate on long-term capital gains above 20 percent results in 5 percent fewer realizations. If true, collections from the wealthy will not increase by raising rates. In fact, the experience demonstrates that reducing the rate on long-term capital gains does not reduce collections. (See attached chart)

b. In fact, the Treasury Department Capital Gains Report (September 1985) concludes: "any effort to raise substantial revenue by increasing capital gains tax rates . . . is likely to be ineffective." Recent work on this issue by Dr. Martin Feldstein and by Professor Lawrence Lindsay of Harvard University also suggests that such an amendment is by itself "revenue neutral".

CAPITAL GAINS TAX INCREASES RESULT IN REDUCED REVENUES—CAPITAL GAINS TAX CUTS RESULT IN INCREASED REVENUES

Year	Maximum capital gains rate (percent)	Capital gains revenues (millions)
1968	25.9	$5,943

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. So, Mr. President, that is the essence of the bill that I will introduce and I will submit this evening and ask that it be referred to the appropriate committee, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill of the Senator from Minnesota will be received and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. Res. 426. Joint resolution to designate the week of October 19 through October 25, 1986, as "National CPR Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CPR AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today I am joined by 12 of my colleagues in introducing a Senate joint resolution declaring the week of October 25 through 31, 1986, "National CPR Awareness Week." I hope that you will all join in my efforts to encourage CPR training by cosponsoring this resolution.

Heart attacks are the leading cause of death in the United States. As many as 1.5 million people will suffer a heart attack in 1986, and of these victims, almost half will not survive. Cardio-pulmonary resuscitation is a simple first aid procedure which could prevent many heart attack deaths. It is a tragedy that most people do not know how to perform CPR, and are thus helpless to aid heart attack victims whose lives depend on immediately administered first aid. As a tremendously successful life-saving procedure, it is of vital importance to maximize public participation in CPR training.

"National CPR Awareness Week" is an ideal way to increase public recognition of the importance of CPR training. Last year's resolution was successful in bringing attention to the availability of CPR training, and ultimately in saving lives. Please join me in this worthwhile effort by cosponsoring the second annual "National CPR Awareness Week."●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 167—REGARDING EFFICIENT AND COMPASSIONATE MANAGEMENT OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY INSURANCE [SSDI] PROGRAM

Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. SIMON, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. BOREN, Mr. MATSUNAGA, and Mr. SARBANES) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. CON. RES. 167

Whereas Congress established the Social Security Disability Insurance [SSDI] Program in 1956 to improve the quality of life for disabled Americans;

Whereas the decision of the Social Security Administration to require an increased caseload for SSDI examiners and expand the continuing disability review process caused several hundred thousand recipients to be removed improperly from the SSDI rolls during the period of 1981 through 1983;

Whereas the widespread termination and denial of benefits for eligible disabled Americans during such period created undue hardship for countless deserving individuals;

Whereas more than 60 percent of the recipients who appealed a decision to terminate or deny benefits were ultimately successful in reversing the decision;

Whereas the substantial increase in the number of appealed cases drained millions of dollars from the Social Security Trust Fund;

Whereas Congress passed (with only one dissenting vote) the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984 in order to end the inconsistent and frequently arbitrary manner in which the Social Security Administration was applying disability standards, as well as to restore public faith and confidence in the SSDI program;

Whereas since enactment of such Act, there has been, as intended by Congress, a marked improvement in the SSDI review process and the beginning of a restoration of public confidence in the program; and

Whereas recent budget proposals by the Social Security Administration for the fiscal year 1987 indicate that there will be an increase in the SSDI workload for many states, thus threatening a return to the chaos that existed prior to the 1984 Act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Social Security Administration should not—

(A) reduce the staff of state Disability Determination Services or increase the workload of SSDI examiners to levels that would prevent adequate case development in accordance with the standards established in the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984, or

(B) initiate any other action that would impair the ability of examiners to determine eligibility for benefits in accordance with the requirements of such Act; and

(2) the Social Security Administration should place higher priority on assisting states in both complying with the 1984 reforms and improving the accuracy with which SSDI eligibility is determined.

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, 2 years ago today the Congress passed the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984, an act designed to establish a more fair and equitable Social Security Disability Insurance [SSDI] Program. On this anniversary I stand before you and ask my colleagues the simple questions, have we yet witnessed the implementation of the efficient and equitable National Disability Reform Program that was intended by Congress; has the Social Security Administration [SSA] provided States adequate staff and resources to implement the 1984 reforms; has the SSA provided the States adequate time and guidance necessary to ensure that a balanced and equitable SSDI system is in place?

Mr. President I have asked these questions to Vocational Rehabilitation Administrators and Directors of Disability Determination offices throughout the country, and their response has been "no." No—there is not an efficient National Disability Reform Program in place; no—the Social Security Administration has not provided them with adequate staff and resources to implement the 1984 reforms; and no—sufficient guidance and time has not been offered to the States to provide balanced and equitable services as mandated by the 98th Congress.

Are we close to achieving the kind of SSDI system that Congress envisioned when they passed the Social Security Disability Reforms Act in 1984? I think we all recognize the fact that we are beginning to achieve the goals that Congress intended—the goals of a fair and compassionate National Disability Reform Program.

It is for this reason, Mr. President, that I am today, submitting a concurrent resolution which calls upon the Social Security Administration to work with the States and offer them the necessary assistance to carry out what Congress intended when they passed the 1984 reforms. Mr. President, I raise this issue on the second anniversary because I am deeply concerned with the implementation of the 1984 reforms.

Recently the Social Security Administration informed Disability Determination Service Offices nationwide, that they can expect an increase in the determination caseload—in some cases an increased workload of up to 50 percent. According to the SSA, the reasoning behind this increase is so that the system may become more efficient. This action carries with it disasterous implications. The notion of increasing the workload of examiners at an overwhelming rate in the name of efficiency is vaguely reminiscent of what occurred in 1980 prompting Congress to pass the 1984 SSDI reforms. During that period the Social Security Administration implemented the housecleaning reforms with such fervor, that the local SSA offices were unprepared: Employees were not properly trained, the offices were not adequately staffed, and the consequences, Mr. President, were truly disastrous. I recall one case where an individual in a full body cast was told he could work; in another case an individual who was completely blind from a recent accident had his disability benefits terminated. In the name of efficiency we did not get a fair and equitable SSDI system but instead we witnessed a Federal program thrown into administrative disarray and chaos which resulted in the denial of benefits of countless deserving disabled Americans.

Let us recall for a moment how during the period from 1981 through 1983 over 450,000 individuals were thrown off of the SSDI rolls. To date over 60 percent of these deserving disabled Americans have had their SSDI benefits reinstated. Today we are just beginning to witness a restored public faith and confidence in the SSDI Program. Because of the new thorough review process the number of cases being appealed has dramatically decreased.

In my own State for example the number of appeals has dropped by roughly two-thirds. In some States the number of appealed cases going to administrative law judges is so low, they are hiring their ALJ's out to neighboring States. This signals to me not only a system that is beginning to work, but a system that is also saving the taxpayer millions of dollars in unnecessary appeals.

I am fearful, Mr. President, that the recent directive by the Social Security Administration to the local SSA offices to increase their productivity threatens a return to the chaos that occurred prior to the enactment of the 1984 reforms. I think it is safe to say that the regulations resulting from the 1984 reforms are commendable. The evidence clearly indicates a step in the right direction toward a fair and equitable system. I have before me a summarized list of 13 excellent new provisions that have evolved from the 1984 reform for State examiners to follow in making disability determinations, and I ask unanimous consent that this list be inserted into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. These new changes undeniably represent a more thorough review process and a significant improvement in the system as a whole.

However, at a time when we have developed a more labor intensive review process it makes absolutely no sense to me, that in the name of efficiency, we increase the caseload of examiners, particularly adding this burden on top of a national hiring freeze already imposed by the SSA in May. It seems obvious to me that this will make it exceedingly difficult for States to successfully administer fair and equitable SSDI Programs.

Let me give you an example of a tragic incident that occurred this week in my home State of Massachusetts which is the result of the new directive to increase caseloads. A constituent of mine who had been diagnosed with leukemia, was hospitalized near his home for several weeks, more recently he was moved to a Boston hospital for a bone marrow transplant; he was denied disability benefits. It is unconscionable to think that a caseworker determined that this man lying in a hospital bed in Boston is able to work. The caseworker explained his action by stating quite simply that he did not have the time to wait for the medical records, he was behind in his cases and was under pressure to move the case along. How degrading is a system that tells the family of a terminally ill man that he is fully capable of working and not eligible to receive disability benefits? Is this what Congress had in mind when they passed the 1984 reforms? Is this what the Commissioner of SSA had in mind when she directed local offices to increase workloads in the name of efficiency? I would like to believe that it is not.

In closing let me underscore one central point. At a time when new regulations are just beginning to improve the overall review process, it seems especially unjustified to increase workloads while restricting the number of examiners. Mr. President, the resolution that I am introducing today is not designed to point the finger at the SSA and say that their actions are necessarily wrong. The resolution that I am introducing today, is designed to ultimately send a very clear message to the Commissioner of the Social Security Administration and that is—Congress is watching. If regulations and directives are sent to the States which undermine the intentions of Congress when the 1984 reforms were passed, Congress will not allow hundreds of thousands of disabled American citizens to endure the same suffering or degradation which they endured from 1981 through 1983.

I hope that this concurrent resolution will clear both sides of the aisle and pass this evening, thus expressing our disapproval to the Social Security Administration regarding any efforts to undercut the intentions of Congress when they passed the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIST OF CHANGES

1. Consultative Examination (C/E) follow-up protocol requiring examiners and/or physicians to make follow-up calls to treating sources before a C/E can be scheduled.

2. Comprehensive Medical Improvement Standard requiring comparative analysis and case reconstruction.

3. Implementation of new Medical Listings requiring more specific clinical and laboratory information for certain disability populations.

4. Comprehensive Mental Impairment Listings, Regulations, and Guidelines requiring the completion of a lengthy PRFT by Agency physicians.

5. Requirements for obtaining activities of daily living information in claims alleging mental impairments.

6. Requirements for using Work Evaluations in Mental Impairment and other claims.

7. Elimination of non-severe findings resulting in RFC and vocational factor analysis for all claims (Many States).

8. Implementation of more comprehensive procedures for evaluating substance abuse. In many states, approximately fifty percent of the claimants allege substance abuse which not requires comprehensive follow-up.

9. Proposed requirement for completing reationales by examiners in all cases.

10. Implementation of procedures increasing and improving the documentation requirements.

SENATE RESOLUTION 503—RELATIVE TO DR. ABBY NKOMO

Mr. COHEN (for himself, Mr. BOREN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. ROTH) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 503

Whereas, Dr. Abby Nkomo, Chairman of the Atteridgeville/Saulsville Civic Association, Vice Chairman of the Pretoria Council of Churches and an active member of the Methodist Church, has been detained by the South African police for an extended period without charge or trial;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo has been a vocal advocate of peaceful change in South Africa;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo has been in solitary confinement since his incarceration on June 12, 1986, and has been denied adequate medical attention including medication for diabetes;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo has been separated from his family and permitted infrequent visits by his wife during which the couple suffers harassment from prison guards;

Whereas, Dr. Nkomo and his family have been harassed for more than twenty months, including the gasoline bombing of his home and car, the sabotage of the doctor's clinics, and telephone threats on their lives;

Whereas, the police have refused to investigate any of these threats or incidents;

Whereas, the police detained the doctor's daughter Suzan for 47 days and threatened his wife Marjorie with arrest: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Dr. Nkomo is representative of the majority of South Africans who seek peaceful change and with whom the South African government should be engaged in dialogue rather than persecution;

That the government of South Africa be encouraged to enter into dialogue with moderate forces within that country so that positive action can be taken to bring an end to apartheid policies;

That Dr. Nkomo has been subjected to an unreasonable and reprehensible deprivation of his civil rights;

That Dr. Nkomo is representative of thousands of similar victims currently detained under the state of emergency regulations;

That Dr. Nkomo's family has been the victim of continual, excessive harassment by the police authorities of South Africa causing severe emotional and financial loss;

That the actions of the South African government toward Dr. Nkomo are condemned as an obstruction to prospects for peaceful change in South Africa;

That the United States Government and its representatives should emphasize to officials of the Republic of South Africa our nation's resolve that all individuals in that country be afforded due process and that their civil liberties be protected.

SENATE RESOLUTION 504—RELATING TO UNITED STATES—JAPAN SODA ASH TRADE

Mr. WALLOP (for himself and Mr. SIMPSON) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 504

Whereas, the United States merchandise balance of trade deficit with Japan reached the unprecedented level of $49.8 billion in 1985, and is expected to reach $60-65 billion in 1986—accounting for almost one-third of the entire United States deficit with the world;

Whereas, the principles of free trade provide for trade flows between nations on the basis of each nation's comparative advantage;

Whereas, Japan has extensive access to the United States market for products in which Japan has a comparative advantage;

Whereas, United States soda ash exporters lack access to the Japanese market for soda ash in which the United States has a comparative advantage;

Whereas, highly competitive U.S. soda ash exports to Japan have been restricted by anticompetitive practices by Japanese soda ash producers;

Whereas, Japan's Fair Trade Commission found that a secret cartel of Japanese soda ash producers had in fact been illegally restricting imports of U.S. soda ash, but imposed no sanctions against the Japanese producers;

Whereas, U.S. soda ash sales in Japan are stagnating, and there is clear evidence that U.S. soda ash sales are still being restricted by continuing anticompetitive activities of Japanese soda ash producers and their affiliated trading companies;

Whereas, Japanese government antimonopoly laws, antitrust enforcement practices, and antitrust penalties are proving inadequate to prevent such anticompetitive and restrictive Japanese practices;

Whereas, efforts by the U.S. Government to obtain meaningful improvement in market access for competitive United States soda ash exports, including securing the elimination of anticompetitive or restrictive Japanese practices, have so far proven unsuccessful;

Whereas, the merchandise balance of trade deficit with Japan and the soda ash trade problem with Japan have the potential of undermining the entire range of bilateral relations between the United States and Japan; and

Whereas, action by the United States is appropriate—(1) to enforce United States rights under trade agreements to which Japan is a party, and (2) to obtain the elimination of anticompetitive Japanese practices that restrict U.S. exports of soda ash in the Japanese market; Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should take all appropriate and feasible action within his power to obtain the elimination of such anticompetitive or restrictive foreign practices.

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, before the 99th Congress ends, I want to submit a resolution directed toward Japan's unwillingness to address illegal trade practices that prevent the competitive sale of domestic soda ash in the Japanese market.

The resolution requests that the President act decisively to eliminate anticompetitive foreign practices that restrict competitive United States exports of soda ash to Japan. Of course, if a solution to this problem is not in sight when Congress reconvenes, I will reintroduce a similar resolution seeking Senate support to dismantle barriers that limit American sales of soda ash in the multimillion-dollar Japanese soda ash market.

This case has become symbolic of Japan's unwillingness to implement fair trade practices with the United States. To date, all efforts by U.S. Government officials and the U.S. soda ash industry seeking a solution to this problem have been unsuccessful.

Soda ash is a basic commodity used in glassmaking and other industrial procesess. The largest natural deposits in the world are found in my home State of Wyoming. Because of these superb natural deposits, the soda ash industry can produce higher quality soda ash at a far lower cost than any other such industry in the world, including that of Japan. This competitive edge has been enhanced by U.S. producers' investments in energy-efficient production processes.

Our soda ash industry has made substantial efforts to expand its sales in Japan. It has established soda ash warehouse facilities in Japan and currently maintains a $5 million inventory in Japan—more than the domestic Japanese producers—to assure customers of its long term commitment to the market. U.S. producers have established relationships with Japanese trading companies to market and distribute soda ash, as well as to develop new Japanese customers. In addition, U.S. firms have priced their product competitively, offered discounts and successfully satisfied their Japanese customer's quality requirements. But despite these efforts, United States soda ash producers have failed to competitively penetrate the Japanese soda ash market.

After making every diligent effort, why has the United States soda ash industry failed to gain fair access to the Japanese market? In 1983, after numerous complaints, the Japan Fair Trade Commission conducted an investigation and found that an illegal cartel of Japanese soda ash producers was restricting imports of United States soda ash. No sanctions or no fines were imposed on the Japanese producers, although shortly after the JFTC discovery, United States sales of soda ash increased. However, sales leveled off again in 1984, and since that time, U.S. sales have shown virtually no growth and currently remain stagnated.

In February 1986, in a white paper released by American Natural Soda Ash Corp. [ANSAC], entitled "Japanese Market Barriers in Soda Ash," U.S. firms reported renewed instances of anticompetitive behavior by Japanese producers. In light of this new evidence, I joined members of the Senate Finance Committee, as well as Senator SIMPSON in dispatching a letter to Prime Minister Nakasone urging corrective action if anticompetitive practices were shown to continue. To date we've received no response. Mr. President, I ask that our letter, dated June 6, 1986, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I became so frustrated with Japan's failure to take any action that I traveled to Japan last summer. I met with Japanese Cabinet members and urged them to open Japan's market. I also hosted Japanese Ambassador Nubuo Matsunaga in my home State of Wyoming where we toured the soda ash mines. I must admit I was hopeful our efforts to negotiate a solution would result in a commitment from the Japanese Government when its representatives met in August with United States trade officials at a bilateral trade meeting in Hawaii. However, the reports emanating from that meeting are deeply disappointing. I understand that Japan agreed to a government-sponsored meeting between United States suppliers and Japanese buyers.

It is my sincere hope, Mr. President, that the Japanese Government will soon take the necessary steps to ensure that United States soda ash producers enjoy full access to the Japanese markets. However, but if all efforts by the U.S. Government to negotiate a solution to this problem fail, strict enforcement of U.S. trade laws to resolve the soda ash problem would be an appropriate response.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 6, 1986.

Hon. YASUHIRO NAKASONE,
Prime Minister, Government of Japan, Tokyo, Japan.

DEAR PRIME MINISTER NAKASONE: We have become increasingly concerned over Japanese unfair trade practices that impede U.S. exports of soda ash, the raw material used in glass manufacture and other industrial processes. Despite past and present government and industry efforts to address the barriers, U.S. exporters continue to have limited access as a result of anticompetitive actions by Japanese soda ash producers and their affiliated trading companies. You have been a strong advocate of fair trade principles. We believe the soda ash case deserves your close attention.

U.S. soda ash production, based on the existence of the world's largest deposits of a natural mineral ore from which soda ash can be manufactured at half the cost of Japanese soda ash, allows the U.S. to be the world's lowest cost producer. American soda ash has been an overwhelming success in other world markets where fair access has been available.

The problem in Japan stems from weak enforcement of Japan's Antimonopoly Act that continues to allow the four Japanese soda ash producers, in concert with consumers and several major trading companies, to protect the Japanese market from import competition.

At the urging of the U.S. Government, the Japan Fair Trade Commission [JFTC] in 1982 began an investigation into allegations of anticompetitive practices of these producers. In March 1983, the JFTC issued a decision finding that an illegal producers cartel was restricting imports of U.S. soda ash. The JFTC ordered this anticompetitive activity to cease but imposed no fines and did not specifically direct the producers to cease pressuring domestic consumers to limit their purchases of imported soda ash.

Though U.S. exports increased in the year following the JFTC decision, they have leveled off to approximately 16 percent of Japanese market share in the past two years. We and the U.S. industry are convinced U.S. exports would increase substantially if our exporters were able to operate in a competitive environment where supply and demand are allowed to have effect.

The U.S. industry's goal of fair access to Japan has strong support from the Administration and many leaders in Congress who have been outspoken on this issue. The industry recently has responded through the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative [USTR] to comments on this issue by MITI. We believe there is a compelling case for the JFTC to conduct a thorough investigation of the industry and to take corrective action if anticompetitive practices are shown to continue. In December 1985, the JFTC informed USTR it was monitoring its 1983 decision. We are convinced this is not sufficient action in light of the overriding international competitiveness of U.S. soda ash and the inability of U.S. exporters to compete fairly for sales to Japanese customers.

Our nations are making progress in achieving fair access in trade. We urge you to give this case strong attention and we look forward to your response.

Sincerely,

Malcolm Wallop, John H. Chafee, George Mitchell, John C. Danforth, David L. Boren, Alan K. Simpson, Steve Symms, John Heinz, William V. Roth, Jr., U.S. Senators.●

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, today I join with my fine senior colleague, Senator WALLOP, in introducing a resolution that directs the President to take all actions possibly available to him in order to eliminate Japanese unfair trade practices and anticompetitive activities that impede United States exports of competitive United States soda ash into Japan.

The United States soda ash industry enjoys an enormous natural resource advantage that permits it to produce soda ash by means not available to Japan. United States manufacturers are so efficient that American producers can produce, ship, and pay Japanese duties and still be competitive with Japanese soda ash producers in quality, service and price. In fact, those Japanese producers must import most of the raw materials and energy needed to make soda ash.

The commitment of United States soda ash producers is extensive and substantial—including the establishment of several distribution and marketing channels in Japan; the establishment of seven bulk warehouses in the cities of Osaka, Kawasaki, Tachibana, Yokkaichi, and Chiba; the maintenance in Japan of inventories of United States soda ash in excess of $5 million; and extensive United States industry export promotion efforts, including the sponsorship of multiple trade mission tours for Japanese customers and distribution personnel to Green River, WY, and Trona, CA, the major locations in this country where soda ash is produced.

American soda ash sales in Japan have not increased since 1983. There is clear evidence that the continued stagnation of United States soda ash sales reflects the continuing restrictive and anticompetitive activities of Japanese soda ash producers and their affiliated trading companies.

I believe very strongly in the concept of free trade and comparative advantage. However, while the United States has opened its markets to products in which Japan has a comparative advantage, Japan has not opened its markets fully to products in which this country has a comparative advantage. We do not have and have not had a free market in soda ash in Japan.

The unprecedented growth in the size of the Japanese trade surplus with the United States and the rest of the world has made it imperative for Japan to liberalize access to its market. It is time that Japan fully accepts, the responsibilities that accompany its role in the international marketplace.

While it is very late in the session and it would be difficult for my friends and colleagues in the Senate to rush this to consideration, I earnestly trust that by introducing the resolution now, both Senator WALLOP and I have placed the Congress on notice that we intend to vigorously pursue this resolution—or similar legislation—very early in the 100th Congress.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE NOMINATION OF JIM R. BILLINGTON TO SERVE AS A MEMBER OF THE FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION BOARD

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, yesterday, the Senate confirmed the nomination of Jim R. Billington to be a member of the Farm Credit Administration Board. Jim Billington is a longtime friend and distinguished Oklahoman.

Jim Billington is a farmer and rancher from southwestern Oklahoma, raising wheat, cotton, and feed grains and maintains a cow-calf operation. He has been an agricultural leader for many years. He first served as president of the Oklahoma Wheatgrowers from 1977 until 1979. His hard work and dedication to the organization gained him the presidency of the National Association of Wheatgrowers, in which capacity he served from 1981 to 1982. He presently serves as president of the National Association of Wheatgrowers Foundation, the educational arm of the National Association of Wheatgrowers.

In addition to his work with the Wheatgrowers Association, he served as a board member of the Federal Grain Inspection Service advisory committee between 1982 and 1984.

Jim Billington will be an asset to the Farm Credit Administration Board not only from the standpoint of his extensive knowledge of agriculture, but also from his vast knowledge of agricultural credit. Jim has served as a president and chief exective officer of a bank and a production credit association. He has also served as an examiner for the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank, Ninth Farm District, Wichita, KS.

We have waited a longtime for the administration to nominate the third member of the Farm Credit Administration Board. For several months, the Board has operated with only two members. There are many of us who feel very strongly about getting the third member on the Board as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I am very proud of Jim's accomplishments for agriculture and for our State. I enthusiastrically commend him to serve as a member of the Farm Credit Administration Board.●

CONCERNING THE SAFETY PROGRAM OF TINDLE MILLS, INC.

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, truck safety is a serious problem on our Nation's highways. Heavy truck accidents kill 5,000 people each year. Truck accidents reported to the Department of Transportation were 18 percent higher in 1984 than in 1983 and rose another 6 percent in 1985.

There are some companies that are taking steps to stop this disturbing trend. For example, Tindle Mills, Inc., of Springfield, MO, pays drivers on a per-mile basis for every mile driven without an avoidable accident.

Tindle has shown that safety pays for both the company and its drivers. In a 28-month stretch, Tindle's drivers accumulated almost 1.5 million miles without an accident. Its drivers have received $70,000 in bonuses since the program began in 1979.

I congratulate Tindle on its succcessful program and urge other companies to profit from its example.●

THE GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT REPORT ACT OF 1986—S. 2004

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to present for the Senate's consideration S. 2004, a bill which provides for the President of the United States to submit an annual report, with his budget, on the major activities undertaken and planned to improve the management of the executive branch of Government. The bill also requires the Comptroller General to prepare for Congress a statement analyzing such report within 90 days of its submission.

In 1984, the Congress mandated in the Deficit Reduction Act a report by the President on how he had responded to recommendations made by outside organizations, including the Grace Commission, to improve Government management. A report issued by OMB in 1985 not only addressed the legislative requirement, but also informed the Congress of other efforts being undertaken, especially Reform 1988: the President's Management Improvement Program. OMB issued a second report, "Management of the U.S. Government, Fiscal Year 1987," with this year's budget documents.

OMB has advised my Committee on Governmental Affairs that it plans to continue reporting annually on management at the time the budget is issued, but we have no assurance beyond the agency's promise that this report will be issued in future years, and Congress has no voice in deciding what the report will contain. The Deficit Reduction Act required only a single report. S. 2004 ensures that Congress will receive such a report every year. In addition, it outlines the specific subjects on which the President would report, including the provision of a summary of major management improvement initiatives and a discussion for each initiative of its purpose, the progress and problems in implementation, and the impact on agency operations.

The report required by S. 2004 would not be another document to be quietly forwarded to Congress and end up collecting dust in committee staffers' in-boxes. Rather, I see this report as the basis for annual hearings before the Governmental Affairs Committee on the state of Government management, any Presidential management legislative initiatives, and what is being done to ensure that our Government has the leadership, the systems, and the organization to meet the challenging times ahead.

The bill keeps the reporting requirements as simple and flexible as possible, but improves the usefulness of information available to Congress for overseeing executive branch management improvement activities. It also assures that the President's report will cover all management activities and present, insofar as possible, a balanced summary of both the problems and accomplishments in management.

In his February 26, 1986, testimony before the Governmental Affairs Committee, Comptroller General Charles A. Bowsher said, "History tells us that implementing management initiatives effectively has often proven illusive. Sustained attention is needed from OMB and the line agencies." He said S. 2004 is a means for establishing a process to help sustain executive branch commitment and for providing a forum for congressional oversight.

In its comments on S. 2004, the Office of Management and Budget welcomed the opportunity to provide a report on the administration's initiatives, but expressed concern about the overly prescriptive requirements contained in the bill. Following the hearing, the committee staff met with OMB officials to clarify the nature of these concerns.

To respond to these concerns, the committee adopted an amendment removing language on page 3 of the bill pertaining to costs, benefits, efficiency improvements, and so forth, and inserted in lieu thereof a requirement that the President submit for each initiative a description of "any significant and identifiable impact of the initiative on agency operations." The committee report on S. 2004 noted that such description should include information on costs, savings, efficiencies, and service delivery improvements only where appropriate.

To accommodate another OMB concern, the committee in its report on S. 2004 requested that GAO minimize its information and documentation requests on OMB, but also stated that OMB should be forthcoming in meeting those information needs. Finally, the report made clear that the President need report only on his "major management improvement initiatives"—as currently specified in the bill—not the "detailed report on all Government-wide problems and issues" described in OMB's comments on the bill.

Three years ago, OMB instituted a management review process, parallel to the budget process, wherein OMB officials meet annually with the management staff of each of the 20 or so largest Federal agencies to discuss an agenda of management reforms for the coming year. Following these meetings, the agencies submit management plans for OMB review and approval. These plans then are the blueprints for agency action the following year. The annual hearings triggered by the report required by S. 2004 would not set up so systematic a process, but they would give Congress an opportunity, similar to that exercised by OMB with executive agencies, to ensure that appropriate actions are being taken to see that the Federal Government is managed in the manner the Nation expects and deserves.

On June 25, 1986, the Governmental Affairs Committees ordered S. 2004 reported to the full Senate by unanimous vote. I strongly urge my colleagues' support of this measure in a similar manner.

REAUTHORIZE SUPERFUND

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, there are disturbing reports that the President is considering a veto of the Superfund bill passed by Congress last week. I cannot think of a more mistaken action that could be taken.

The Superfund Program addresses a dangerous threat to the health of Americans in thousands of communities across our Nation. Public support for Federal action on this issue is unquestioned. Any debate on the Superfund Program does not question the need for Federal action, but how far it should go.

The Superfund Program has not yet reached its potential in resolving the threats of abandoned hazardous waste dumps. The cleanup of thousands of sites lies ahead, an operation expected to take decades. And there is much more to be understood about the safe containment and destruction of toxic wastes. While the job ahead is imposing, the Superfund Program provides the framework and resources to do it.

But the progress we are making in hazardous waste management would be lost in the event of a Presidential veto. The Superfund Program has hobbled along this year on temporary funding, resulting in delays and cutbacks of critical cleanup efforts. Now, the research, technology, expertise, and manpower that comprise this program are in grave jeopardy, posing an enormous cost in time and resources, and risking the public's health and safety.

There are some provisions of the bill that environmentalists would like to see improved, that manufacturers would like to see changed, that the oil industry has reservations about. The important point is that a strengthened Superfund Program will be in place and the $8.5 billion in costs will be distributed in a fair manner. This is a far-reaching bill on a complex issue that is the product of bipartisan compromise. Hazardous waste cleanup is a shared responsibility; the dangers of toxic waste expose all of us to risk.

It is ironic that several times this year the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency has made clear the problems a shutdown of the Superfund Program would cause. He knows that the severe disruption that would occur could take years to recover. He has appealed to the President to sign this legislation but his plea so far has been ignored. Three former Administrators of the EPA—Russell Train, Doug Costle, and William Ruckelshaus—have written to President Reagan urging him to support Superfund. The Senate passed the conference report by the overwhelming vote of 88 to 8; the House acted by an equally wide margin. Mr. President, all of these people, experts and politicians alike, are not wrong. There is an urgent need to act and the American people are demanding that we do so.

The risks that hazardous waste sites pose to so many Americans require that the Superfund Program not be allowed to end. It is perhaps the most important environmental legislation of the past decade. The decision is now in the President's hands. There is only one right decision and that is to sign the Superfund bill.●

THE RACKETEER INFLUENCED AND CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS ACT

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, on October 3, 1986, I introduced S. 2907, a bill to amend the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, more commonly known as "RICO." Earlier this week, the House passed an almost identical bill by the vote of 371 to 28. Because of the interest in this measure, I ask that the text of S. 2907 be printed in the RECORD.

The text follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PATTERN OF ILLICIT ACTIVITY.

(a) CHAPTER 96 HEADING.—The heading for chapter 96 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "RACKETEER INFLUENCED AND CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS" and inserting in lieu thereof "PATTERN OF ILLICIT ACTIVITY".

(b) SECTION 1961.—Section 1961 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 1964 RELATING TO CIVIL SUITS.

Subsection (c) of section 1964 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Any person injured in his business or property by reason of conduct in violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue any person who engaged in that conduct and, with respect to such conduct, was convicted of an illicit activity or of a violation of section 1962 in any appropriate United States district court, and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

"(2) If the business or property of the United States or a State, including any department, agency, or Government corporation of the United States or a State, is injured by conduct in violation of section 1962 of this chapter—

"(A) the Attorney General of the United States or the chief legal officer of the State; or

"(B) in the case of a political subdivision of a State, the chief legal office of such subdivision, if the State has authorized him to bring such action may sue any person who engaged in that conduct in any appropriate United States District Court and shall recover threefold the actual damages that the government sustained by reason of such injury and the cost of the suit, and a reasonable attorney's fee.

"(3)(A)(i) Except as provided in paragraphs (1) and (2), any person injured in his business or property by reason of conduct in violation of section 1962 of this chapter (subject to the definition of pattern of illicit activity provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph) may sue any person who engaged in that conduct in any appropriate United States district court, and shall recover the actual damages such injured person sustains, the cost of the suit, and reasonable attorney's fee: Provided, that in the case of plaintiffs eligible for punitive damages under division (ii), a prevailing plaintiff shall recover a reasonable attorney's fee.

"(ii) In addition to the recovery provided by division (i), the trier of fact shall award punitive damages up to twice the level of actual damages to a person if—

"(I) such person is a natural person;

"(II) neither Federal nor State securities laws make available an express or implied remedy for the type of illicit activity in which the person bases his claims;

"(III) the injury occurred in the purchase or lease of a product, property, service, credit, or investment for personal or household use or investment; and

"(IV) the defendant's conduct was in wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights.

The amount of punitive damages recoverable under this division, if any, shall take into account—

"(aa) the degree or culpability of the defendant;

"(bb) the vulnerability of the victim;

"(cc) any history of similar conduct by the defendant;

"(dd) the benefits derived from the unlawful conduct by the defendant;

"(ee) the number of persons victimized; and

"(ff) any other factor the court deems to be an equitable consideration bearing on the appropriate amount of punitive damages.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'pattern of illicit activity' requires at least two acts of illicit activity—

"(i) one of which occurred not more than five years after the prior act;

"(ii) each of which is not so closely related in time and place to the other that together the acts constitute a single transaction; and

"(iii) (for actions based on section 1962(c)) each of which is related to the affairs of the enterprise.

"(4) A civil action under this subsection may not be commenced—

"(A) later than three years after the time the cause of action accrues or the conduct causing injury to the plaintiff terminates; or

"(B) two years from the date of the criminal conviction required for an action to be brought under paragraph (1) of this subsection, whichever is later. The statute of limitations is tolled during the pendency of a government civil or criminal action relating to the course of conduct upon which the claim is based.

"(5) In an action under this subsection the plaintiff must aver with particularity as to each defendant the facts supporting the claim.".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any action initiated after the date of enactment.

(b) EXCEPTION.—In any pending action under section 1964(c) of title 18, United States Code, in which a person would be eligible to recover only actual damages and attorney's fees under paragraph (8) of section 1964(c) as added by this Act, if this Act has been enacted prior to the commencement of that action, that person may recover only actual damages and attorney's fees unless—

(1) there has been a jury verdict or district court judgment, establishing the defendant's liability, or settlement has occurred; or

(2) the court determines that such limitation of recovery would result in manifest injustice.●

SUPERFUND REAUTHORIZATION

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for the Superfund Reauthorization bill. I voted for the Senate Superfund Reauthorization bill over a year ago. I voted for the conference committee report on this bill last week.

This bill represents nearly 3 years of extraordinary effort by many people. It is a carefully developed compromise of many competing interests. It is overwhelmingly supported by the Members of Congress and the public.

The reason for this support is obvious. Superfund is perhaps the most important environmental protection program we have. Its purpose is to address the very serious problems posed by hazardous waste. Toxic fumes in the air we breath, risk of fire and explosion, and poisons in the water we drink are all the results of the improper disposal of the residues of our chemical dependent society.

The ill-effects of toxic wastes are not limited to the contamination of our environment, however. People are the ultimate victims of these chemicals. People who drink them or inhale them; or children who are exposed to them while playing in a playground or abandoned field. These people face a much greater risk of contracting cancer and other crippling or fatal diseases.

Mr. President, I think everyone should take a moment to consider what will happen if Superfund is not reauthorized.

The program has already been on a shoestring budget for over 15 months. Despite two interim funding measures during the past year, cleanup activities at more than 200 toxic waste sites nationwide have been significantly delayed. If the program is not reauthorized now, these cleanups will cease entirely.

The long-term result, however, is much more serious. Failure to reauthorize Superfund now means the death of this program. There is no saving it with some interim, stop-gap funding measure.

What does termination of the program mean? It means that cleanup of perhaps 10,000 or more very dangerous hazardous waste dumpsites will be delayed indefinitely. Any delay in cleaning up these sites translates directly into greater pollution of the environment and more and more people exposed to serious health risks.

This Nation's toxic waste problem is a time bomb. We created it and it will not go away by itself. The longer we wait to correct the problem, the more dangerous the situation becomes.

Mr. President, no one doubts the serious nature of this Nation's toxic waste problem and the need for Superfund. The disagreement between President Reagan and the Congress concerns how we pay for this program. I believe that the funding mechanism hammered out by the conference committee is a fair and reasonable approach. We are dealing with a national problem which affects all Americans. It is a problem for which we are all, in one way or another, responsible. And, therefore, the solution to that problem is something that we all should pay for by one means or another.

Mr. President, the American people strongly support Superfund and I believe they are willing to pay for it. More importantly, the American people want their elected public officials to stop arguing about what the program should look like and get on to the job of cleaning up toxic wastes. I suggest that we do that.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate a revised budget scorekeeping report for this week, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

NAKASONE'S REMARKS

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone has now publicly apologized to the American people for the very unfortunate comments he made about minority groups in the United States. I know that this episode—and all of the coverage and heavy criticism that has surfaced from it—are of great and deep personal anguish to the Prime Minister. And I believe that he is being most sincere in his apology.

Please know that I do not intend to defend the remarks in any way. Racist remarks—alleged or real—are highly offensive to me. Yet, I do feel that Nakasone is truly distraught over the remarks that may have brought pain to individuals and groups in this country.

There were and are indeed times in my life when I wished "I could have said that differently"—or not at all. I would suggest that many of us had similar experiences. Prime Minister Nakasone has indeed erred—and admitted that error of judgment.

His specific remarks seemed very uncharacteristic to me—although I note some suggestion that the remarks may have been misinterpreted. Yet over the past 2 years I have had the fine opportunity of three personal visits with Prime Minister Nakasone. Those were arranged by the U.S. Ambassador Mike Mansfield, our former majority leader. Mike Mansfield was one of my "idols" in politics, serving with remarkable distinction my neighboring State of Montana. Mike and my father Milward, served together in the U.S. Senate. They were fine friends and respected each other greatly. It was Mike Mansfield who shared with me the stature of the man—Nakasone. Funny place here—in this Washington government. Only several short months ago we in Congress and in the media were hoping and praying that this remarkable man would be able to lead his government again and we would be the beneficiary of that and many glowing things were written of him and of his legislative skills and abilities and his compassion, for he is a man of solid integrity and honor.

Let us just say for now—without reading a lot of "stuff" into the situation how much we appreciate having the apology. It is tough to apologize. We all know how very personally tough it is to admit that we are wrong or to admit that we just did not quite "mean it that way." Prime Minister Nakasone has had the great courage to apologize. I am one who accepts that apology in the spirit in which it is tendered. It takes guts to do that and I always admire that trait. Let me also commend the Japanese Ambassador, Nobuo Matsunaga, a fine and sincere man who has anguished greatly in this situation. He has been a strong force in resolving the matter. He deserves great credit.

Let me take this moment to ask to submit for the record a column written by Nathaniel B. Thayer, in the Tuesday, September 30, 1986, edition of the Washington Post. This article, penned by an American who has worked closely with Prime Minister Nakasone provides us with a most interesting and valuable insight that might give us a better perspective of this very painful episode.

The United States and Japan have many, many issues confronting our fine countries. My dear friend and colleague from Wyoming, MALCOLM WALLOP, and I are deeply disturbed about the Japanese Government's treatment of trade in soda ash and beef cattle and coal. There is this tremendous and very serious trade imbalance between our two countries. Both of us need a very monumental and good faith effort in order to resolve that imbalance. I would earnestly trust that Mr. Nakasone's apology might properly lay this recent and highly publicized episode to rest in order that we can be about our critical business of honestly discussing and conscientiously negotiating our differences with the nation of Japan. We have much to do together. We must be about it. Continually elevating this incident like a target on a firing range diverts us from an objective that is one of overwhelming national interest. We should put this behind us and press on.

The article referred to follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 30, 1986]

(By Nathaniel B. Thayer)

NAKASONE IS NOT A RACIST

I have known and argued with Yasuhiro Nakasone for 25 years. A few years back, I helped him put an autobiography into English. I am now working on a political biography of him. I see him regularly, the last time just 10 days ago. I feel confident I know what he thinks. He is not a racist.

Nakasone got to be and has stayed on as Japan's prime minister by doing first things first and doing them fast. That explains his summoning the press in the middle of the night and giving it a handwritten apology to the American people for comments he made about U.S. minority groups. That apology, he hoped, would allow him to get on with his "political commitment to strengthen the friendship between our two peoples." But he was also aware that it would serve to confirm the charges of racism that many Americans leveled against him for his speech to young Liberal Democratic Party workers in the Shizuoka foothills of Mount Fuji.

The problem with the Shizuoka speech seems to rest with Nakasone's penchant for mixing English phrases into his Japanese sentences. I've listened to a voice clip from the speech. He says that Japan has an "intelligent society." The quotation is the part of the sentence in English. In a following sentence, he says its level is low in the United States, and attributes that to the blacks and Hispanics. The Japanese foreign office has said that he was talking about education and literacy.

I agree that Nakasone was talking about education. But I think he was talking about something beyond just literacy. I think he was talking about intellectual integration, though that term is mine not his. I think Nakasone was talking about the ability of a nation to recognize its general welfare, formulate its goals and then act on them. He could just as easily have been talking about established America's inability to bring its minorities into the mainstream of society as about the minorities themselves. He was condescending. He is contrite. That accounts in part for his speed in issuing an apology.

The last time I met with Nakasone, he handed me a pamphlet of a speech he had given to a seminar of other party workers in the mountains at Karuizawa on Aug. 30. In it, he speaks of a philosophy of accommodation. He quotes from the 13th-century Japanese Buddhist sage Dogen, who found divinity in all living matter. He recalls the Asian idea that all men are brothers. He speaks of respect for human values.

The Karuizawa speech is not Nakasone at his best but Nakasone as usual. It's a better measure of his thinking than the Shizuoka speech.

What are the attitudes of other Japanese toward the West? That question was explored in five national polls between 1950 and 1970. In the first two, a plurality of the Japanese felt inferior to Westerners. In the next two, a plurality of the Japanese felt superior to Westerners. In the fifth poll, only the Japanese who felt Westerners and Japanese were the same were on an upward curve.

But while Japanese intellectuals write of learning from China, since it is the historical source of much Japanese culture, polls show this attitude is not accepted by other citizens. More common is the attitude that China has something to learn from Japan. And while South Korea ranks above North Korea in Japan's estimation neither is liked.

A Japanese diplomat, writing under the pen name Satoru Nagasaka, has said, "Japanese will accord Koreans equal social status when their nations have achieved an economic status equal to Japan. Europeans and Americans imposed the same condition on Japan." The book received a literary prize.

Japanese spend little time worrying about their own minorities, although from time to time powerful Japanese writers have come to their defense. Police fear of North Korean spies and illegal immigrants has greatly affected treatment of Koreans in Japan. Keidanren, the organizaton of economic organizatons, has committees to study every possible problem in the Japanese economy, but it has no committee to study employment problems among the Burakumin, a caste that is subject to various forms of discrimination.

The great intellectual theme of the 1970s and 1980s has been the "internationalization" of Japan. But it is fair to say that most Japanese see their society as quite different from others. Some Japanese see this difference as a blessing, others as a burden. Nakasone sees it as both. It is not always easy to tell which thought is uppermost in his mind when he talks of Japan's future.●

GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed Senate Joint Resolution 308, a resolution designating March 25, 1987 as "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy." This resolution also asks the President to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the designated day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

This resolution passed the House of Representatives last week. It is an amended version of an earlier Senate resolution sponsored by Senator SPECTER and myself, which designated March 25, 1986 as Greek Independence Day. That resolution passed the Senate on March 25, 1986.

Since we last considered this resolution, Greece has taken a number of steps which have improved the climate of American-Greek relations. That improvement was confirmed by Secretary of State Shultz, who said, upon his return from Greece, that there has been a "real turn for the better" in United States-Greek relations.

For example, in May, Greece expelled Libyans associated with terrorism, and in July cut the size of the Libyan "diplomatic" delegation in Athens. The United States and Greece have cooperated in the training of anti-terrorist personnel, and the Greek maritime industry has become a leader in anti-terrorist procedures.

In March, Secretary of Defense Weinberger reported to Congress that Greece was No. 1 among all NATO nations in the 1971-84 period in its increase in total defense spending for NATO security. It was also No. 1 in 1984, the last year for which figures are available, in the percentage of its gross domestic product spent on NATO defense.

I'd also like to speak about why March 25, 1987, has been designated as Greek Independence Day. March 25, 1987, marks the 166th anniversary of the beginning of the revolution which freed the Greek people from the Ottoman Empire. It is fitting that we celebrate this day together with Greece in order to reaffirm the common democratic heritage of Americans and Greeks.

The ancient Greeks forged the very notion of democracy, in which the ultimate power to govern was vested in the people. As Aristotle said, "If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will best be attained when all persons alike share in the government to the utmost." Because the concept of democracy was born in the age of the ancient Greeks, all Americans, whether or not of Greek ancestry, are kinsmen of a kind to the ancient Greeks. Indeed, our own Founding Fathers drew heavily upon the political and philosophical experience of ancient Greece in forming our representative democracy.

Constitutional democracy has made the American way of life possible. It established the precious freedoms of speech, religion, and assembly which Americans cherish, and which are so fundamental to American democracy. For that contribution alone, we owe a heavy debt to the Greeks. The common heritage which we share has forged a close bond between Greece and the United States, and between our peoples. And it is reflected in the numerous contributions made by present day Greek Americans in New Jersey and across the country to our American culture.

I thank my colleagues for passing this resolution as a tribute to these contributions, past and present, which have greatly enriched American life. I look forward to even closer United States-Greek ties in the months and years ahead.●

RETIRING SENATORS

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, at the close of the 99th Congress, the U.S. Senate will lose some of its most distinguished Members. It has been an honor for me to serve with them.

Senator PAUL LAXALT has the unique gift of effectively advocating a cogent point of view while remaining the friend even of those whose views are different. His unique role as a bridge between the administration and the Senate is irreplaceable. All of us who have counted PAUL LAXALT among our friends will feel his absence acutely. He has been a unique resource for us, as well as for the President.

Senator CHARLES MATHIAS has also occupied a special niche in this institution. The people of Maryland have long revered him for his independence and integrity, and rightly so. He is one of those Senators who not only have the courage of their convictions, but who manage to make it a pleasure either to agree or to disagree with them. The respect in which MAC MATHIAS is held cannot be overstated. He has helped keep alive the tradition of Abraham Lincoln in the Republican Party, and the Senate will be poorer for his absence.

Senator BARRY GOLDWATER has much in common with Senator MATHIAS in terms of adherence to principle. His steadfastness has earned him the admiration and affection of millions of people who agree with him on the issues, and millions of others who do not. In the Senate, he has built his reputation on many talents, but most of all on his consistency, and on his willingness to express his opinion even when a consistent application of principle leads him to a somewhat unorthodox position. Not only has Senator GOLDWATER written about the The Conscience of a Conservative, but he has lived life as a conservative with a conscience. I know of no higher compliment that could be paid to any political figure.

The relationships of friendship and respect that we enjoy here in the U.S. Senate fortunately are not limited to one side of the aisle. Senator RUSSELL LONG will be remembered as a major figure in the history of the Senate. Some Senators make their reputations through their orations on the floor; others make their reputations through their quite effectiveness in getting things done. Senator LONG is famous for the depth and breadth of his knowledge in critical areas of public policy such as the tax laws. Both as chairman of the Finance Committee and as its ranking minority member, his influence has been incalculable. Indeed, few Senators have affected the daily lives of all Americans as much. I join in wishing him every success in his next endeavors.

Senator TOM EAGLETON has served with great distinction in the U.S. Senate for 18 years after a remarkable career as attorney general of Missouri and the prosecuting attorney of St. Louis. Senator EAGLETON is well known for his candor and his incisive comments which go to the heart of any subject under discussion. In meetings at the North Atlantic Treaty Assembly, his comments would go to the heart of controversial issues affecting the United States and our NATO allies and still leave the friendliest of feelings with his diplomatic approach. We will all miss TOM in the Senate.

Senator GARY HART has helped focus our attention on the issues of the future. Both inside and outside the Senate, he has worked hard to give the younger generation of our citizens an effective voice in national policy. Most of my contacts with Senator HART have been in the Senate gym. In those less formal settings, he provides real insights into complex issues with a very few words. He made an admirable showing in the 1984 Presidential sweepstakes, and we shall all watch our departed colleague as 1988 approaches.

All of us who remain in the Senate—and I sincerely hope to be one of them—will be held at a high standard by the public's recollections of these retiring Senators. They will remain a living challenge to us as we face the difficult issues remaining before this country in the years ahead.●

IN COMMEMORATION OF MINORITY ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT WEEK

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, October 5-11, 1986, has been designated as Minority Enterprise Development Week.

I am pleased to take note of the importance of the contributions of minority entrepreneurs to our economy. I know from personal experience how it feels to start a new business and watch it grow. Many risks and problems face the aspiring entrepreneur.

However, the pride and self-esteem which accompany success and acceptance in the marketplace make it well worth the effort.

Successful business activity is the basis for our country's economic growth. And, economic well-being in our minority communities will increase as entrepreneurial opportunities expand. The challenge for Government is to provide assistance and opportunities for the many talented and ambitious minority citizens who wish to establish or enlarge their own businesses. This assistance can range from sharing information to setting aside portions of Federal contracts for minority enterprises.

Mr. President, I would like to address set-asides for a moment. Attention has focused on set-asides recently, as some have called for their elimination. I strongly support set-asides as one method of providing an opportunity for minority enterprises to gain equal footing in bidding for Government-funded contracts. Set-asides have a long history of bipartisan support in the Congress and have been upheld in executive and judicial decisions. While I do not dispute that there have been some abuses of the program, this does not justify terminating the program. Rather, these problems should be addressed.

I am pleased to salute the minority entrepreneurs around the country. I stand ready to do everything I can to help them flourish and to increase their numbers.●

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: A SPECIAL PLEA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Reagan-Gorbachev presummit meeting begins tomorrow. Although there are many pressing and important issues to discuss, the importance of human rights cannot be exaggerated. Human rights are the basic ingredient of a civilized society. We have a responsibility to do all that we can to help everyone attain the freedom that they deserve.

I would like to make a special plea for my Soviet friends Naum and Inna Meiman. They have been trying to emigrate for more than 10 years. Naum has always been a vocal leader attempting to bring human rights to all Soviet citizens. He was an instrumental member of the Helsinki Watch Group. His quest for human rights has now become a matter of life or death. His wife Inna suffers from cancerous tumors on her neck. After the removal of four tumors, the Soviet doctors decided that there is nothing more they can do for her fifth and most recent tumor. Fortunately, there is experimental treatment available to her in the West. I only hope that the Soviets allow Inna to receive this necessary treatment before it is too late.

I strongly urge the Soviet Union to allow Naum and Inna Meiman to emigrate to Israel.●

HUMAN RIGHTS IN EAST TIMOR

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, since the 1975 invasion and occupation of East Timor by the Indonesian military, as many as 200,000 of a population of 650,000 East Timorese men, women, and children have perished. As William Buckley wrote in the National Review last May, "It is worthy of comparison with Pol Pot's bloody reign over Cambodia, not only for the devastation inflicted, but also for the lack of attention, in the world community, paid to the holocausts." For those of us concerned about international human rights, the repression and brutality carried out in East Timor since 1975 stands out as one of the great crimes of our time.

When we talk about 200,000 people, 3 men seem almost trivial. But they are not, Mr. President. Today I bring to the attention of my colleagues the troubling case of three East Timorese law students who were recently arrested in Jakarta. They are the subjects of two Amnesty International "Urgent Actions," and they may represent an entirely new dimension of Indonesia's disregard for East Timor and its population at a time when the situation on the small island seemed to be improving.

Antonino Goncalves, Joao Freitas de Camara, and Francisco Fernandes Carvalho have all been arrested by the Indonesian military in Jakarta during the past several weeks. Since the arrests, the Indonesian authorities have refused to reveal information about where these students are being held. The Indonesian Government recently informed United States Embassy officials that the students were charged with stockpiling guns in their homes in the East Timor town of East Timor, but details of the charges have yet to be released. Amnesty International is concerned that these men may be the victims of torture, as have many East Timorese in the past.

These arrests and the potential of torture are troubling, and I have made my concerns known to the Government of Indonesia. But there is more. Although the East Timorese have endured incredible hardships and mysterious arrests at the hands of the military in their native land, rarely if ever have there been reports of such arrests outside East Timor. Now we have witnessed three such arrests in several weeks.

Mr. President, being straightforward with Indonesian officials about our concern for the many thousands of East Timorese who continue to be denied even the most basic human rights can only serve to strengthen our relationship with that nation of great strategic interest to us. Being straightforward with Indonesian authorities about our concern for these students can only serve to help them and stem what could be a most dangerous tide before it threatens an entire population and endangers Indonesia's ties with the United States as well.●

HONORING SENATOR STAFFORD AND REPRESENTATIVE WAXMAN ON THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF MECA

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, some of my colleagues recently attended an event commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Manufacturers of Emission Controls Association and honoring our colleagues, Senator ROBERT STAFFORD, and Representative HENRY WAXMAN, for their role in shaping our Nation's clean air laws.

The development of an environmentally clean automobile was placed on the country's urgent agenda in 1970, and there were many people in and outside the auto industry who said the standards we set in law were too restrictive, the deadlines too ambitious, cleanup technology too far in the future.

The doubters were proven wrong, and due to advances in catalytic converters and other cleanup technologies, our Nation's air is cleaner today. Despite substantial increases in motor vehicle mileage, our cars are more efficient, and the engineers have turned their minds and research money to the problem of pollution from larger vehicles and diesel engines.

MECA was formed 10 years ago to give Congress and other policymakers the benefit of its technical expertise. The MECA companies have shown that technology-forcing legislation like the Clean Air Act can and does yield important gains in pollution control, and that there is a profit in the business of a clean environment.

This event honored two legislators whose commitment to clean air is unquestioned, irreplaceable, and historically significant—Senator BOB STAFFORD and Congressman HENRY WAXMAN. They presided over the committee and subcommittee of jurisdiction on clean air issues at a time when the Clean Air Act was under extreme pressure. Their defense of the Clean Air Act looked beyond questions of party loyalty and put the public interest foremost. At times, in 1981 and 1982, each must have felt like a lonely voice in the wilderness. But while they worked alone, each in his own way, each in his own arena, together they turned aside efforts to roll back our clean air laws. And since 1983, both have authored and advanced legislation to extend and improve the Clean Air Act.

The battle is not over yet. We need to get more pollution control from mobile sources, and we will look again to the MECA companies and others to guide our policies. We also need legislation to stop acid rain, address the problems of our upper atmosphere and protect our citizens from toxic air pollution.

The unfinished agenda is a long one. But it should not overshadow the genuine contribution to public health and welfare of the MECA companies in cleaning up the Nation's automobiles.

It was fitting, Mr. President, that the Honorable Paul Rogers, former Congressman from Florida, HENRY WAXMAN's predecessor as chairman of the Health and Environment Subcommittee, and the veteran of so many Clean Air Act battles, presented MECA's first Awards for Excellence in the Preservation of the Environment.

Mr. President, as long as men and women of the character, strength, and perseverance of BOB STAFFORD and HENRY WAXMAN serve in Congress, that goal will continue to be national policy.

I ask, Mr. President, that Mr. Howitt's remarks at the 10th anniversary MECA reception be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The remarks are as follows:

REMARKS OF JOHN HOWITT, MECA PRESIDENT, AT AWARDS CEREMONY HONORING SENATOR STAFFORD AND CONGRESSMAN WAXMAN

Good evening. My name is John Howitt. I am President of the Manufacturers of Emission Controls Association.

I would like to take this opportunity to welcome everyone and to thank you for joining us this evening to mark MECA's 10th anniversary and to honor two distinguished gentlemen for their outstanding efforts to protect our environment.

I believe most of you are familiar with MECA but for the benefit of those who are not, let me briefly introduce the Association and explain the origin of the environmental awards. MECA is a non-profit association of leading manufacturers of motor vehicle emission control equipment. The association was created ten years ago to serve as a source of technical information on emission control for public officials and others. Since the early days, we have grown considerably and now 16 companies participate in MECA activities.

The U.S. Motor Vehicle Pollution Control Program is probably the greatest environmental success story of the past two decades. The credit for the success of that program belongs to many of you who are in this room this evening. It's something I believe all of us can take great satisfaction in. I know our companies—some of whom have been involved in the development of emission control since the early 1960's—are proud to have played a role in this environmental success.

As we looked back over the past decade while planning for our 10th anniversary, we concluded that it would be very appropriate to honor an individual or individuals who have made and are making a substantial contribution to the preservation of this nation's environment. It is our hope to continue this awards program by recognizing, on a biennial basis, other public officials and individuals from the private sector who have served our environment well.

We felt the Steubben rendition of the American Bald Eagle in flight over the Earth a fitting award, for the eagle symbolizes the strength and beauty of our natural environment—a national resource and treasure worth preserving.

At this time, it is my great pleasure to introduce the gentleman who has honored us by agreeing to present these environmental awards—the Honorable Paul G. Rogers.

This gentleman certainly needs no introduction to most of you in the room who will remember his Herculean efforts in championing major environmental legislation of the 1970's.

Paul Rogers served 24 years in the U.S. House of Representatives and eight of those years as Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Health and the Environment. Virtually every major health law in effect today bears the Rogers' mark.

Some of the more prominent pieces of environmental and health legislation which bear the Rogers' name are the Clean Air Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act, the National Cancer Act, the Health Manpower Training Act, the Heart, Blood Vessel, Lung and Blood Act, the Research on the Aging Act, the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Convention and Control Act of 1970, the Medical Device Amendments of 1970, the Emergency Medical Services Act, the Health Maintenance Organization Act, and the Radiation Health Safety Act.

Paul Rogers is a partner in the law firm of Hogan and Hartson in Washington, DC, and has continued his keen interest in conservation and the environment. In 1982, the National Academy of Sciences awarded him its Public Welfare medal in recognition of his "distinguished contributions in the application of science to the public welfare."●

TAIWAN

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise today to take note of the recent announcement by President Chiang Ching-kuo of his proposal to end martial law on Taiwan. This, I believe, is a most welcome development. I was in Taiwan in August of this year and had the opportunity to visit with the President. We discussed, among other things, the long-term evolution of economic and political developments on Taiwan. I believe that it is inevitable that a nation which develops economically—as Taiwan has done so strongly—will develop pressures to expand participation in political life. This is what is occurring on Taiwan and I am pleased that the Government is prepared to take the step of terminating martial law and loosening restrictions on personal freedoms.

Mr. President, I would note, too, that October 10 is Taiwan's national day. President Chiang Ching-kuo's announcement has thus occurred at a most appropriate time of celebration.

I am confident that I join all colleagues in congratulating Taiwan and in looking forward to further developments in the coming months and years.●

MUNICIPAL GARDENS

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, in May 1986, the Municipal Gardens Amateur Basketball Team, made up of 13 and 14 year-olds from the Indianapolis region, won the Indiana AAU Junior Olympic Championship.

Under the astute leadership of Tom "Red" Taylor, they defeated an excellent Washington, DC, team to capture the 1986 National AAU Junior Olympic Championship. This team—with some changes over the years—has won the National AAU Junior Olympic title 3 of the last 4 years.

In the week-long tournament, held in beautiful Orlando, FL, the Municipal Gardens team defeated teams form California, Oklahoma, Iowa, Georgia, West Virginia, and Washington, DC.

This outstanding team consisted of the following members: Damon Dailey, who was named the tournament's most valuable player; Lloyd Carr, Marc Dickison, Jeff Gradek, Elliot Hatcher, Chuck Huffman, Kyle Kenworthy, Paul Lee, Eric Montrose, Tom Moore, Steve Mozingo, and Troy Terrill.

Coach Taylor, who works as the vice president treasurer at Ivy Technical College, has been coaching at Municipal Gardens for the past 17 years. In that time, his team have won five AAU Junior Olympic National Championships and finished runner-up another three occasions. He also led his teams to 16 Indiana State AAU Junior Olympic Championships. This exceptional leadership and ability is indicative of the talent both Coach Taylor and his teams exhibit.

Indiana is proud of these achievements and wish the Municipal Gardens teams continued success.●

10TH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN PUBLIC GROUP TO PROMOTE IMPLEMENTATION OF HELSINKI ACCORDS

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I join the other members of the Helsinki Commission and my colleagues in the Senate in saluting the 10th anniversary of the heroic Ukrainian Public Group to Promote Implementation of the Helsinki Accords, the Ukraine's Helsinki monitoring group.

The group was formed spontaneously on November 9, 1976, a decade ago. In those 10 years the Ukraine Helsinki monitors have performed the same noble task as similar groups in Moscow, Lithuania, Georgia, and Armenia have—to bear moral witness to the continuing Soviet violation of its solemn international commitments on human rights.

For us in the West, the signing of the Helsinki Final Act in 1976 marked the end of one long series of diplomatic negotiations to frame the act, and the opening of another to review implementation of the Final Act's human rights provisions. For the courageous members of the Ukraine monitoring group, the ceremony in Helsinki marked the beginning of years of intensified persecution, detention, arrest, torture, and, for some, death in Soviet labor camps.

The 37 members of the Ukraine monitoring group have paid the price for their moral witness. All but 1 have been imprisoned, with 16 in prison or exile today. Three have become martyrs to the principles of basic human rights and Ukrainian national identity, suffering death in Soviet labor camps.

The Soviets employ all of the standard instruments from their toolkit of expression. Ukrainians who join the Helsinki group are accused of common crimes and shipped off to harsh regime labor camps. They are sent into exile in the West. Their sympathizers are incarcerated in mental hospitals. Their homes are searched, their documents seized, they are followed, detained and tortured, their communications monitored, their privacy destroyed. The hypocrisy of Soviet officialdom is never more brazen than in its persecution of a group whose only purpose is to ensure respect for human rights, rights that Moscow has pledged itself to observe.

The Ukrainian monitoring group has shown extraordinary courage in the face of the brutal repression of the Soviet authorities. In this they have carried on a proud tradition of Ukrainian nationalism that has resisted russification and cultural genocide for generations. From the days of the independent Ukrainian Republic at the time of the Russian Revolution, to the struggle of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army against the Nazis and the Soviets in World War II, the Ukraine has seized every opportunity to assert its rights against the great powers that have denied it self-determination.

The Soviets have unknowingly paid tribute to the indomitable spirit of Ukrainian nationalism in persecuting Yuriy Schukevych, son of Roman Shukhevych, commander of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army during the Second World War. Yuriy has spent 34 of his 52 years in prison or exile, all for refusing to renounce his father, who led Ukrainian guerrillas against the double occupation of the Nazis and the Soviet Red Army.

Shukhevych managed to join the Helsinki group in 1979, despite his twilight life in the Soviet gulang. Today, he has begun to show the physical disability of those who are consigned to the living hell of Soviet labor camps—blindness, ulcers, and heart disease. His body is failing, but his very life stands as a testament to the spirit of human dignity and national identity of the Ukrainian people.

The rollcall of heroism on behalf of universal principles of human rights and national rights of the Ukrainian people goes on and on. It is a melancholy list, for all of those on it are either exiled from the land they love or degraded, imprisoned, and tortured at home by the Soviet authorities. Some have paid the ultimate price, giving their lives in defense of their ideals.

By adopting Senate Concurrent Resolution 154, we make the smallest of gestures in saluting those whose courage cannot be adequately described. But we must let the people of the Ukraine, the members of the Ukrainian Helsinki monitoring group, know that their struggle is not conducted in the darkness, as Moscow might wish. It is waged in the glaring light of world opinion, world opinion that does not forget, does not give up, does not surrender the hope that the struggle is not in vain. When we vote for this resolution, we reaffirm our bond with those who daily suffer for the principles of freedom we are fortunate to enjoy here in the United States.●

THE NEW GOVERNMENT OF PRESIDENT AQUINO

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the publisher and editor-in-chief of the Philippine News, the largest Filipino-American newspaper in the United States, Mr. Alex A. Esclamado, has written a most perceptive and moving article about the new government of President Aquino. The article appeared in the San Francisco Examiner on September 24, 1986. It presents the case for assistance to that government very persuasively, especially the argument that it is the national interest of the United States that we help democracy survive in the Philippines. I ask that Mr. Esclamado's article be printed in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

The article follows:

STRONG SUPPORT FOR AQUINO

(By Alex A. Esclamado)

When the Filipino people succeeded in regaining their freedom in a most dramatic revolution last February, freedom-loving peoples around the world cheered them on. In center focus was Corazon C. Aquino, wife of the fallen hero, Senator Benigno S. Aquino Jr.

There were doubts in many minds whether she had the ability to lead a devastated nation. The most stinging indictment of her supposed lack of competence to handle the Herculean job of the presidency of the Philippines was made by The New York Times editorial board.

The Times had interviewed Aquino immediately after her victory. Candidly and unguardedly, acting like the sincere housewife she used to be, always giving center stage to her dynamic husband, she expressed her personal doubts about her ability to govern. She answered questions with the sincerity and openness characteristic of her personality.

Obviously, no politician of her newly-acquired stature would have dared to display such candidness. Predictably, the Times article was devastating. The image created of Corazon Aquino was of a president who had no experience, who admittedly had to take crash courses in government and leadership under special tutors—tutors who, as many feared, could take advantage of her political naivete.

Today, barely seven short months after she assumed the powers of the presidency, Americans are being given the opportunity to size up, at close range, a diminutive housewife-turned president of 55 million people.

What is her performance rating? I can only sum up what she has already done in such a short time:

She has restored freedom to the Filipinos. This is clearly demonstrated by the reinstitution of press freedom. There are 26 newspapers and magazines in the Philippines today each trying to find fault with her government.

She is dismantling the corrupt political machinery of the past regime. Local, provincial and national officials who for 20 long years were the vital instruments of power of a totally corrupt administration are being replaced. One can appreciate the enormity of the undertaking and the tremendous implications it has on political stability.

She is restructuring the framework of the nation through the formulation of a new constitution that embodies the Filipinos' high aspirations of a truly democratic system. She has announced that elections will be held under the new constitution soon after it is ratified.

With a duly elected Congress that provides the checks to the presidency and local officials receiving fresh mandate from the people, together with an independent judiciary, full political stability shall be achieved.

She has personally implemented the laudable policy of reconciliation with the rebel and insurgent elements of the Philippine society which flourished from the brutal repression and unconscionable corruption of the past regime. She released all political prisoners including Communist leaders.

Aquino has traveled to the dangerous southernmost region of the country to meet the leader of the Moslem rebels with whom she has struck a ceasefire agreement. She has flown to the almost inaccessible jungles of northern Luzon to "smoke the peace pipe," so to speak with one of the most enigmatic of rebels.

She is in the process of negotiating peace with the New People's Army, the Communist-backed insurgents, whose cause and numbers flourished under the injustices and inequities of the Marcos dictatorship.

As Aquino pointed out in her speech before Congress, the communist insurgency started with only 500 armed soldiers when martial law was declared in 1972. It had grown to over 16,000 when the Marcos regime ended in February.

No president of the Philippines before her has accomplished these daring personal feats in the first 200 days of his term. At another time before hers, these things would only be attempted by a man in a man's world.

Now she has come to the United States to solve the most difficult problem of her government: the revival of the Philippine economy. There is no need to belabor here how much devastation has been inflicted by Imelda and Ferdinand Marcos upon the Filipino nation; much has been written about it.

Not only have they stolen a major chunk of whatever there was to steal from the country, they have also plunged the land hopelessly into debt. As Aquino has said, it is a $26 billion obligation of a people who never received the benefits of the debt.

President Aquino came to appeal to the United States for three forms of assistance:

To increase the level of U.S. aid to the Philippines so that the democracy that her people have valiantly regained in a phenomenal revolution may be preserved.

She was right in her speech to Congress when she pointed out that the Philippine revolution was the cheapest revolution ever. For in how many places have Americans been embroiled in conflicts to promote democracy and have failed at tremendous cost of American lives and financial resources?

To urge American investors to resume their business activities in the Phillippines and to encourage new business ventures.

To make the burden lighter for the impoverished Filipino who must honor a huge foreign debt from which "he never benefitted."

The bottom line is: To what extent is America willing to help the Aquino government? How much is America willing to pay to help keep the Philippines on the side of freedom?

Doubts about Aquino's personal competence and ability to govern the Philippines should be erased by the time her plane lands in Manila to the rousing welcome of her proud people. She will return to her country finding it very much intact and well under her full control. Indeed, her visit will have been a definite diplomatic and substantive success.

She will also leave the United States with the strong support of the Filipino-American community throughout the country. Everywhere she went—Washington, D.C., New York, Boston and San Francisco, Filipinos welcomed her as their new heroine, a person full of sincerity, decency and talent. She has become the personification of the Filipinos' love and commitment to the immutable ideals of freedom and patriotism.

This is the real Corazon C. Aquino that I know: intelligent, strong-minded, sincere. No one can manipulate her. No one can dictate to her. While she needs advice from experts, she is clearly the Boss. There is no doubt that she can lead the Philippines to the greatness that it deserves.

How much must we help to make her succeed? I say enough to make her win the battle to preserve democracy in the Philippines!

I am an American by adoption, a Filipino by birth. I have seen how the United States has failed the Filipinos at certain crucial moments in the long history of Philippine-American friendship.

Democrats and Republicans alike, gave the Marcoses free rein, enabling them to destroy the moral and material well-being of the Filipino people.

I believe it is time for America to do justice and make amends to their Filipino friends who love Americans more than any other people in the world.

What is an equitable price, then, for maintaining democracy in the Philippines?

If the primary interest in the Philippines is the maintenance of U.S. strategic military bases there, then let the U.S. pay the price to maintain them. Assuming that the biggest threat to U.S. bases are the Communists, then let us spend now what it takes to defeat the Communists in the Philippines. How?

As President Aquino eloquently stressed, communism cannot be defeated by sheer military power. There must be an alleviation of the poverty of the people to remove their cause for rebellion.

Recently, Washington sent experts to the Philippines to determine how much it would cost to transfer the military bases in the Philippines to other areas, like the Marianas Islands. The figure was $10 billion and the resultant facility would not be even half as effective as the present facilities.

In response to the appeal of President Aquino, I submit that the United States adopt a Marshall Plan-type of commitment to the Philippines. The amount shall be equal to what would be spent to transfer the military bases elsewhere programmed over five years. The $2 billion annual budget may be placed in the Defense budget as "rental" for the military bases in the Philippines or for the maintenance thereof. The amount shall then be considerably reduced after the five-year period.

The fund should not be termed "foreign aid." This fund would enable President Aquino to effectively implement social amelioration projects to enhance the economic life of the Filipinos. The Communists then will lose their mass base and will eventually be defeated, thus the threat to the military bases will disappear.

And when the military bases issue is brought before the Filipino people for decision in a plebiscite in 1991 when the current treaty expires, I am certain that an overwhelming majority will vote for their retention.

We must help Aquino's government succeed. The $2 billion annual budget which I propose is only at parity with Egypt. It is very much less than our present support to Israel of over $3 billion. The Reagan administration is reported to be considering an aid package for Pakistan at the level of $900 million. I say, in the scale of strategic importance and commitment to democracy, the survival of Philippine democracy should be ranked as equally important to America as the survivial of democracy in Egypt, Israel or Pakistan.

If the United States cannot help democracy survive in the Philippines where all conditions are favorable how can she be expected to win a battle for Democracy anywhere else in the world? Is there a better country to invest in democracy and freedom?●

FREIDA MAE DAWKINS

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, today I ask my colleagues in the Senate to join me in honoring the former executive director of the East Chicago, IN, Civil Rights Commission who passed away on November 2, 1985.

Freida Mae Dawkins, a native Hoosier from Mount Vernon, IN, was born July 23, 1917. She moved to East Chicago, IN, upon her marriage to Henry A. Dawkins. Her energy was immediately seized upon by the Zion Missionary Baptist Church. Her work in the church was outstanding. She was also involved in many other church organizations, such as: past president of the Matron's Department with the Indiana State Baptist Convention, past president of the Zion Baptist Missionary Church Society, past president and director of the Gospel Chorus of the Zion Baptist Church and past president of the East Chicago Singing Convention which included churches in Hammond and East Chicago, IN.

This remarkable, woman, after raising her two daughters, Henretta and Patricia, decided to return to school herself and complete a program in practical nursing. She graduated from the Purdue University Calumet College of Practical Nursing and went on to serve for 12 years at the Methodist Hospital in Gary, IN.

The strength and solid character of this great lady could be seen in her civic and social activities. She was a charter member of Club Reginas which provided scholarships to needy college students; chairperson of the board of directors of the Project Area Committee; she organized and incorporated the Unity for H.E.L.P. which allowed the Food Fair to remain open; was a chairperson for city employees to the Lake County area United Way Campaign 1976-77; was on the board of directors for the Tri-City Mental Health Program; served on the first board for the St. Catherine Credit Union; was the president of the Indiana State Consortium of Local/State Civil Rights Agencies from 1981-82; served as a board member to the East Chicago NAACP; and was a member of the Lily of the Valley Chapter 41 of the Twin City Lodge also located in East Chicago.

This untiring Hoosier is typical of many who give freely of themselves so that the lives of others may be enhanced.●

ABORTION AND INFORMED CONSENT: MASSACHUSETTS

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I urge all my colleagues to read Debbie's letter describing her experience with two abortions. Abortion is one of the, if not the, most serious violations of human rights that one person can inflict on another. It is the deliberate destruction of the offspring of a human being—which is without a doubt a human being.

But to literally add insult to injury, abortionists are degrading women and endangering the health of the mothers by not adequately informing them of the risks and nature of abortion. Pregnant women, 4,100 of them each day, are procuring abortions, and most of them will not know the basic facts regarding the gestation of their infant, or the type of abortion procedure to be used.

It is imperative that S. 2791, my bill requiring informed consent before abortion, be enacted into law in order to protect the emotional and physical health of this Nation's women. I ask, in particular, my colleagues from Massachusetts to heed the plea of Debbie, their constituent, and support informed consent before abortion.

I ask that Debbie's letter be printed in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

AUGUST 15, 1986.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: My first abortion was illegal at the age of 18. That didn't stop the doctor from asking me if I wanted an abortion. That was all the counseling I received.

It is tragic that the counseling most woman considering abortion receive is so near-sighted. Those who counsel women at abortion clinics are simply interested in rushing scared women and girls into abortions which many will regret later. It may take months, even years, but once the realization of what abortion is and does sets in, women suffer devastating emotional crises and find it very hard to forgive themselves for the role which they had in killing their own children.

The tragedy of killing an unborn child by abortion is compounded by the physical harm done by abortion to many women who undergo the procedure. I myself suffered from a very bad infection after my abortion, an infection which spread throughout my body. Other women I know have been forced to have total hysterectomies or simply rendered barren as the result of extensive scarring—all because of an abortion to which they never gave informed consent. Abortion is a very dangerous procedure for the mother and child, both physically and psychologically.

I, along with many others, became hateful, angry, bitter and resentful after the abortion. I dwelled on the baby's due day for years. My next abortion later was legal and the counselling wasn't any better. I wanted to make up for the first baby I killed. In turn I killed this one also. It saddens me to see how tough and "pro-choice" I became after the second abortion. The first one devastated me and, in order to handle my feelings, I had to become hard and put up a wall. I didn't know how to deal with murder.

Can you imagine how it feels years later to see pictures of aborted babies? I thought I would die, seeing what I'd done! I am 100% pro-life now. Women should be told all the facts about abortion. "What you don't know can hurt you!" It kills babies physically and women spiritually.

We, the women who have had abortions, know the physical and emotional pain left in abortion's wake. It is and has been our struggle to deal with abortion's aftermath, now it is our struggle to tell others the truth about abortion. Please help us in this effort.

Sincerely,

DEBBIE SOTIRKYS,
Massachusetts.●

SOVIET PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, we are grateful for the recent release of Dr. Yuri Orlov, founder of the Moscow Helsinki Group, from internal exile. A renowned Soviet scientist. Dr. Orlov was a member of the Armenian Academy of Sciences and conducted research at some of the finest institutes. During the early 1970's Orlov began to speak out on behalf of Soviet political prisoners. In 1973 he wrote a statement in defense of fellow scientist and human rights advocate Dr. Andrei Sakharov. Orlov was a founding member of the Moscow chapter of Amnesty International and became the driving force behind the Moscow Helsinki Group. The group, whose members included Dr. Elena Bonner, Sakharov's wife, and Anatoly Shcharansky, was organized following the signing of the Helsinki Final Act to document Soviet human rights violations. Orlov was arrested, charged with anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda, and sentenced to 7 years in strict regimen camp plus 5 years internal exile. During his term of imprisonment, Orlov was subjected to long periods of solitary confinement. While in internal exile, he was harassed repeatedly by the authorities, denied the right to correspond with his wife, Irina, and even attacked by thugs in the remote Siberian village of Kobyai.

Orlov's release serves to remind us that there are many other Soviet prisoners of conscience who languish in the gulag. Earlier this year, Dr. Andrei Sakharov, a Nobel Peace laureate, sent a special appeal to Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev asking for the release of prisoners of conscience in the U.S.S.R. Sakharov, an outspoken advocate of human rights, was banished to the closed city of Gorky by Soviet authorities in 1980. In 1984, Dr. Bonner, a founding member of the Moscow Helsinki Group, was arrested, charged with anti-Soviet slander, and sentenced to 5 years internal exile. Together, they live in isolation, cutoff from contact with the West and under constant surveillance by the KGB.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I urge my colleagues to voice their concern over Soviet human rights violations. It is particularly important that, on the eve of the Reykjavik meeting and the opening of the Vienna CSCE followup meeting in early November, we demonstrate our continued concern for Soviet prisoners conscience and others denied basic human rights.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of Dr. Sakharov's appeal and a list of imprisoned Helsinki monitors be included in the RECORD at this time.

The appeal follows:

ANDREI SAKHAROV'S APPEAL FOR PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

PREFACE

On February 20, 1986, I sent a letter to General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev urging the release of prisoners of conscience. The return receipt indicates that it was received by the General Department of the Central Committee on March 3rd.

When I wrote the letter, I did not know that Anatoly Schcharansky had been freed. I was extremely glad to receive news of this humanitarian act. It shows that the worldwide release of prisoners of conscience is necessary and feasible.

Prisoners of conscience have, however, been excluded from all amnesties in the USSR, placing them on a par with criminals convicted for especially grave felonies. The recent amnesty, celebrating the 40th anniversary of the victory over Nazi Germany passed over prisoners of conscience who would otherwise have qualified as veterans or invalids of World War II. This illustrates the magnitude of the ideological barriers blocking the release of prisoners of conscience. But I still believe in the ultimate triumph of reason and justice!

I attach exceptional importance to the fate of political prisoners. Taking into account my earlier appeals to Mikhail Gorbachev, to the Chairman of the Supreme Soviet Andrei Gromyko, and to the Chairman of the KGB Vitaly Chebrikov, I consider it my right and duty to make my letter public and ask the press to print it, but not before September 3, 1986.[1]

ANDREI SAKHAROV,
Nobel Peace Laureate.

FEBRUARY 19, 1986.

DEAR MIKHAIL SERGEYEVICH: First of all, let me express my appreciation that my wife, Elena Bonner, received permission to travel abroad to visit her mother, children and grandchildren, and to obtain medical treatment. I assume that this permission, so important for us, was made possible by your personal intervention.

I hope that your intervention may help to resolve another problem which deeply concerns me. It is also humanitarian in nature, but it is more complicated, and it has broader, national significance.

I am referring to the fate of prisoners of conscience, the term adopted by Amnesty International to describe persons detained for their beliefs or for actions motivated by their beliefs, provided that they have not used or advocated violence. The term "prisoner of conscience" is thus more narrowly defined than the term "political prisoner."

In your interview published in L'Humanite on February 8, 1986, you asserted: "Now, about political prisoners, we don't have any. Likewise, our citizens are not prosecuted for their beliefs. We don't try people for their beliefs."

Mikhail Sergeyevich, it is true that the Criminal Codes of the Russian and other republics do not use the term "political prisoner". Articles 190-1, 70 and 142 of the RSFSR Criminal Code and the corresponding articles in the Codes of the other Soviet republics are not called political.[2] This may provide formal justification for saying that we don't have political prisoners, and that no one is prosecuted for his beliefs, but your advisors have misled you as to the real state of affairs. They may have done so unintentionally, influenced by their preconceptions. It is for you to decide whether this makes things any better.

Article 190-1 makes it an offense to circulate fabrications known to be false which defame the Soviet state or social system. A commentary on the criminal Code published by Yuridicheskaya literatura states that

[1] In a letter to Gorbachev written on June 29, 1985, Sakharov stated his "wish to cease public activities (apart, of course, from exceptional cases) and to concentrate on scientific work." Sakharov was then on an extended hunger strike seeking permission for his wife to go abroad for medical treatment.

[2] Article 190-1: The circulation of fabrications known to be false which defame the Soviet state or social system. Article 70: Anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda. Article 142: Violation of laws on separation of church and state and church and school.

"the circulation of fabrications . . . is not a crime under Article 190-1 if the person circulating them does not know them to be false." In all the cases with which I am familiar, however, the courts have completely ignored this issue posed by legal experts and common sense; they have avoided any discussion as to whether the defendant had knowingly circulated lies or had been expressing his or her sincere beliefs. In fact, the latter has been true. The absence of any proof of conscious intent is crucial under the law. It means that people have in reality been convicted in court for their beliefs.

My wife Elena Bonner is one victim of this illegitimate practice; I have written you in detail about her case.

The interpretion by the courts of Article 70 of the RSFSR Criminal Code is equally unjust. (This article is taken almost word-for-word from Stalin's Criminal Code. It was one of the points in the notorious article 58. . .)

In all the cases known to me, honest, selfless people have been convicted under Articles 70 and 190-1 for the circulation of information which they firmly believed to be true and which in most instances was in fact true. (The information included objective news about, unjust trials, psychiatric abuse and other repressions; the important right to choose freely one's place and country of residence, to leave any country and to return to one's own country; the persecution of religious believers; and—of particular importance—conditions in places of detention, which are often incompatible with human dignity.) Despite the diatribes in our press, their motives in the overwhelming majority of cases were honorable—they were striving for justice, for openness and for the rule of law. People do not sacrifice themselves because of greed or vanity, for base or insignificant aims!

Article 70 speaks of "agitation or propaganda carried on for the purpose of subverting or weakening the Soviet regime or of committing particular, especially dangerous crimes against the state, or the circulation for the same purpose of slanderous fabrications. . ." In the cases known to me no one convicted under Article 70 had or could have had the purpose of subverting or weakening the Soviet regime or of committing a crime against the state. The courts have never attempted to prove that Article 70 defendants had such intentions. In both Article 70 and Article 190-1 cases, the courts substitute the endless repetition of empty, ritualistic formulas for a discussion of real issues, and sometimes, as in my wife's case, they resort to outright forgery. That may be the reason that the defendant's right to an open trial has been violated in every single case known to me of prosecutions under these articles. The courts have been packed with specially selected audiences; friends and sometimes relatives of the defendants were kept out by police cordons, even when the judge pronounced the verdict. Wrongdoing shuns the light of day.

Trials under Articles 70 and 190-1 clearly constitute prosecution because of the defendants' beliefs.

That is also true of many prosecutions under Article 142. It is formally concerned with the separation of church and state, but it is often used to punish nonviolent religious activity.

I am greatly disturbed by the revival of the cruel and unjust practice of trying prisoners again and again while they are serving their sentences. Prisoners of conscience "resisting reeducation"—which means those who remain unbroken and defend their beliefs—can be tried using summary procedures and sentenced to new terms of imprisoment on the basis of inspired denunciations by their fellow convicts or charge directly initiated by the camp authorities.

I shall name a few of the prisoners of conscience known to me.

My friend, Anatoly Marchenko, has been sentenced under Article 70 to 10 years imprisonment and 5 years internal exile. (He was the victim of several prior unjust trials.) The main charge at his most recent trial involved his letter to the late Academician Petr Kapitsa asking him to protest my illegal exile to Gorky.[3]

(In regard to myself, let me simply repeat here that I consider the measures taken against me to be unjust and unlawful. I am ready to answer for my actions, like other prisoners of conscience, but I alone should bear the responsibility. It must not be shifted onto my wife or anyone else.)

Ivan Kovalev and his wife Tatiana Osipova, were convicted under Article 70 for public statements they made as members of the Moscow Helsinki Watch Group and as private individuals. The plight of this young couple, separated for many years, illustrates the illegality and cruelty of the persecution of prisoners of conscience. An affidavit about Kovalev issued by the camp authorities states that he was repeatedly confined in a punishment cell and subjected to other penalties because he did not change his beliefs. What idiots the camp overseers are! During Tanya Osipova's pretrial investigation, her interrogator threatened that she would not receive needed medical care and thus would never be able to bear children unless she cooperated and altered her beliefs. A year ago, Osipova was sentenced to an additonal two-year term after a camp trial.

Yuri Orlov, a corresponding member of the Armenian Academy of Sciences, Victor Nekipelov, a poet, and Anatoly Shcharansky are other convicted Helsinki Group members. Nekipelov had been previously sentenced for his poetry; a court ruled that it contained slanderous philosophical ideas. Nekipelov is an exceptionally decent, intelligent and compassionate person. Now he is seriously ill.

I want to make a particular point about the Shcharansky case. No one should object to the exposure and prosecution of spies—that is the job of the state security organs. However, the charge against Shcharansky that he gathered information about refuseniks for publication (!) in an American newspaper has nothing in common with espionage.

Tatiana Velikanova, Alexei Smirnov, and Yuri Shikhanovich were convicted for editing "A Chronicle of Current Events." (My friend Sergi Kovalev, a distinguished biologist and the father of Ivan Kovalev, served a ten-year sentence on the same charge.) Tatiana Velikanova exemplifies the best traits of prisoners of conscience: absolute integrity, a desire to act openly and devotion to justice. From 1968 until 1982 "A Chronicle of Current Events" published objective information on the human rights situation in the USSR without editorial comment. Its history is the embodiment of the ideals of many self-sacrificing individuals.

Sergei Khodorovich was tried for administering a fund which assists political prisoners and their families. The fund is supported by contributions of Soviet citizens and by royalties from Alexander Solzhenitsyn's books.

Smirnov and Khodorovich were severely battered during pretrial detention by prisoners who were assigned to their cells for that purpose. The beating continued for many days. I do not know if other prisoners of conscience have suffered similar torture.

Mustafa Dzhemilev has repeatedly been tried for his defense of the Crimean Tatars' right to return to their homeland.

Mart Niklus was sentenced to ten years labor camp and five years internal exile for Helsinki Watch Group activity in Estonia and for signing a collective letter demanding the repudiation of the secret articles of the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact. (Juri Kukk, who also signed the letter, died in a labor camp.) One has to meet Niklus, an ornithologist and a true scientist, an absolutely honest and sensitive person, to appreciate the full cruelty and injustice of his sentence.

Merab Kostava was sentenced to exile in 1978 for his attempts to preserve the cultural and historical heritage of the Georgian people. In contrast to his codefendant, Kostava refused to repent and was tried again on trumped up charges. I sent a telegram about this to Eduard Shevardnadze at the time. I do not want to condemn Kostava's codefendant; Shevardnadze disparaged him in a speech by saying that he was "not a chevalier." Every individual has his own problems and code of behavior in extreme situations. But Kostava, to borrow Shevardnadze's phrase, is certainly a chevalier and a true son of Georgia.

I know everyone on this list except for two individuals, and absolutely trustworthy friends know those two well. Even if there is no general amnesty for prisoners of conscience, I ask you to release all those named above. I vouch for the good character, civic responsibility, integrity and altruism of every one of them.

I do not have recent information on these cases. One or two may have been released by now, but I rather doubt it.[4]

Unquestionably, prosecution for one's beliefs or for actions motivated by them is a relatively rare occurrence now. There is no comparison with the deplorable Stalin era. I believe that the existence of prisoners of conscience in our country is a legacy of the intolerant, dogmatic ideas of those years, ideas that still affect the thinking and actions of some government officials.

I know personally some thirty prisoners of conscience. The figure of 200 prisoners, which you cited in another connection, probably is a significant portion of the total number. Additional prisoners of conscience are confined in prison psychiatric hospitals. Others have been convicted on fabricated criminal charges, such as hooliganism, resisting arrest, parasitism, and attempted rape. I suppose, however, that even with these additions, the number of prisoners of conscience is not very great, although I cannot supply exact figures.

[3] Marchenko is the author of "My Testimony," an account of the post-Stalin labor camps. On August 4, 1986, in a letter smuggled out of Chistopol Prison to the Vienna Conference, Marchenko announced a hunger strike demanding an end to the abuse of prisoners, punishment of the guards who banged his head on the cement floor of his cell, a visit with his wife, and an amnesty for all political prisoners. . His "Open Letter to Academician P. L. Kapitsa" was printed in On Sakharov, Knopf, New York, 1982, pp. 31-37.

[4] Anatoly Shcharansky was released in Berlin on February 11, 1986, in connection with an East-West spy swap. On September 30, 1986, Secretary of State Shultz announced that Yuri Orlov would be released from internal exile and allowed to depart the USSR by October 7; the release was arranged during discussions between Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze and Shultz about the case of Gennadi Zakharov.

There should not be any prisoners of conscience at all in a just society.

We can do little to affect the fate of prisoners of conscience in other countries, except through the example we set. We can, however, free our own prisoners of conscience. (Amnesty International works with some success on this problem in all countries.)

Release them and get rid of this painful issue. There are so few prisoners of conscience in relation to our population, but their release would have real humanitarian, moral, political and, I dare say, historical significance. It would substantially increase our country's prestige. It would make all international contacts easier. It would advance the openness of our society, international confidence and the cause of peace. It would gain the support of a significant part of the Soviet intelligentsia. It could change the psychological atmosphere in our country, and thereby open the way for a solution of the problems facing us. It would bring happiness at last to the prisoners' families after many years of undeserved suffering. And this wise, humanitarian act would certainly evoke a positive response throughout the world.

I ask you to take steps to secure the release from prisons, labor camps, and exile of all prisoners of conscience convicted under Articles 901-1, 70 and 142 of the RSFSR Criminal Code and the corresponding articles of other republics, as well as those confined in special psychiatric hospitals (their release would not depend on the complete absence of mental illness) and those convicted on trumped up criminal charges.

Mikhail Sergeyevich! I hope you will ask your assistants to acknowledge receipt of this letter and, if possible, let me know your reaction to my request. I assign exceptional importance to the fate of prisoners of conscience.

With respect and hope,

ANDREI SAKHAROV.

In a telephone conversation with his relatives in Newton on September 1, Dr. Sakharov stated that he had not received a reply to his letter. He asked that Viktoras Petkus, who was sentenced in July 1978 to ten years imprisonment and five years exile for his participation in the Lithuanian Helsinki Group, be added to his list of Article 70 prisoners of conscience.

Additional information on the prisoners mentioned in this letter is available from Cronid Lubarsky (Wolfratshauser Str. 68/III, Munich), who publishes the biweekly USSR News Brief and the annual List of Political Prisoners in the USSR.

ICELAND INTERIM SUMMIT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev will meet this weekend in Reykjavik, Iceland, to plan for their second summit. Some have written off this meeting as simply a political ploy to show that the President is serious about improving relations with the Soviets and making progress on arms control. I think this is neither a fair nor accurate characterization, particularly since it was Mr. Gorbachev who proposed this presummit session in the first place. The President accepted Mr. Gorbachev's invitation, noting that with so many grave and complex matters to be discussed, there is no such thing as too much preparation. I agree.

The Iceland meeting will serve to lay the groundwork for the second full summit scheduled for later this year or the early part of 1987. It will enable the two leaders to continue the process of dialog which was initiated at the Geneva Summit last November, and go into the second summit with a clearer idea of the issues we need to focus on. I sincerely believe these informal discussions will contribute to a more productive summit. If nothing else, getting the "niceties" out of the way this weekend will allow the President and the General Secretary to get down to business as soon as possible when they next meet.

The Soviet-American relationship is, by far, the most important and complex of the world's bilateral relationships. Today, it is at a turning point in history, for while there obviously remain many areas of serious conflict between the two superpowers, there are important areas in which negotiated agreements are imminent. For example, United States and Soviet arms negotiators are already very close to an agreement on intermediate range nuclear forces in Europe. We are on the brink of drastically reducing an entire class of modern nuclear weapons. There is also some promise for progress on issues such as chemical weapons and nuclear testing.

The Iceland meeting, therefore, comes at a critical time in negotiations on several key issues of vital concern to our Nation. While no agreements are anticipated at the Iceland meeting, the discussions that will take place can lead the way for agreements at the second summit, and I support any effort that will give this process an extra push. I wish the President well on his trip.●

ROY WILKENS

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, one of the great leaders of our time will be honored by the establishment of a community hall in East Chicago, IN, that will be named the Roy Wilkens/Freida Hawkins Center. The impetus behind this building is Eunice Roper-Allen who wanted the city of East Chicago to honor one of the Nation's finest citizens.

Roy Wilkens was born in St. Louis, MO, in 1901. He attended the University of Minnesota where he worked as the night editor of the school paper, editor of the local black newspaper and participated in both the NAACP and Urban League in St. Paul. He moved to Kansas City, MO, where he worked for the Kansas City Call. His outspoken campaigns against Jim Crow brought his efforts to the attention of Walter White, then Director of the National NAACP.

Roy Wilkens accepted a position with the national chapter of the NAACP and moved to New York in 1931. He served as assistant secretary, editor of the Crisis, and finally as executive director of the NAACP. He advocated progressive change through legal action and participated in every major civil rights achievement: working for the integration of the U.S. Army, organizing the historic march on Washington, lobbying for the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the 1965 Voting Rights Act, and the 1968 open housing legislation. Wilkens was among the first to comment on the need for action by the United States for the abolition of apartheid in South Africa.

Above all, Roy Wilkens believed in the United States, the Constitution and the effort to allow freedom and equality to exist for all Americans. He died on September 8, 1981. C. Delores Tucker, former secretary of state for Pennsylvania, stated it correctly, "Roy Wilkens, you have been our Rock of Ages—Our Rock of Roy."

INTERNATIONALISM—IS IT A FOREIGN POLICY ISSUE?

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, last summer, the Johnson Foundation sponsored a conference entitled "The United States and the United Nations." The U.S. role within the United Nations has been the subject of extensive debate in the Congress. I continue to believe that the United Nations offers an opportunity for international cooperation that would simply not exist without this organization. While we should continue to debate the U.S. role within the U.N. we should not be considering in any way leaving the U.N. or reducing our role within that body.

At the Johnson Foundation conference, one of the papers was presented by Prof. Lawrence S. Finkelstein of Northern Illinois University. Professor Finkelstein addresses the fundamental link between foreign policy and international cooperation, activity and participation in organizations like the U.N. His ideas are strong and persuasive.

I hope my colleagues will take the time to read this article and I ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD.

The article follows:

INTERNATIONALISM—IS IT A FOREIGN POLICY ISSUE?

(By Lawrence S. Finkelstein, Professor of Political Science, Northern Illinois University)

(Based on Final Address at Conference on The "United States and the United Nations" sponsored by the Johnson Foundation, the Wisconsin Universities Summer Seminar on the United Nations, the Wisconsin UN Association and Wisconsin Governor's Commission on the UN, Wingspread, Racine, Wisconsin, June 26, 1986.)

The important recent article by Thomas Hughes, (The Twilight of Internationalism Foreign Policy, Number 61, Winter 1985/86) illuminates a number of paradoxes in the evolution of American internationalism. The chief one is that the internationalism that carried the United States into cooperation with other countries across a broad front of issues and organizations after World War II differs diametrically from today's internationalism.

The old internationalism was optimistic about progress toward the American goals of peace through collective security (we had tamed the frontier—why not the world?), freedom and self-determination through the spread of the American dream, justice under the rule of law, prosperity driven by American genius and free enterprise, dignity and respect for human rights for all.

Today's internationalism is pessimistic on all those counts. Collective security has given way to reliance on national strength—not the posse but the Lone Ranger. Pursuit of justice under law has given way to self-serving certainty that we are the law. Human rights have been subordinated to short term tactical objectives of foreign policy. We are frightened about the results of our own success in pursuing the earlier goals. The generous vision of Harry Truman's Point Four has given way to aid predominantly geared to the aims of national security policy.

The deepest insight of Hughes' article though has to do with our maturity. The early internationalism was real enough. Joining the United Nations was a serious break with the isolationism which had dominated American belief until World War II. But it rested on the unreliable assumption that we could afford to join the world because the world was ours for the shaping. American internationalism was at root American. The world would be safe for America because we would make it over in our image. When that proved wrong, we found it difficult to adjust to the complexity which displaced our simplicities. Hughes says it this way: "internationalism practices the sin of complexity, i.e., the truth." He implies, and I agree, that we do not face the truth.

That is the international setting for our pursuit of American purposes is inescapably complex. In part, our environment responds to us. In part, it is hostile, although it is perhaps more neutral than we acknowledge. The United Nations mirrors the complexity. Emphasizing the complexity does not intend to obscure the fact that there are dangers. There are forces inimical to American interests. But we sometimes exaggerate them. And we prefer to ignore the extent to which our own behavior affects our environment.

The key question is whether we decide to "engage" with others—notice that I do not say "remain engaged"—or whether we pursue our separate path. That path is not "isolationist." Isolationism is not the issue. The issue is unilateral internationalism.

Before considering that issue as it affects our future, there are three points I wish to make about the past. Too often we forget that the past is part of our present and of our future too.

The first point emphasizes what I have already said—that in thinking we could shape the world we expected to dominate it. That was an unstated condition of our joining the world in 1945. For a while, we did in fact shape our world. We tend to think that was because we were militarily strong and economically powerful. We were strong and powerful. We like to forget though that we were also morally attractive. We led in directions most of the world could follow—toward peace, justice under a rule of law, prosperity, self-determination and human rights. Eleanor Roosevelt contributed as much to our leadership as did our armies, fleets, airforces and atomic bombs or, for that matter, our money. There was indeed an "American difference" during the era of our leadership.

Second, we believed too uncritically that what we thought right would prevail because we believed it right. We had trouble adjusting to adversity. The United States, we believed, had always prevailed and must continue to do so. (One reason the Vietnam experience hit us so hard was the difficulty we had reconciling the unmistakable evidence of defeat with our erroneous belief that we had always been victorious in war.)

We had trouble with compromise too. Obviously, if we were right, no compromise was possible. So, we would not suffer the constraints of multilateralism. From early in the postwar period, we chose unilateral alternatives. Some examples: the overturning of Mossadegh in 1952, support of the Guatemalan invasion in 1954, the insertion of American troops in Lebanon in 1957, involvement in a revolutionary plot in Indonesia in 1958, the Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961, the invasion of the Dominican Republic in 1965, the Vietnam War, the Mayaguez affair, and, now Grenada, Nicaragua, and Libya.

The strategic objective of a world order gave way to short term tactics of loss-avoidance.

The third point about the past is that we quit trying to lead relatively early because we would not risk contending with the adversity engendered by our success. We hoped for colonial revolution. When it came, we were frightened by the number of votes we could not control. I date this shift in the overall United States stance from the government decision in 1964—that long ago—that we could not afford to win the argument over compulsory financing of UN peacekeeping. Tom Hughes has this right. That was when the United States quit trying to lead. Thereafter, it concentrated on defending our bastion of beliefs, security, and material wealth.

Now, looking ahead, I have to synthesize in a few guidelines I offer hesitantly.

The first point is implicit in what I've already said. As a people, we tend to think there is a fresh dawn every day. In itself, that seems to me a desirable trait. All the same, it is arrogant to believe we can ignore the past. We believe there is discontinuity between the past and the future and that we can shape it. But the past counts, particularly our own. Part of our present and future dilemmas is of our own creation. We got ourselves into Vietnam, for example, and that is a good part of the burden we carry into the future. We'd do better to recognize that, though there are motes in many eyes, there's a beam in ours too. In a word, a touch of humility would help.

Second, we must recognize that our participation in multilateral organizations, the UN for example, is not a separate item on the foreign policy agenda. It is imbedded in our overall foreign policy. We cannot expect to succeed in organizing and maintaining support our purposes need if they are to prevail in the UN if, outside the UN, we behave in a fashion inconsistent with its norms and standards. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot both claim to be the most ardent champion of the Charter which, we correctly assert, we helped shape because it represented us, and simultaneously behave in ways which give the lie to our claims of virtue. Actions, our national leaders are wont to remind us when they refer to other countries, speak louder than words. The maxim applies to us too.

Third, there is also a close relation between what we seek internationally and what we are at home. I'll give one example, in some ways a minor one. United States policy about UN agency funding of population programs is a direct product of essentially religious fundamentalist convictions held at home. More broadly, what we are influences, perhaps determines, how we act internationally. It certainly affects how others view us. It matters in the world, in short, whether we are generous, humane and committed to letting government work for people at home or, to the contrary, driven by an ideological resentment of government. The latter inescapably puts us in a minority in the world. That others do not agree with us does not necessarily prove them wrong.

Fourth, even now, our government says it still sees many benefits in multilateralism. At the same time, however, it tends to reject what may be multilateralism's most important role. That is to serve as the forum in which shared problems are explored with the serious purpose of developing "consensual knowledge" as the basis for common action in pursuit of agreed solutions under accepted rules. The UN Charter calls on it to be "a center for harmonizing the actions of nations." That is a function to which the United States should pay more than lip service. We should welcome that role and seek to exploit it in the development of the "consensual knowledge" we need to deal with the problems that are not merely the world's but ours as well. There is no lack of evidence that the United States still has enormous leadership opportunities when it knows what it wants, develops sound policies and pursues effective tactics, above all showing "a decent respect to the opinion of mankind."

Fifth, we should recognize that intergovernmental organizations like the UN are political institutions. There are important differences, of course, between them and national governments. In many ways, however, they behave in ways which can be compared with how we conduct our political business at home. Who understands that business or can do better at it than we? International organizations, in other words, are not alien. Constitutionally, and in how they work, they mirror us.

Sixth, I want to emphasize one implication of what has preceded. Compromise, respect for the views and interests of others, is the indispensable oil of politics. Bargaining is its means. Let me give one very speculative example of what I mean. I tend to agree that, because international organizations consist of states which are not the same as the people on which national governments are based, the one member one vote system of many international organizations sometimes works badly. It is, I think, desirable to consider improving it. All agree that is a formidably difficult task to accomplish. Achieving change will require compromise to accommodate the varied interests that have to be satisfied. That is why the most promising idea for constitutional improvement involves a complex system for voting on budgets and perhaps other specified issues.

That system would require three concurrent majorities for passage of specified types of measures. One majority would respect the interest of the many smaller countries in preserving the system of sovereign equality of states. It would require a majority of the states voting. The second required majority would acknowledge the democratic principle and would count by populations. The third would accede to the demand of large, rich countries that they be protected against the "tyranny of the majority." It would require a majority weighted by financial measures. To complete the compromise package, the United States would have to commit itself to be "engaged" and play by the rules if the change should take effect.

Summing up is not difficult. These remarks reflect the conviction that we've entered a crucible period in America, comparable in many ways with the gestation time that produced the move of the United States from isolation to international commitment after World War II. As I've implied, the issues penetrate to the heart of the American being. What kind of country is this?

My plea is that we pay attention to restoring that "American difference" President Reagan refers to often but, as Hughes says, is succeeding in destroying. I hope, but do not predict, that candidates for national leadership in this country will be measured by that standard.●

BROADCAST JOURNALISM

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, broadcast journalism was born 66 years ago, on November 2, 1920, when radio station KDKA in Pittsburgh broadcast the Harding-Cox election returns.

Since that day, the contributions of broadcast journalists have become an integral part of our culture. Every day, millions of Americans learn of local, national, and world events through radio and television. Broadcast journalism allows us to hear news as it is being made. Broadcasting informs us of tragedy, warns of imminent dangers, and lets us share in great triumphs.

I ask my colleagues to join me in officially commending the men and women who, through their dedication and commitment to fair and accurate reporting of the news, permit the citizens of this country to live in a free and informed society.●

We will not be on any bill until about sometime after 11 o'clock.

It is the hope of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, and the ranking member, Senator CHILES, that they will have that bill before us by noon. So I think there will be some rollcall activity tomorrow.

DESIGNATING ROOM H-324 IN THE CAPITOL AS THE THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR. ROOM

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution (H. Res. 582) designating Room H-324, in the Capitol, as the Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. Room, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. RES. 582

Resolved, That room H-324 on the third floor of the House part of Capitol is hereby designated the Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. Room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support House Resolution 582, designating room

324 in the Capitol as the Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Room.

For nearly 34 years TIP O'NEILL has represented the Eighth Congressional District of Massachusetts. For the past 10 years he has served this Nation with distinction as the Speaker of the House. TIP has devoted 50 years of his life to public service, and all Americans recognize the many contributions and accomplishments he has made in that time. He has been, and he continues to be, a tireless champion for the voiceless in our society.

As he prepares to leave Washington and return to Massachusetts we hope that the coming years give him the time he deserves to enjoy the companionship of his family. I can think of no better way of honoring our beloved Speaker than by naming a room in this great Capitol Building after him, a room close to the Chamber he loved. Mr. Speaker, we will miss you, and we honor you today for all you have done, not only as Speaker of the House, but for your tireless work as a public servant.

Today's edition of the Washington Post contains a timely analysis of the 10 years that TIP O'NEILL has served as Speaker of the House. I would like to share with my colleagues the Post's editorial by inserting it at this point in the RECORD:

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Ten years ago, when Tip O'Neill was about to become speaker of the House, little was expected from him. The House, conventional wisdom had it, was a collection of committee chairmen's baronies, the backwater of American government, stymied by division and incapable of action. Assorted theories asserted that no House could make a significant difference and no speaker could be an effective leader.

Tip O'Neill and the House he has led have proved that convention wisdom wrong. Mr. O'Neill benefited from institutional changes, particularly the reform that made committee chairmen electable by and therefore accountable to the Democratic Caucus. But Mr. O'Neill's achievement owes much as well to intangible factors of character and political skill.

He began and he ends in politics as a man with convictions—not expressed in the abstractions of the academy or the acronyms of the policy analyst, and not always supported by detailed recitals of facts and figures. But no one now doubts the strength of his conviction that government has a duty to make the ordinary person's life better and to defend the United States without unnecessary bloodshed.

To those convictions he added the energy to put them into effect. For some years the position of speaker had been a reward to elderly House leaders, conferred well after their prime years. Mr. O'Neill, installed at age 63, kept in constant touch with other members, was available at daily press conferences, and presided from the podium and spoke from the floor of the House with a zest that has yet to wane. Always a partisan, he worked to weld the disparate Democratic Caucus together, and today House Democrats are more united on a wide range of issues—domestic issues, anyway—than they have been since the early days of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal.

Finally, Tip O'Neill has had superb political intuition. He has sensed when it is time to compromise in order to get half a loaf, and when it is better to hold out for the whole thing. That is not always a short-term calculation. Mr. O'Neill has been willing to risk defeat, and the public has seen him—after the 1981 budget fight, for example—bloodied and battered but ready to fight another day. He staked out the Social Security issue for House Democrats long before the 1982 election and left them free to run on their own in 1984. It is no accident that the number of House Democrats has gone up, not down, during the Reagan presidency.

Nor is it an accident that Tip O'Neill's rating in the polls has gone way up. He is known for saying "All politics is local," and his roots in North Cambridge, Mass., are deep. But partly because he stands for something and comes from a real place, he has been an effective national leader.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DESIGNATION OF THE THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR. ROOM

(Mr. WRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, little needs be said. A very few rooms in the Capitol on the House side have been officially designated by the House to honor individuals who are so much a part of our institution that their names will forever epitomize the heart and soul of the United States House of Representatives.

One of those people, clearly, is THOMAS P. "TIP" O'NEILL, JR. As long as free men and women live and serve in this Chamber—the most democratic, in the sense of a little "d," of all institutions of Government—the memory of THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR., will live and thrive and survive to inspire us and future generations of public servants.

Therefore, it seems appropriate to me, and I know all of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle will surely agree, that it is a fitting tribute for us this day to designate officially the room on the third floor of the House side of the Capitol as the Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. Room.

THE THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR., ROOM IN PERPETUITY

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, may I simply associate myself with the very appropriate remarks of the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

But not being privy to where the recesses of this Capitol all are, cubbyholes or ornate rooms and all the rest, might I inquire of the distinguished majority leader if this room, so appropriately named for THOMAS P. O'NEILL, is sufficiently large enough in size and befitting to accommodate what we normally expect for the Speaker of the House?

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, it is a spacious and gracious room, ample in its proportions, warm in its hospitality. It is on the third floor, just opposite the Visitors' Gallery, where the public may see it, and where a sign may forever proclaim it as the THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr. Room.

Mr. MICHEL. I definitely thank the gentleman for that explanation.

Might I assure the gentleman from Texas, and of course, the Speaker himself, that when that great day comes when we on the Republican side have a majority in this House, it shall remain the THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr. Room.

EXPRESSION OF GRATITUDE FROM THE SPEAKER

(Mr. O'NEILL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to tell all of you how grateful I am for having a room named after me in this building.

I have been one who through my years have always been opposed to people in public life naming anything after them until they are 10 years out of public office. My own city and various cities and towns in my district have often wanted to name a housing project or a playground or something of that nature, which I have opposed, but being here for 34 years I am extremely grateful.

As JIM offered the resolution, I thought of a story that we hear in politics at so many banquets when we are honoring some friends. You would say, "The city council of Cambridge today sent a telegram of congratulations, and it passed 14 to 13."

Looking at the gentleman from Georgia, I am very grateful the gentleman did not ask for a rollcall vote.

The room where the Democratic Whips meet is part of the whip organizational room. It is where on a Thursday morning I try to talk about a bipartisan spirit.

It is nice to have a room named after you in the Capitol. One of the most beautiful men I ever met in my life has a room named after him, Ernie Petinaud. Ernie was the maitre d' down at the restaurant and it is nice to join fine people like that. He is a beautiful individual.

To all of you, you know, it has been about 10 days that I have been trying to say goodbye. The party the other night was something I will always remember.

I know that when I bang the gavel for the last time I am going to have a few words to say, but this is the greatest body in the greatest Nation that God ever sent to the Earth.

Thank you.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mrs. Emery, one of his secretaries.

INSTRUCTING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 5445, CIVIL RICO (RACKETEER INFLUENCED CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS)

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be instructed to make corrections in the engrossment of the bill (H.R. 5445) to amend chapter 96 of title 18, United States Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). The Clerk will report the corrections.

The Clerk read as follows:

CORRECTIONS TO H.R. 5445

(1) In subsection (c)(1) proposed to be inserted in section 1964 of title 18, United States Code, by section 2 of the bill, redesignate subparagraphs (I) through (VII) as subparagraphs (A) through (G) respectively.

(2) In subsection (c)(1) proposed to be inserted in section 1964 of title 18, United States Code, by section 2 of the bill, strike out the subparagraph (II) which was redesignated as subparagraph (B) by the previous correction and insert in lieu thereof:

"(B) the degree of disparity in the bargaining positions of the plaintiff and defendant;

(3) At the end of paragraph (6) of subsection (c) proposed to be inserted in section 1964 of title 18, United States Code, by section 2 of the bill, inset a closing quotation mark followed by a period.

(4) Strike out paragraph (7) of subsection (c) proposed to be inserted in section 1964 of title 18, United States Code, by section 2 of the bill.

(5) In subsection (c)(1) proposed to be inserted in section 1964 of title 18, United States Code, by section 2 of the bill, strike out "to recover" and insert "and shall recover" in lieu thereof.

(6) In section 4(b), strike out "(2)(B)(ii)" each place it appears and insert "(2)(B)(i)" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BOUCHER [during the reading]. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the corrections be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. GEKAS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important that the gentleman from Virginia outline briefly for the record the sense of the technical corrections made to the bill that we recently passed in this Chamber.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield under his reservation?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would advise the gentleman and the Chair that these corrections are technically entirely. They merely conform the bill to the understanding of the parties at interest at the time that the bill was being considered. Most of them are merely changing references to paragraphs that were inappropriately referenced.

One does affect the question of provision of attorney's fees to prevailing counsel. It retains the current law that provides that attorney's fees to prevailing parties will be provided and retains the current language, which was the understanding of the parties at the time the bill was considered and passed.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed the contents of the proposed changes, the technical amendments, and find them to be acceptable as part and parcel of what we intended to do in the original bill.

I have talked with our respected leader, the gentleman from Illinois, who accedes to the technical amendments, so that this side is willing to cooperate in the unanimous-consent passage of these technical amendments.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 406, EXPRESSING SUPPORT FOR THE PRESIDENT IN HIS MEETING IN ICELAND

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 406) expressing support for President Reagan in his October 11-12 meeting with General Secretary Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object not because what the committee is attempting to do is not a proper thing. Obviously this House does want to wish the President the best in his trip to Iceland to meet with Secretary Gorbachev; but I am somewhat concerned about language that has been put into the resolution, because it seems to me that it is language that specifies certain things and conditions, while leaving out other things that many of us feel should be addressed in such a resolution.

If, for example, we are going to specify that the President should talk about grain agreements with the Soviets, we also, many of us, think that it might also be specified that he ought to talk about Afghanistan.

If we are going to talk about Helsinki, we think it might be specified that we ought to talk about captive nations.

We think it might be specified that we ought to talk about Soviet adventurism in our hemisphere and Soviet adventurism in Africa; and yet none of those things are specifically in this resolution. Most of the references of that type are indirect.

By specifying the grain agreements——

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana demands regular order.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, by specifying the grain agreements, I do have a couple questions for the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on regular order?

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Indiana preventing a discussion from taking place about a bill that is being brought to the floor by unanimous consent?

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman does not want to have a discussion of the important provisions of this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on regular order?

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

EXPLANATION OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 406, EXPRESSING SUPPORT FOR PRESIDENT IN HIS MEETING IN ICELAND

(Mr. FASCELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, the resolution that we were discussing a moment ago passed the Committee on Foreign Affairs unanimously. It is a very timely resolution, because it demonstrates the concern of Congress on all the issues that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was talking about, either directly or indirectly, It also shows the unanimity of Congress in expressing its support for the President as he goes to Reykjavik, Iceland for his meeting with General Secretary Gorbachev.

It does emphasize some of the problems brought up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania earlier and it does so by saying that we would hope that there would be concrete progress reached at the meeting in the areas of human rights, trade, bilateral relations, regional issues, and arms control.

I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we made a special effort on the request of Members on both sides to emphasize the importance of the Soviets fulfilling their commitment to buy grain from the United States, which they have refused to do. The committee felt it was important to emphasize the concern of Members on both sides of the aisle on that issue.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO].

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO HOUSE AMENDMENTS TO S. 2129, RISK RETENTION AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 2129) to facilitate the ability of organizations to establish risk retention groups, to facilitate the ability of such organizations to purchase liability insurance on a group basis, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment to the House amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to the House amendments, as follows:

Any district court of the United States may issue an order enjoining a risk retention group from soliciting or selling insurance, or operating, in any State (or in all States) or in any territory or possession of the United States upon a finding of such court that such group is in hazardous financial condition. Such order shall be binding on such group, its officers, agents, and employees, and on any other person acting in active concert with any such officer, agent, or employee, if such other person has actual notice of such order.".

(4) the causes of any financial difficulties of risk retention groups and purchasing groups;

(5) the extent to which risk retention groups and purchasing groups have been discriminated against under State laws, practices, and procedures contrary to the provisions and underlying policy of this Act and the Product Liability Risk Retention Act (as amended by this Act); and

(6) such other comments and conclusions as the Secretary deems relevant to assessment of the implementation of this Act.

SEC. 11. EFFECTIVE DATE; APPLICABILITY.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subject to subsection (b), this Act shall take effect on the date of its enactment.

(b) SPECIAL RULE REGARDING FEASIBILITY STUDY.—The provisions of section 3(d) of the Liability Risk Retention Act of 1986 (as added by section 5(b) of this Act), relating to the submission of a feasibility study, shall not apply with respect to any line or classification of liability insurance which—

(1) was defined in the Product Liability Risk Retention Act of 1981 before the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(2) was offered before such date of enactment by any risk retention group which has been chartered and operating for not less than 3 years before such date of enactment.

(c) RULE REGARDING POLLUTION LIABILITY.—

(1) Section 210 of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986 is amended by inserting "(a)" following "Pollution Liability Insurance" and adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a) of this section, the powers and authorities of States addressed by the Risk Retention Amendments of 1986 are in addition to those of this Act.".

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed, interpreted or applied to diminish the obligations of any person to establish or maintain evidence of financial responsibility or otherwise comply with any of the requirements of Federal environmental laws, including but not limited to the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 and the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

SEC. 12. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) IN THE SHORT TITLE.—Section 1 (15 U.S.C. 3901, note) is amended to read as follows:

SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the 'Liability Risk Retention Act of 1986'."

(b) IN SECTION 2(b).—Section 2(b) (15 U.S.C. 3901(b)) is amended by striking "product liability and product liability insurance" and inserting "liability, personal risk liability, and insurance".

(c) IN SECTION 3(a)(1)(C).—Section 3(a)(1)(C) (15 U.S.C. 3902(a)(1)(C)) is amended by striking "product liability or completed operations".

(d) IN SECTION 4(b).—Section 4(b) (15 U.S.C. 3903(b)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking "product liability or completed operations liability insurance, and comprehensive general liability insurance which includes either of these coverages," and inserting "liability insurance"; and

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking "product liability or completed operations insurance, and comprehensive general".

Mr. FLORIO (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do so in order to discuss the issue that the gentleman from Florida was given a chance to discuss.

I had hoped that we could have a discussion about the resolution that was being brought to us by the gentleman from Florida, so that I could at least clarify some points. It was rushed through the committee——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair intends to take 1-minute speeches, so the gentleman will have his opportunity.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, the Chair would not recognize me for a 1-minute speech immediately following the gentleman from Florida, so that we could have a discussion kind of in context about this thing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was honoring the Speaker's commitment to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO].

We will come back to 1-minutes after this.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The Chair will receive 1-minute speeches.

A PEACE SCARE

(Mr. JACOBS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to people making 1-minute speeches here, but people who waited in line for an hour or so it seems to me are entitled to go in the order in which they were waiting.

I simply wanted to say that the taxpayers of this country may be somewhat puzzled that at this late date our national administration still is doing all it can to prevent a mutually verifiable arms agreement with Russia. If you are puzzled about that, let me give you a hint. It is a peace scare. There is no money in arms control.

YUGOSLAVIA TURNS ITS BACK ON JUSTICE

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, Yugoslavia just made a mockery of justice in that country. Yesterday a Yugoslav judge sentenced a Michigan resident to 7 years in prison. Congressional appeals were ignored. Today Congressman FASCELL, Congressman YATRON, Congressman SOLOMON, and Congressman HERTEL and myself are introducing legislation which would suspend the most-favored-nation status of Yugoslavia.

After illegally detaining Mr. Pjeter Ivezaj, a naturalized American citizen, Yugoslav authorities put him in jail. While denying U.S. Embassy officers access to him, that young man was sentenced to a long prison term.

If that country continues to violate the rights of Mr. Ivezaj, and two other American citizens, why should that Government enjoy a special trade relationship with America?

Our bill would suspend most-favored-nation [MFN] status for that country. That special status would again be granted only if Yugoslavia releases Mr. Ivezaj and two other Americans.

Now is clearly the time to take a firm stand against the illegal imprisonment of innocent Americans. While I regret that this legislation is needed, Yugoslav officials appear not to understand America's concern about the violations of the rights of these innocent men. Now is the time for action.

Anyone interested in cosponsoring this bill should contact my office.

EXTOLLING ACHIEVEMENTS OF 1986 NEW YORK METS

(Mr. WALDON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to extol the achievements of the 1986 New York Mets.

We in New York have waited 13 long years for the opportunity to fly another championship pennant over Shea Stadium in Queens, and finally our time has come.

This season's record of 108 victories and only 54 losses tied an 11-year-old National League record of victories held by the 1975 Cincinnati Reds. This phenomenal statistic is a tribute to the entire Met organization. We must acknowledge the fine job that Frank Cashen has done in rebuilding this team since 1980 when he took over the helm as general manager.

We applaud Davey Johnson and the entire Met coaching staff for their outstanding leadership this season.

It is impossible to single out individual players for their accomplishment this season due to the depth and aggressive play of the entire team.

I commend the 1986 New York Mets on their memorable season and look forward to the return of the world championship to its rightful home, the Big Apple, New York.

Furthermore, to show my faith in the New York Mets in the National League championship series against the Houston Astros, I have wagered with my dear friend, Congressman MICKEY LELAND, from down Houston way, the best seafood dinner available in my district if the Astros should win. However, when the Mets win, he has promised me the best barbecue dinner in all of Houston, TX.

CHOPPING OFF THE TAIL OF THE DRAGON PIECEMEAL

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, the fundamental weakness of the Gramm-Rudman therapy for curing budget deficits is to be found in its failure to realize that you can't cut off the tail of the dragon by bits and pieces, because the dragon will destroy you between two such tail-trimming sessions. We are offered the choice between a huge budget deficit and a slightly trimmed budget deficit. The average citizen may perhaps be forgiven if he asks why in the name of heaven we don't have a choice between deficit and surplus.

The political economists in our Government—Keynesians and other supporters of a governmentally managed economy—are able to further the political and social revolution in behalf of such an economy chiefly because of the powers which the Government gained over the people when irredeemable fiat currency was thrust upon them in 1971.

Support by some or many of our so-called leaders of the use of irredeemable currency, of a governmentally managed economy, of continuing debasement of our dollar, of continuing budget deficits on a more moderate scale, and monetization of the national debt invovled the risk of ruining our money and this Nation, long before the Gramm-Rudman timetable runs out.

The great majority of influential leaders in this country, who profess to be advocates of private enterprise and human freedom and sound procedures by our Government, either do not understand this fact or do not face up to it. Instead, they utter futile words in opposition to big Government and either ride with the tide running toward a governmentally managed economy or unwittingly further this movement.

Keynes in his best days—before he became an advocate of a governmentally managed economy—made a penetrating statement in his book, The Economic Consequences of the Peace (Harcourt, Brace and Howe, New York, 1920), p. 236:

> The process of debauching the curreny engages all the hidden forces of economic law on the side of destruction, and does it in a manner which not one man in a million is able to diagnose.
> Perhaps it is historically true that no order of society ever perishes, save by its own hand. (Ibid., p. 238.)

Instead of trying to chop off the tail of the dragon piecemeal, we should go for its head, and chop it off with one stroke. This can be accomplished by fixing the gold content of the dollar, which would immediately eliminate the huge depreciation premium in the interest payments. It takes courage to attack the dragon head on, but we cannot shrink from the task of saving what Keynes called the order of society.

STAY IN SESSION TO OVERRIDE THREATENED VETO

(Mr. KOSTMAYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed the conference report reauthorizing Superfund, surely the environmental vote of 1986. A Presidential veto, however, threatens the program.

If we go home now, we may soon have to explain to our constituents not how we ensured their protection, but why we left the job undone.

If we go home now, the Superfund reauthorization may not become law.

If we go home now, Superfund may fall victim to Presidential neglect, halting hundreds of cleanups nationwide.

If we go home now, we may come back in January to a new Congress, an unwilling victim of a pocket veto which would destroy 3 years of hard work by two Chambers and half a dozen committees.

If we go home now, we may find ourselves not proud of what we have done, but ashamed of what we have left undone.

Despite two short-term funding measures, the failure to reauthorize the program has delayed planning or cleanup at more than 200 sites across the country. EPA has already notified Superfund contractors that they could be laid off in 30 days. This must not happen, Mr. Speaker. Stay in session, and when the Reagan veto comes, override it.

DO NOT USE CONTINUING RESOLUTION TO DIRECT FOREIGN POLICY

(Mr. KOLBE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, this is the ninth day of the 1987 fiscal year. We still have no appropriation bill or appropriation bills to run this Government. Oh, yes, we have passed two temporary continuing resolutions, one for 8 days, another for 2 days, and we are about to take up another one to run us for another 4 days.

Mr. Speaker, this is no way to run a railroad. This is no way to run the Government of the most powerful nation of the free world. We as an institution have failed dismally in our responsibility of passing appropriation bills, of adhering to the budget process and meeting the deadlines we establish for ourselves. We have failed to give fiscal direction to this Government.

If we cannot follow the established appropriation and budget process, at the very least I urge the leadership of this body and of this Congress to give us a continuing resolution to run this Government for the coming year, a continuing resolution that does not attempt to direct the foreign policy of the United States at this critical juncture of United States-Soviet relations. Let us not send our President off to Reykjavik with this cloud, this doubt, over our Nation's foreign policy.

Let us pass a continuing resolution that does what it is supposed to do—fund Government operations for this Nation for the coming year. Then let us leave this city; let us leave the 99th Congress; but let us leave with our head held high.

KEEPING SALT II CONSTRAINTS MAKES SENSE

(Mr. DICKS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan has said this week that the House of Representatives is trying to tie his hands on arms control issues before his dialog with Soviet Leader Gorbachev this weekend. This must be another vestige of the administration's disinformation campaign, because nothing could be further from the truth. The House is not tying his hands. We have made a series of proposals to the other body and to the administration that they have simply stonewalled. Rather, we are trying to send him over to Iceland and then on to the next Summit meeting in the best possible negotiation position. We are insisting that the policy the administration has followed since 1981—preserving the restraint of the SALT II treaty—should be maintained as we seek new and more substantial arms reduction agreements with the Soviet Union. Keeping SALT II constraints makes sense, both from a military perspective and because our allies and the American people believe that the United States should go the extra mile on exercising restraint on the arms race. The House has gone the extra mile. We are ready to compromise, Mr. President, but we are not ready to surrender our constitutional responsibilities.

HONEST ELECTIONS ARE A CIVIL RIGHT

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, for years political humorists have joked about Democratic Party vote stealing. From Tammany Hall to the Cook County, IL, machine to the Lyndon Johnson Senate race in Texas, voting theft by Democrats provided jokes for comedians. In Georgia, the Atlanta Journal won a Pulitzer Prize for articles on Democratic vote theft.

In recent years it has been estimated that 100,000 votes were stolen in Chicago in 1982. In Indiana a number of Democratic election officials have been indicted. In the last decade, two Democatic Congressmen from Louisiana have resigned under indictment, and one went to jail for stealing elections.

Recently, some Democrats have been defending the right of dead people to vote and of vacant lots to participate in elections.

Purging dead voters and departed voters is a key to honest elections. Some precincts in America are as dishonest as those we condemned Marcos for in the Philippines. Honest elections are a civil right, and the American people should demand honest elections.

NEW HOPE FOR DEMOCRACY IN TAIWAN

(Mr. TORRICELLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, behind the headlines, virtually out of sight, an old friend of America, a friend of new importance to America, is undergoing change. I speak of Taiwan, the Republic of China.

Last week a new political party, the Democratic Progressive Party, was formed. The ruling KMT responded with genuine restraint. On Wednesday, 37 years after its imposition, martial law was lifted. So, without violence, as we have seen in Korea, without the trauma of the Philippines, change is coming to Taiwan.

It is welcome. Taiwan, the people of China, deserve a democracy as great as the economic miracle that they represent. Now there is new hope that it will be realized.

SIGN THE PLEDGE TO OPPOSE A TAX INCREASE

(Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have joined many of my colleagues in pledging to the taxpayers of this Nation that I will oppose any effort to increase marginal tax rates for individuals and businesses from the rates established in the recently passed tax bill.

I am afraid that if we do not make this pledge, taxpayers will notice a rate creep and wonder whatever happened to that tax reform bill. If the positive effects of the tax bill are going to have any impact, the rates must be maintained at a constant level. If we want to reap the promise of economic growth and job creation from tax reform we must give it a chance to work.

Some Members of Congress are espousing the need for a tax increase. That is one reason I am signing this pledge. The one area that should not see a tax increase is the marginal tax rate for individuals. I cannot think of a more counterproductive move for our economy. With passage of the tax reform bill, taxpayers lost deductions and credits in exchange for lower rates. To increase the rates now would be a breach of faith.

I urge all my colleagues to sign this pledge so that taxpayers do not have to fear a tax increase.

TARGETING AREAS OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT FOR GOVERNMENT WORK

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, one of America's great injustices is that we have not targeted areas of high unemployment for Government work. I know there is some language in the rule such as labor surplus areas, but basically we never apply that particular language when it comes to awarding these contracts.

One of the companies in my district, General Fireproofing, is in line for a GSA award. They deal with metal furnishings. No one in America can produce these particular products any better, and if we are overlooked at this particular time it would be a shame for the people of my valley.

During World War II we met the surge of the industrial need, and now we are forgotten. General Fireproofing did not forget Youngstown, they did not move to the high tech areas. They stayed and they weathered the storm, and now Congress should be taking every measure to give these particular types of contracts to areas of high skill and high unemployment.

I am asking Congress to look at our labor surplus laws and put some teeth into them.

TOO MANY PRESIDENTS

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, we have witnessed many strange things during this Congress. Perhaps the strangest is the failure to do the job the Constitution assigns to the Congress and the attempt to do the job assigned to the President.

Given that the House leadership has not been able or willing to conclude appropriation legislation, it is outrageous that it seeks to run the foreign affairs of the Nation. We have a continuing resolution pending which legislates executive actions in arms control negotiations.

If these negotiations were so easy and straightforward, we wouldn't really need a President to set and execute foreign policy. The success of Congress in doing what it is required to do leaves no room for confidence in its ability to set policy in arms control or in other areas of foreign policy.

It is time to recognize that this Nation is badly served by having Congress assume the role of a foreign policy board. We owe it to the country to give the President some room to do his job in arms control and international affairs in general. Let us get a clean continuing resolution on the floor, do our job and let the President do his.

The safety and well being of the Nation must come before partisan politics. The President deserves the chance to negotiate in the dangerous waters of international arms control without the heckling of 435 little presidents. Give us a clean continuing resolution.

A BILL TO BAN SMOKING ON ALL DOMESTIC AIRLINE FLIGHTS

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, in an effort to improve the environment on board domestic airline flights, and protect the health and safety of the passengers and crew, today I am introducing legislation to ban smoking on all domestic airline flights.

The National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences recently completed an 18-month study at the request of Congress on the issue of air quality and safety in commercial airliner cabins.

The Council has called for a Federal ban on smoking on all domestic commercial airline flights to improve the health and safety of airline passengers and cabin crews.

The scientific panel concluded that both passengers and crew members were harmed by drifting smoke in aircraft cabins and that cigarette smoking posed a significant fire hazard on board as well.

Dr. C. Everett Koop, the Surgeon General of the United States, has repeatedly and forcefully pointed out the health hazards of passive smoking.

This bill will lessen irritation and discomfort to passengers, reduce potential health hazards to cabin crews, bring cabin air quality into line with standards established for other closed environments, and remove the possibility of fires caused by cigarettes.

With 28 percent of the American public taking at least one trip a year, and with some 70,000 flight attendants working long hours inside smoke-filled planes, the time has come to do away with smoke on board.

I ask my colleagues to join me in this comfort improving, health enhancing, and life-saving effort.

MANAGING FOREIGN POLICY

(Mr. ARMEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, noboby in this body will quarrel with the proposition that we should and indeed must address questions of foreign affairs and international relations. There are serious questions that must be addressed, and certainly questions that will be addressed by the President in Iceland, and we certainly are interested.

But the fact that we have elected to address these issues not through our constituted Foreign Affairs Committees where the research and the study and the hearings can be held, but through the continuing resolution, makes it very, very difficult not only for the President to negotiate in Iceland, but for us to complete our work here.

The American people are watching us go through a series of short-term 1- and 2-day continuing resolutions because we do not seem to be able to fund the 1987 budget. The reason we cannot do that is we have tried to legislate foreign affairs in appropriation bills and in continuing resolutions.

Our inability to adhere to our own rules in that regard has made it difficult not only for us to complete our business, but for the President to complete his.

INTEREST ON PASSBOOK SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

(Mr. ST GERMAIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I find it particularly disturbing that many banks across the country have begun to lower the fixed 5.5-percent interest rate they pay on passbook savings accounts. This is not what the Congress intended when it passed legislation designed to remove this interest rate cap and thus ensure that small savers be paid a market rate on their money.

For years, Federal law prevented banks from offering more than 5.5-percent interest on passbook savings accounts. In 1980, I was successful in pushing through a change in the law to authorize the phaseout of the unfair limitations on what consumers could be paid on their savings. This April, the phaseout became complete. Despite this, banks have been choosing to pay less than 5.5-percent interest. Indeed, some banks are offering as little as 4 percent.

Peanuts may be fine for elephants, but not for the consumer. The small saver deserves a fair return on his or her money. Recent figures show that Super-NOW accounts are offering 6.41 percent interest and U.S. savings bonds 7.02.

The Congress voted to phase out the ceilings on passbook savings accounts at the urging of small savers who could not meet the then stiff minimum balance requirements for higher yielding money market accounts.

Yet here we are in 1986 and small savers are no better off than they were in 1980.

There are a few bright spots, however. In my home State of Rhode Island, People's Trust Co. is offering 5.8 percent on its savings accounts, while Marquette Credit Union in Woonsocket is offering 6.8 percent. Across the country, others are following suit.

But more needs to be done. I urge all federally insured financial institutions to give consumers the best break possible on their passbook savings accounts. Otherwise, I have no qualms about urging these same consumers to move their estimated $327 billion in passbook savings accounts to other higher yielding accounts, no matter how much the banking industry "doth protest."

ON THE ROAD TO FREEDOM IN TAIWAN

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the President of the Republic of China, Chiang Ching-kuo announced yesterday that his government will soon end martial law on Taiwan. Earlier this year, the first opposition party, the Democratic Progressive Party, was granted permission to operate in Taiwan.

The end of martial law will mean the end of trials of civilians in military courts and the removal of some restrictions on personal freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, the fear of Communists and invasion by mainland China has evoked certain repressive practices in Taiwan over the last 40 years. President Chiang's decision to fight communism through greater freedom and democracy will prove to be the most powerful weapon available.

I applaud the judgment of the Taiwanese Government. Their decision is an example to other regimes to observe. Taiwan, and United States-Taiwan relations, will be the stronger for it.

DREIER AMENDMENT TO IMMIGRATION REFORM BILL

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, today we are going to begin consideration of the immigration reform bill. There is a very important amendment which I am going to be joining my colleague from California, Mr. MOORHEAD, in offering which makes this not only an immigration reform bill, but also an anti-drug bill and an anti-terrorism bill.

The amendment the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD] and I are going to be offering will bring about a 50-percent increase in the border patrol. Never before have we had a higher number of people flowing across our southern borders into the United States, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, it is very important that we pass this amendment, and I urge my colleagues to join us.

NEW RESEARCH ON CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS' FIRST LANDING

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, who has ever heard of Samana Cay—and what does it mean anyway?

To understand the remarkable feat of Christopher Columbus almost 500 years ago—it may mean a great deal.

Yesterday, on the eve of our Nation's annual observance and celebration of Columbus Day—the results of a 5-year investigation into Columbus' trip was released.

The main conclusion—Columbus did not land on Watling Island—later named San Salvador.

Instead he landed 65 miles to the south at Samana Cay.

This new research does not put into dispute that Columbus was the first person to discover the New World.

If anything, it serves to enhance Columbus and his 30-day, 3,000-mile mission of destiny.

In fact, the New York Times today said the new study serves as further proof that Columbus was an incredible seaman.

As we prepare to celebrate Columbus Day, 1986, let us ponder the extraordinary nature of Columbus' undertaking.

As we approach the 500th anniversary of this historic mission, let us reflect on the significance of Columbus to our Nation's history.

When we do—we will conclude that the issue is not so much where Columbus landed—as the fact that he did, and from the time he touched his foot on New World soil, the world was never the same.

PLEDGE NO TAX INCREASES ON AMERICAN'S SMALL BUSINESSES AND FAMILIES

(Mr. SWINDALL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the American family and the small businesses in America, and the budgets of the American family and those small businesses, I call on my colleagues to sign the no tax increase pledge.

Until the current administration took office, for nearly two decades the American family and small businesses were asked to yield to the Federal budget. For the last several years we have given those businesses and the American family renewed hope. We have told them that they can begin to spend more of their disposable income for their families, and to assure them the type of opportunities that America has always stood for.

Already, however, there is a clamor for a tax increase. What they are really saying is, "It's time for the Federal budget to take precedent once again over the family budget."

We have seen the President of the United States make a pledge of no tax increase, and in 1984, over 60 percent of the American people signed that no tax increase pledge with him.

I ask my colleagues to please give consideration to the fact that it was America's families and America's small businesses that made this country great. We cannot afford to penalize them by raising their taxes once again.

THE NO TAX INCREASE PLEDGE

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform my curious colleagues on the other side of the aisle that the administration's October surprise is under your noses. Yes; the President has managed to confound and surprise the skeptics, to the delight of the American people, by making good on his pledge in last year's State of the Union Address to work with Congress on a bipartisan tax reform bill that would be marked by fairness, growth, and lower rates. That historic and sweeping measure will be signed into law this month.

But, I would point out that the President also pledged in that message that "tax reform will not be * * * a tax increase in disguise." The tax bill keeps that pledge; but we will be violating it if we turn around next year, as some on the other side have proposed, and enact a tax increase. That would turn October's pleasant surprise into next year's big chill and future shock for American taxpayers. I urge my colleagues to sign the no tax increase pledge now and keep faith with your constituents.

WE SHOULD NOT TIE THE PRESIDENT'S HANDS IN ARMS CONTROL PRIOR TO THE MINI-SUMMIT

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, as we meet here this morning, the President is on his way to Iceland to meet with Secretary Gorbachev. I would urge that this House and the other body present a full continuing resolution with no arms control restrictions attached thereto. We should not tie the President's hands before the summit, and we should not, my colleagues, surrender the U.S. arms control bargaining position before the bargaining even begins.

OPPOSE ANY EFFORT TO INCREASE TAX RATES

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join CONNIE MACK and other colleagues in opposing any effort to increase tax rates.

On the surface, this is an economic issue. But it goes deeper than that. It is, in my view, a promise we in Congress have made to the American people, a promise we ought to keep.

Tax reform and tax rate reduction are not academic exercises—they are the very heart of a movement toward expanded freedom for all Americans, especially the most disadvantaged and the poor.

When we passed the tax reform bill, the Speaker, in remarks before the House, said that this tax reform bill was one of the most effective means of fighting poverty he had seen in a half dozen years.

With all respect, I would say it is the best antipoverty bill we have passed in a generation. So, we agree on the basic idea.

There was once a time when you could divide the economic issues from the social issues. But that time has long since passed.

Tax rate reduction and tax reform are indeed social issues as much as they are economic issues because they have an impact on every individual, every family.

That is why they are so important and we should do all we can to keep tax rates low.

HOUSE LEGISLATION GIVES SOVIETS MUCH OF WHAT THEY WISH TO ACHIEVE AT REYKJAVIK

(Mr. SHUMWAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand what the House hopes to accomplish by legislating to the benefit of the Soviet Union. Our version of the controversial and much heralded omnibus spending bill contains provisions which quite literally bestow upon the U.S.S.R. much of what that nation hopes to achieve at the negotiating table. We are proposing bans on nuclear testing, antisatellite weapons testing, and chemical weapons production, as well as SALT II compliance and a freeze on SDI funding. We are unilaterally granting to the U.S.S.R. concessions that they would be unlikely to win without giving something in return. What can we be thinking about? Our actions do nothing to serve the cause of national security; they do nothing to promote our image as a unified and strong nation in the Soviets' eyes, and they do nothing to secure mutual, verifiable, and equitable arms reduction.

The House is taking irresponsible action, action which has grave implications. Moreover, it is action which this body has absolutely no constitutional right to pursue. Now is the time for this Congress to present a unified front, standing squarely behind the President as he travels to meet with his Soviet counterpart.

TYING THE PRESIDENT'S HANDS?

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. President, you announced your summit while the House and Senate were trying to resolve our differences on arms control policy. Our reaction has been to say, "Yes, we want a summit. We will not tie your hands. We will postpone our meetings and wave to you in unison from the water's edge; but, Mr. President, we will not abandon our principles."

We have offered to put resolution of these arms control issues until after the summit, but the President has been unwilling to accept our offer. Why? Because this President does not really want a consensus on arms control. He wants a showdown. He wants to show the right wing of the Republican Party that he is still rough and tough in the aftermath of the Daniloff case.

That is why the President is playing partisan politics with the summit. That is why he is making no effort to forge a consensus in Washington before he gets on the plane for Iceland.

The Democrats would like to stand at the water's edge waving and wishing the President luck as he leaves for Iceland. The problem is, the Republicans are not waving; they are trying to push the Democratic heads under the water.

Mr. President, Democrats are not looking for a confrontation. It is you and your advisers. You are leaving us no other choice but to fight. We will not surrender our principles.

JUST WHO IS ENGAGING IN PARTISAN POLITICS HERE?

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, we just heard an exercise in some of the most partisan politics we have had on the floor. To come to the floor and suggest that the President is engaged in partisan politics when he attempts to have a firm negotiating position when he goes to face Secretary Gorbachev I think is somewhat disingenuous.

I think that what we need to have is a united country behind the President as he goes to negotiate and not the suggestion that at some point in the future that this House is going to demand that certain portions of the Soviet negotiating position be adopted unilaterally here rather than negotiated at summit conferences.

I would hope that the President of the United States would be given the backing of this House and to be given the backing of the American people as a whole to do what he thinks is in the best interests of the country as he negotiates with General Secretary Gorbachev.

To suggest that that is partisan politics I think is to suggest what should never be.

INSISTING ON ARMS CONTROL

(Mr. COLEMAN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is proper and indeed our duty as members of the Democratic Party to ask the President to continue to abide by the SALT II arms control treaty.

We do not seek to tie his hands at the upcoming summit in Iceland; in fact, we even offer to put off all consideration of any arms control issue until next March. Our request to adhere to SALT II should only be seen as a reminder to the President that continued adherence has been his own policy for the last 6 years.

SALT II is verifiable, and we do indeed possess the national technical means by which to monitor Soviet compliance with the treaty. It is this verification upon which the administration bases its statements that the Soviets are adhering to the numerical limits of the SALT II Treaty but possibly violating some of its subsections.

Mr. Speaker, we wish our President well. We as a nation can only have one voice to represent us at the Iceland summit, and I find myself in disagreement with those on the far right who complain that the President should not even be discussing arms control with the Soviet Union. We do not wish to tie his hands. We wish him well, we wish him success, and we wish him Godspeed in the effort to end the spiraling nuclear arms race.

CONSIDERING A NEW RULE ON THE IMMIGRATION BILL

(Mr. SHAW asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, in a few moments we will begin debate again on a rule which will bring the immigration bill here to the floor of the House. I, along with a majority of the Members of this House opposed the last rule, the last time it came out because it was a, what we considered an unfair rule; it was a gag rule, and one that did not deserve the majority support of this House.

However, there have been a great deal of negotiations going on between members of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO] and other Members of the House; and for the first time, they have brought together a rule that I think is acceptable and one that we should go forward with.

I urge all Members to look hard at what we have. The alternative is to do nothing. Pass the rule so we can get on with some meaningful immigration reform in this country.

LET'S UNTIE THE PRESIDENT'S HANDS

(Mr. SENSENBRENNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] has stated that we should do what we have already negotiated and abide by the SALT II Treaty. I would remind the gentleman from Texas that the SALT II Treaty was never ratified by the U.S. Senate, in 1980, a U.S. Senate that was controlled by the party of the gentleman from Texas rather than the party of President Reagan.

Furthermore, the provisions of the SALT II Treaty had expiration times, and the entire SALT II Treaty, even if it had been ratified, would have expired by now.

There is no reason on Earth why the President of the United States, who represents everyone in this country, Republicans, Democrats, and independents alike, should have to negotiate with the House of Representatives at the same time he is negotiating with General Secretary Gorbachev.

Let us untie the President's hands, let him do the right thing. He has been supported by the people of this country and he should be given a chance to fulfill that trust.

THE PLIGHT OF CUBAN POLITICAL PRISONERS

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, today we are once again scheduled to take up consideration of H.R. 3810, the immigration bill. I believe that immigration reform is essential—as we all know, it is also very controversial. Negotiations on the more controversial aspects of this bill have been successfully completed, and we will see action on this bill. As an active participant in the ongoing debate over immigration reform, I have consistently attempted to focus attention on several aspects of illegal immigration which have been consistently overlooked. Two of my amendments have been incorporated into the text of the bill which we are considering today. Both of these amendments address important issues in immigration reform.

The first amendment exempts Cuban political prisoners from certain visa restrictions. Presently the INS will not give visas to individuals who are trying to enter this country from a third country. Thus Cuban political prisoners who have successfully left Cuba and made it to another country such as Panama or Mexico are denied visas to enter this country. This action effectively turns these individuals back over to Castro—they have left Cuba with the goal of achieving freedom in this country—and then they are denied that freedom. The policy of this administration, designed purportedly to punish Castro backfires and the people who suffer are the Cuban political prisoners who so desperately need our help. My amendment, as part of the text of this bill, will no longer allow the INS to deny these Cuban political prisoners entrance into the United States from third countries. I believe that this measure is a clear signal to this administration that they must take clear and decisive action to assist Cuban political prisoners obtain the freedom they so desire.

My second amendment incorporated into the text of this bill is designed to stimulate border revitalization. It authorizes the President to negotiate with the Government of Mexico for the establishment of a free trade and coproduction zone in the United States-Mexico borderlands. A major reason we have such a problem with illegal immigration into this country is because of the dire economic circumstances being experienced in other countries. The problem is particularly acute in the United Statesd-Mexico border region, with adverse consequences for residents of both sides of the border. The purpose of this amendment is to stimulate production in the region on both sides of the border. A revitalized border zone would have several benefits—by stimulating the economy in the region it would provide jobs for Americans on the American side of the border—at the same time, by giving the economy on the Mexican side of the border a boost, it would help to halt the tide of illegal immigrants coming across the border in search of economic opportunity.

I believe that immigration reform is of the utmost importance—stemming the tide of illegal immigrants into this country is vital. My amendments address several important aspects of this bill—I urge my colleagues' support for them.

REMOVE ARMS CONTROL LANGUAGE FROM THE CONTINUING RESOLUTION

(Mr. BILIRAKIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I know we have all slept soundly knowing that the management of the arms control negotiations was in the hands of the right people: All 435 of them!

It occurs to me that the President, upon successful completion of his meetings with Secretary Gorbachev in Iceland, should then arrange a summit with those Members of the House who seek to tie his hands as he sits at the negotiating table.

There is no place in the continuing resolution for arms control language. The majority should realize this and allow the President and his negotiators to continue the business of effective arms control. The House of Representatives does nothing more than present an appearance of discord before the Soviets, who naturally will have no need to concede in negotiations what we, the U.S. House of Representatives, will give to them. Remove the arms control language from the continuing resolution and restore a united front when the President meets with the Soviets.

LET PRESIDENT REAGAN NEGOTIATE FROM A POSITION OF STRENGTH

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, some who have been watching the 1-minutes may wonder now just what is everybody talking about? I think it might be wise to spread upon the RECORD the five principal positions of the Democratic Party with respect to negotiating arms reduction.

The argument today in the 1-minutes is all about a nuclear testing moratorium, adherence to a nonratified SALT II Treaty on the sublimits, which is selective, fiscal restrictions on SDI, a moratorium on antisatellite testing systems, and a ban on chemical weapons.

I think it is very clear that this President, neither in Iceland nor when the summit comes to the United States in March or April of next year, should not be in a position to have announced in the newspapers unilateral concessions and therefore be unable to negotiate an arms control package by getting a quid pro quo, getting concessions from the Soviets.

The Democrats would ask us to negotiate after we have made the concessions. I think the American people want us to negotiate from a position of strength and get concessions from the Soviets in return for ours at the bargaining table.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY SHOULD LEAVE OUR SHORES WITH ONE VOICE

(Mr. HUNTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I think my colleagues who preceded me have made it clear that American foreign policy should leave our shores with one voice, and this House has passed a resolution to the effect that we should abide by SALT II even though we agree that the Soviets are substantially violating SALT II in encrypting telemetry and building the SS-25.

I would say simply that the attempt by Democrats to inject themselves into the arms control process as adversaries to the President of the United States is unprecedented in American history and it does a disservice to national defense.

EXPRESSING SUPPORT FOR PRESIDENT REAGAN IN HIS MEETING IN ICELAND

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 406) expressing support for President Reagan in his October 11-12 meeting with General Secretary Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I offer my support of the resolution before us which encourages the President's efforts in meeting with the Soviet leader in Iceland. By any standard, this upcoming meeting is a step in the right direction.

As we all know, the President and Mr. Gorbachev will meet this weekend in Iceland for discussions that have been called a "base camp meeting" on the way to the summit.

While numerous issues will be discussed at the meeting, I strongly believe that significant progress must be made in the area of human rights. I am convinced that our President wants concrete progress to be made in this vital area.

Improving relations between the United States and the Soviet Union can only be undertaken if a broad spectrum of issues are addressed. The Iceland discussions must not focus solely on arms control.

Human rights is important. They matter to all of us. This country was founded on the principle that the individual human being does count. We cannot ignore this basic American value during the upcoming talks.

I wish the President well in his meeting in Iceland and commend him for his efforts to move forward along the road to improving relations with the Soviet Union.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I have reserved the right to object in order to afford an opportunity for a colloquy between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. FASCELL. I say to the gentleman if he would yield, I would be happy to respond.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, now that we have some of the impatient people off the floor, maybe we can get a discussion as to what is in the resolution and see whether we can resolve some of my problems with the language as I see it. As I stated earlier, I am concerned about the fact that we do not specifically reference the problems in Afghanistan, the problems in Central America, the problems in Africa.

Is it my understanding that by raising the point about regional issues, it was the intent of the committee to include such matters as that in the resolution?

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Absolutely. In paragraph A, where we talk about all of the matters, including regional issues, we are talking specifically about Afghanistan, Ethiopia, Angola, Nicaragua, all of the regional issues that are of importance between our bilateral relations, which is what the President is going to raise anyway. What we are saying here is, "Mr. President, we are behind that concept, absolutely."

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will remember, I also raised the question specifically of the captive nations of eastern Europe, which is not specifically referenced in the resolution. Is it my understanding that the language that suggests fulfilling the obligations undertaken in the signing of the Helsinki Final Act is meant to refer specifically to the captive nations problem?

Mr. FASCELL. Very definitely, of course, the whole Helsinki process. We are concerned with keeping the heat on all of those countries to abide by those commitments.

Mr. WALKER. I am also concerned, as I stated earlier, about the language in it that seems to specify or to make specific a request with regard to grain agreements. I would just like to clarify, if I could, that we are not in some way begging or groveling to the Soviets here to buy our grain but, rather, we are seeking to implement agreements already reached with them and that, indeed, this does not anticipate a grain sale at a cost to the taxpayers and contemplates that such grain sales would be for hard currency; is that the intent of the resolution?

Mr. FASCELL. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. WALKER. So, we are talking about unsubsidized sales and we are also talking about sales for hard currencies under the agreement specified in the resolution.

Mr. FASCELL. Well, what we are talking about is insisting with the Soviets that they live up to the 1983 long-term agreement on the purchase of grain and that it be for hard currency, which is what the agreement provides.

I will say to the gentleman the question of price is negotiated by the administration and the Soviet Union.

I certainly would hope that the one offer that we made will never be made again, and that is to deal at a subsidized level because the world price is certainly good enough.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for that statement because I certainly agree with him on that. I think that was a mistake on the part of this Nation, and it was in hopes of clarifying that point that I raised the question.

With that legislative history with regard to the resolution, I see no problem with it.

I thank the gentleman very much for yielding.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the House resolution endorsing President Reagan in his October 11-12 meeting with General Secretary Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland. I want to thank the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], for bringing this resolution to the floor in such a timely manner.

Mr. Speaker, frank communication between the United States and the Soviet Union is vital as the United States seeks to advance the cause of human rights, to achieve human rights, to achieve mutual and verifiable arms control agreements, and to promote freedom and democracy throughout the world.

The prayers and hopes of millions of Americans go with the President as he leaves for Iceland. We want him to be open to all new suggestions, yet firm in his defense of our values and interests. We support President Reagan in his efforts to achieve meaningful progress in the areas of human rights, trade, bilateral relations, regional issues, and mutual and verifiable arms control agreements.

Among other issues, it is essential that the President insist that the Soviet Union fulfill certain vital commitments that it has made. In this resolution, we urge the President to enforce the Soviet Union's pledge to purchase 9 to 12 million metric tons of wheat from the United States annually in accordance with the 1983 long-term grain agreement. Even more importantly, we urge the President to insist that the Soviet Union fulfill the commitment made in Geneva by General Secretary Gorbachev to come to the United States for a full-scale summit meeting.

The most important thing for all of us to bear in mind is that the United States truly wants peace and will make every effort to achieve peace at the meeting in Reykjavik and thereafter.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join me in support of the House resolution endorsing President Reagan in the October 11–12 meeting with General Secretary Gorbachev in Iceland.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I rise under this reservation to point out that we are endorsing a resolution felicitating and wishing well a President that up until yesterday is telling the Nation and the world that he is going to this conference with his hands tied behind him by the Democratic Members of the Congress. I have heard no withdrawal of that attack on those of us that happen to be Democratic Members of the House. So, I want to ask the gentleman, the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if he has any knowledge that the President has retracted this statement? Sunday on the front page of the Washington Post we had our distinguished majority leader telling the President that the Democrats were certainly not tying his hands, offering the olive branch, only to have the President use the olive branch as a club over every one of our collective Democratic heads in the Congress. I cannot see how I can in good faith wish the President well under those circumstances on the eve of a November election in which he knows he is doing his best to have every Democratic candidate defeated. I do not think it is fair to those of us who proudly proclaim our membership as standard bearers of the Democratic Party.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand the gentleman's frustration. I cannot do much about what time of the year it is. We go through this all the time. The gentleman and I know that the President's hands are not tied. We also know that the legislation that is pending has so many loopholes in it with respect to the President's ability that even if it became law, which it is not now, it is just a matter of discussion in the Congress between the parties and between the other body and this body. We have not concluded anything. And even that would not tie hands. So, I will say to the gentleman that as one of those people who is really the salt of the Earth and has great faith in the American people that I would continue, if I were him, to rely on the common sense of the American people to make the right decisions in November. I am certain they will in the gentleman's case, I know that for sure, and I am sure they will do that in other cases.

Puffery, or a slight amount of exaggeration or the use of fear, hyperbole, is not to be unexpected. I will fight, along with the gentleman, for our Democratic principles as hard as anybody else and as hard as the gentleman does, but I see nothing wrong in congratulating or extending our best wishes, if you will, to the President of the United States as he goes off to a very important meeting. He may resolve some of these issues that we are talking about on which he says his hands are tied. We know his hands are not tied. I wish him well. I know you do. And if he comes back with an agreement, we will have an opportunity to examine it. But that is the purpose of the presummit.

And I do not see anything wrong with urging the President to insist on raising all of these issues which we have here with our adversary.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Let me say I believe in SALT, whether it is the salt of the Earth, but what I do not believe in accepting is sulfuric acid poured over my head in the name of negotiations.

Mr. FASCELL. If the gentleman will yield, I do not blame him. It is politics. The place to resolve that is——

Mr. GONZALEZ. I ask the gentleman again, does he have any knowledge?

Mr. FASCELL. No.

Mr. GONZALEZ. That the President has ameliorated?

Mr. FASCELL. No; I do not.

Mr. GONZALEZ. What I am telling the gentleman is that we have a Commander-in-Chief who has the tendency to blame everybody else for his failures. If he comes back and is denounced or exposed in the world press as having failed, he will say, "Well, I went there with my hands tied back by the congressional Democrats."

Mr. FASCELL. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I am saying I do not think we ought to accept that. I do not think we ought to sit here and with impugnity, abjectly say, "Mr. President, even though you are vituperating all over our heads, we wish you well." You know, the gentleman really ought to know that some of us do have a little bit of dignity and pride based on the fact that we proudly proclaim ourselves Democratic Party Members of the House of Representatives.

□ 1130

And I do not think that we ought to take these charges from the Chief Executive of the Nation without some kind of protest. I do not see myself having any good will in subscribing to this resolution. And since I do not have a chance to vote on it. I must object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Objection is heard.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve the right to object?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I do so at the request and in obedience to the majority leader.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the distinguished majority leader, Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I fully understand the feeling expressed by my friend from Texas. It is a feeling shared by a great many people here.

Obviously; it is unfair for any President to seek to characterize members of the other political party as tying his hands or as giving to the Soviet Union that which they could not gain through bargaining. Obviously, that is not an accurate description under any circumstances of what has happened.

Let me suggest to my dear friend, the gentleman from Texas, that there come certain times in the history of a country when those of us who may feel that we have been grieviously wronged, nevertheless in the transcendent interest of peace on Earth and in our national interest will rise above those otherwise legitimate considerations. In an effort to demonstrate to the world that we are one Nation and, under this Constitution, only one person can speak for us in the councils of the world, may we show that we go the second mile, that we turn the other cheek, and that we wish him well in his efforts to bring about a reduction in the tensions that beset this Earth of ours. If that means that we swallow hard and accept a certain amount of unfair criticism, then let us demonstrate a willingness to do that in the interest that transcends any petty partisan consideration, so that we give support in this overriding effort to this man who does represent our hopes for reducing the tensions of the world and our hopes for creating some opportunity to reduce these terrible burdens that both countries bear in trying to pay for an ever-increasing arms race.

Let us say, "Mr. President, we wish you well." It does not cost us anything to say that, and we do wish him success in these negotiations. I know the gentleman from San Antonio wishes him success in the negotiations, even notwithstanding the harshly partisan things Mr. Reagan may have unfairly said that would reflect unkindly upon the gentleman's party and my political party.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I have always resented very much somebody coming over and pouring a bucketful of manure, and then trying to tell me that it is talcum powder. And this is what we have let our illustrious President get away with time and time again with absolutely no comment on the part of those who are being accused falsely, maliciously, predeterminately, calculatingly, coldly, and with malice of forethought.

But out of reluctant obedience to the distinguished fellow Texan, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I think the gentleman has demonstrated the greatness of his spirit and the real bigness of his heart.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, if I might continue, I do not plead guilty to that amount of graciousness.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

This resolution was adopted unanimously this morning by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It expresses the Congress' support for President Reagan in his Reykjavik summit this weekend with General Secretary Gorbachev and the hope that the meeting will result in concrete progress in the areas of human rights, trade, bilateral relations, regional issues and arms control.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that the Soviet leader be aware of the Congress' continuing concern about the Soviet refusal to abide by its international human rights commitments such as the 1975 Helsinki Final Act. President Reagan has announced his intention to raise this issue with General Secretary Gorbachev in Iceland. This resolution bolsters the President's efforts in that regard and puts the Soviet Union on notice that the Congress and the American people want and expect concrete results in this crucial area.

Similarly, this resolution expresses the Congress' concern about the Soviet Union's failure to honor its obligations under the 1983 Long-term Grain Agreement by purchasing 9 to 12 million metric tons of grain from the United States annually. Between September 30, 1985 and September 30, 1986, the U.S.S.R. purchased only 4 percent of the wheat it was obligated to purchase. The Soviet failure to purchase this grain has contributed to the 29-percent decrease in the volume of U.S. wheat exports over the last year. This resolution urges the President to insist that the U.S.S.R. honor its bilateral agreements in this important field.

Last, the resolution urges President Reagan to insist that General Secretary Gorbachev fulfill his pledge to come to the United States for a summit later this year or early next. It is important that the Soviet leader know that the American people are expecting him to live up to the commitment he made in Geneva to visit the United States in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that at least some agreements are possible, even at the so-called presummit summit.

I hope we will see something on INF and nuclear testing, even if they are only interim agreements. Certainly some steps—like an agreement to establish risk reduction centers—could be taken at Reykjavik.

In the trade area, perhaps we will see an agreement for the Soviets to purchase the grain they had already promised to buy. While I am concerned about the whole idea of providing American taxpayer subsidies to Soviet housewives, we ought to at least insist—and expect—that the Soviets live up to their agreements. Lord knows, our farmers expect it and they badly need help.

On human rights, I hope we will see more than rhetoric or tokenism. No one was happier than I was to see Helsinki Monitors Anatoly Shcharansky and Yuri Orlov allowed to go free. We must remember, however, that Andrei Sakharov and his wife are still in internal exile, that there are hundreds of thousands of Jews who wish to emigrate, Christians who want to practice their faith, Americans who want only to live together with their Soviet spouses and relatives, human rights activists who want simply to have the Soviet Union live up to its commitments under principle seven and basket three of the Helsinki accords. Promises are not enough—we've had promises since 1975 when we all signed the Helsinki Final Act. What we need now are deeds—like for instance, several thousand rather than several hundred Jews allowed to emigrate during the months ahead, the release of the other imprisoned Helsinki monitors, the reunification of families and the restoration of Dr. Sakharov's and Ms. Bonner's civil and political rights.

There are some who believe that Mr. Gorbachev didn't want to come to America because he didn't want the world to see the demonstrations for human rights that were planned during his visit. I hope that Reykjavik is not a substitute for a summit meeting in the United States. Once again, Mr. Gorbachev made a commitment to come to the United States before the end of 1986. I hope we aren't letting him get out of that commitment. I'm sure we won't see any large demonstrations in Iceland. There will be very few dissidents—or demonstrators—or, for that matter, democrats—in Iceland. The least we can expect is to see a fixed date for an American summit—either this year, as originally promised, or early next year.

And, of course, we hope we won't see an agreement that allows certain highlevel KGB operatives to stay in New York at the Soviet Mission to the United Nations. The President should make it clear that the KGB is not welcome and will be dealt with firmly and swiftly when they spy in America.

We all hope that we will see some progress on the main issues of arms control. At least we should expect to see a conceptual framework and firm instructions for our negotiators to move toward success in Geneva.

I would hope that the same kind of conceptual framework for the resolution of regional issues like Afghanistan, Angola, and Nicaragua might be worked out.

What this resolution says—basically—is "stick to your guns, Mr. President, and we will all support you."

I urge the unanimous adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 406

Whereas a stable relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union is vital to world peace and the security of the United States and its allies; and

Whereas frank communication between the United States and the Soviet Union is essential as the United States seeks to advance the cause of human rights, to promote freedom and democracy throughout the world, and to achieve mutual and verifiable arms control agreements: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That

(a) The Congress supports President Reagan in his efforts to achieve meaningful results in his October 11-12 meeting with General Secretary Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland, and expresses the hope that concrete progress in the areas of human rights, trade, bilateral relations, regional issues and mutual and verifiable arms control agreements will result from this meeting.

(b) The House of Representatives urges the President to insist that the Soviet Union fulfill the obligations it undertook in signing the Helsinki Final Act, particularly the provisions on human rights and humanitarian cooperation.

(c) The House of Representatives urges the President to insist that the Soviet Union fulfill its commitment to purchase 9-12 million metric tons of grain, including 4 million tons of wheat, from the United States annually in accordance with the 1983 long-term grain agreement.

(d) The House of Representatives urges the President to insist that the Soviet Union fulfill the pledge General Secretary Gorbachev made in Geneva to come to the United States.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT THE SOVIET UNION SHOULD IMMEDIATELY PROVIDE FOR EMIGRATION OF NAUM MEIMAN AND INNA KITROSSKAYA-MEIMAN

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 404) expressing the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union should immediately provide for the emigration of Naum Meiman and Inna Kitrosskaya-Meiman and for the resolution of all divided family and emigration cases, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for too long the Soviet Union has flaunted its noncompliance with its international commitments on human rights. I support this resolution which expresses the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union should live up to these solemn obligations, and in particular, in several serious and specifically enumerated cases.

This legislation calls for immediate approval by the Soviet Government of the exit visa applications of Dr. and Mrs. Meiman. There is no justification for the continued harrassment of this respected couple.

Moreover, I am very familiar with the serious problem of divided spouses. I have personally worked with representatives of the divided spouses coalition in their efforts to be reunited with spouses who have been refused permission to emigrate from the Soviet Union. This resolution emphasizes our strong desire to see the Soviet Union cease its inhumane threatment and separation of a number of spouses.

Therefore, I strongly urge my colleagues to approve this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the resolution before the House, and would especially like to commend the distinguished chairman of our Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. FASCELL] and our ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] and the district chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] for their leadership in moving this bill to the floor just prior to President Reagan and Secretary of State Shultz' departure for Iceland tomorrow.

House Concurrent Resolution 404 expresses the sense of Congress that the Soviet Union should immediately provide for the emigration of Dr. Naum Meiman and his extremely ill wife, Dr. Irina Kitrosskaya-Meiman. This measure also reiterates its strong faith and support of the Helsinki Final Act and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as the precepts of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights. Additionally, this bill urges the resolution of the many divided family and emigration cases which have been the subject of so many efforts by Members of Congress.

Dr. Naum Meiman and his wife Inna, have been refuseniks for many years. In the past few years, however, their situation has worsened dramatically. Mrs. Meiman continues to suffer from a particular type of cancer that is nontreatable in the Soviet Union. She has undergone several operations to remove the tumors at the back of her neck, and so much tissue has been removed that she can barely hold her head up. Soviet doctors do not have any other treatment they can give her, yet emigration officials refuse to allow her and her husband to leave in order to obtain the necessary care that could save her life.

Dr. Meiman, in ill health himself, was a member of the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group founded by Dr. Yuri Orlov, Natan Shcharansky, and Dr. Andrei Sakharov. He is a leader in the Soviet Jewish refusenik community, and has worked tirelessly to obtain proper medical care for his wife. The Meiman family, and so many others, are languishing without hope unless we continue to actively appeal on their behalf.

The past year has seen the release of a number of well-known Prisoners of Conscience and Helsinki Monitors. The Soviet Union has made several gestures, one of which was the release of Dr. Yelena Bonner from exile in Gorky to obtain a sextuple heart bypass in the West. Yet, with the few overtures that have been made in the areas of family reunification and the freedom of a number of activists, the plight of those who remain behind is only heightened that much more.

As President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev prepare to meet in Iceland this weekend, Congress and the American people reiterate our deep commitment to individual human rights, freedom for Soviet Jews, and other minorities behind this Iron Curtain and indeed, the underscoring of our desire to see the Soviet Union comply with the international human rights precepts to which they are signatory. House Concurrent Resolution 404 is an important expression of that commitment. Accordingly, I urge our colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, we all rejoice in the release from captivity of Yuri Orlov and his wife. Dr. Orlov endured 9 years of harassment, imprisonment, torture, and exile. His crime: Trying to hold the leaders of the Soviet Union accountable to the pledges they made when they signed the Helsinki Final Act.

But as this resolution makes clear, there are others still in the Soviet Union—there are others yet behind whose only crime is to assert their rights that the Soviet Union pledged to uphold at Helsinki. It is to them that this resolution is addressed. And coming on the eve of the summit in Iceland this coming weekend, this resolution will serve to reinforce President Reagan's promise to place the issue of human rights firmly on the Agenda for discussion.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, there can be no true peace—and there can be no reason to believe Soviet agreements on arms control—as long as the Soviet regime is bent on violating the Helsinki accords and continues to crush any and all vestiges of free expression.

We must continually pass resolutions of this kind—and at the appropriate times we must focus, as this resolution does, on specific individuals whose cases are so compelling that they come to symbolize the oppression of an entire people, an entire religion.

And so I urge adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I just want to say that I went to the Soviet Union during the summer, met these particular people and many of the others. What the gentleman does is a work of mercy, and I think this should be supported by all the Members of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the House Concurrent Resolution 404 expressing the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union should permit Nahum Meiman and his wife Inna Kitrosskaya-Meiman to emigrate and cooperate in resolving the numerous outstanding divided families cases. I would like to commend my colleague, Congressman TIM WIRTH for his leadership in introducing this legislation and I am pleased that it is being considered in such a timely fashion.

Mr. Speaker, on my recent trip to the Soviet Union, I had the unforgettable opportunity to meet with the Meimans, as well as a number of individuals in similar situations. The Meimans are not unique in their long-term efforts to obtain visas from the Soviet Government in order to emigrate and join families and friends in the West. Their tragedy, however, has been compounded by the fact that Inna Meiman, a 53-year-old English teacher, is dying of cancer diagnosed in 1983.

I also had the opportunity to meet a number of individuals who have married American citizens but are being denied the right to be reunited with their families in the West. I spoke with Svetlana Braun, wife of Keith Braun, Sonya Melnikova-Eichenvald, wife of Michael N. Lavigne, and Dimitriy Vlasenkov, husband of Siobhan Darrow. Their plight is disheartening in that not only are they unable to live with their spouses, but they are also harassed, beaten, and followed.

The case of Inna Meiman deserves special attention. After four hazardous operations, Soviet doctors have informed her that they cannot do anything more for her and have abandoned her to her fate. It is both tragic and ironic that Inna has been accepted by the Sloan-Kettering Experimental Program in New York and invited by other oncological clinics in Sweden, France, and Israel. She is being denied the right to treatment because her husband, Prof. Nahum Meiman was involved in some work for the Soviet Academy of Sciences at the dawn of the atomic age. This work has since lost its importance and professor Meiman's knowledge poses no threat to Soviet authorities.

I would like to quote from a open letter to General Secretary Gorbachev which Professor Meiman wrote and shared with me. He writes:

My wife's life is being sacrificed in the name of imaginary security for the Soviet Union which would supposedly be threatened if this piteously sick woman were allowed to take advantage of invitations to go abroad for treatment. It is in your power to prevent such a crime against humanity. If not, what is all your pathos worth?

Last week, 66 of my colleagues joined me in sending a letter to General Secretary Gorbachev on behalf of Inna Meiman and several other cancer victims. I wanted to share with my colleagues the text of this letter and urge their support for this worthwhile resolution. The letter follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 1, 1986.

Hon. MIKHAIL GORBACHEV,
General Secretary, The Kremlin, Moscow, RFS, U.S.S.R.

DEAR MR. GENERAL SECRETARY: We are writing on behalf of a group of individuals who desperately need to emigrate from the Soviet Union to seek further treatment for their disease and join their families during this difficult period. We appeal to you on behalf of Inna Meiman, Benjamin Charny, Rimma Bravve, Leah Mariasin, and Edward Erlikh.

These five individuals share a common tragedy in that they all suffer from serious forms of cancer and have received unsuccessful treatments and operations in the Soviet Union. A number of them have been invited to participate in experimental treatment programs in the West and there remains some hope for treatment. The nature of their illness requires the presence and emotional support of their families. Unfortunately, although these individuals have applied for visas on numerous occasions, they have been refused and they are numered among the thousands of Soviet Jewish refuseniks who wish to leave the Soviet Union and be reunited with their families.

A number of us have visited with these individuals on visits to the Soviet Union and others have monitored reports of their cases. But all of us have been touched by their bravery and their pleas, and have been impressed with the need for urgency in favorably resolving these emigration cases and permitting these individuals to seek further treatment in the United States and nations where this treatment is available as soon as possible.

We join in urging you to allow Inna Meiman, Benjamin Charny, Rimma Bravve, Leah Mariasin, and Edward Erlikh to leave the Soviet Union and join their relatives in the West where they can consider alternative treatments in the supportive environment of their families.

Sincerely,

Dante B. Fascell, James J. Florio, Timothy E. Wirth, Lawrence J. Smith, Dave McCurdy, Albert G. Bustamante, Dean A. Gallo, James L. Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH].

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, DANTE FASCELL, for bringing House Concurrent Resolution 404 to the House floor. Along with Chairman YATRON of the Human Rights Subcommittee, Chairman FASCELL has made it possible for the House to endorse this important statement for human rights on the eve of the Iceland summit meeting.

House Concurrent Resolution 404 is an updated version of House Concurrent Resolution 317, which I introduced last spring with my distinguished colleagues, Mr. GILMAN and Mr. SIKORSKI. That resolution now carries the bipartisan cosponsorship of 218 other Members of the House.

House Concurrent Resolution 404 calls on the Soviet Union to approve immediately the exit visas for Dr. Naum Meiman and his wife, Inna Kitrosskaya-Meiman. It also calls on the Soviets to resolve all outstanding divided spouses and separated family cases between the United States and the Soviet Union and to guarantee to all Soviet citizens the right to emigrate to the country of their choice. Passage of this resolution would signal President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev that these concerns should be of the highest priority on the Iceland agenda.

It is indeed a shame that we need to consider this resolution here today. One would have expected that, in the aftermath of Tolya Shcharansky's release, we could have greeted the future of Soviet Jewry with greater hopes and expectations. But we cannot do that. As Dr. Meiman recently wrote, Tolya's "release is not a victory for us, because we are now further away from reaching the goals Tolya fought for when we struggled together."

Dr. Meiman grimly reminds us that nothing has changed:

Fewer than 1,000 Jews will likely be allowed to emigrate this year (as compared with 51,000 in 1979).

Contrast that with the number of Jews who seek to emigrate from the Soviet Union: 400,000. 400,000 free people in waiting.

Dr. Meiman and his wife are two of those 400,000 suffering people. Both have sought emigration visas so that they may get the medical attention they urgently need and so they may reunite with their daughter, Olga, who lives in the district I represent.

Dr. Meiman applied in 1974 for permission to leave the country but was denied, and has been turned down ever since, because the Soviets allege that his work as a physicist is of a secret nature.

Mr. Speaker, what a spurious claim! Since 1955, Dr. Meiman's work has been openly published in Soviet scientific journals. A signed statement from the director of a key Soviet institute for the study of physics confirmed that Dr. Meiman's work has not been classified.

Bravely, despite these lies, despite KGB harassment and their deteriorating health, the Meimans continue to press for their right to emigrate. And they have worked for other Jews' right to emigrate, as well. Dr. Meiman, along with Tolya and Dr. Andrei Sakharov, has been a leader in the Helsinki Monitoring Committee in the Soviet Union, which monitors the implementation of the Helsinki human rights accords. Accompanied by his wife, he has been a determined fighter for human rights in the Soviet Union.

By passing House Concurrent Resolution 404 today, we continue our efforts in support of their battle—and in support of the countless battles being waged by all victims of the brutal Soviet system. It is our way of letting the Soviets know that we will not tolerate their relentless campaign to snuff out freedom. It is our signal to the Soviets that they have not won our favor by releasing Tolya Shcharansky or Yuri Orlov. We will not relent until Naum and Inna and their compatriots can emigrate to the lands of their choice, until they can join their loved ones abroad.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this important resolution, and again want to thank Chairman FASCELL and Chairman YATRON for their help in bringing House Concurrent Resolution 404 to the floor today.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

House Concurrent Resolution 404, introduced by my distinguished colleague Mr. WIRTH, expresses the Congress' concern about the Soviet Union's continuing disregard for their international human rights commitments and focuses particular attention on the tragic plight of Dr. Naum Meiman and his wife, Inna Kitrosskaya-Meiman.

I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Naum Meiman, a member of the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group and a leader in the Soviet Jewish refusenik community, in Moscow in April. Dr. Meiman has been trying to emigrate since 1974; his wife since 1979. They seek to be reunited with his daughter, Olga Plam, a naturalized American citizen who lives in Boulder, CO.

The 75-year-old scientist spoke to me about his wife, who is terminally ill with cancer and is in desperate need of medical treatment that is unavailable in the Soviet Union. Mrs. Meiman's life literally depends on the Soviet Government's willingness to abide by its international commitment in the Helsinki Final Act to "deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit with applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family, with special attention being given to requests of an urgent character—such as requests submitted by persons who are ill or old." I regret to note that the Soviet authorities have, thus far, been little moved by either their international obligations or the many humanitarian appeals in Mr. Meiman's behalf.

Unfortunately, the Meiman family is not alone in this plight. At least 300 other Soviet citizens, some of whom are old or ill, have repeatedly been denied by the Soviet Government permission to rejoin their family members in the United States. Some 20 Soviet spouses have been refused the right to live with their American spouses in this country, including one family that has been separated for over 30 years. At least 400,000 other Soviet Jews have indicated their desire to emigrate and, to date, have been prevented from doing so. Other Soviet Jewish refuseniks in dire need of immediate treatment for cancer include Benjamin Charny, Rimma Bravve, Leah Mariasin, and Edward Erlikh. Over 100 American cancer specialists recently have appealed to General Secretary Gorbachev in their behalf, urging that these refuseniks, including Mr. Meiman, and their families be given permission to leave the Soviet Union for treatment.

News reached the West last week that another Soviet Jewish cancer victim and long-term refusenik, Tatiana Bogomolny, and her husband, Benjamin, had finally been granted permission to emigrate from the Soviet Union. We are hopeful that the welcome news of the Bogomolny family's emigration will be followed by the resolution of these other cases, including Dr. and Mrs. Meiman.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to commend the distinguished chairman of our Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, Mr. YATRON, for his continuing leadership on this important issue and for bringing this timely resolution to the attention of the House before the meeting this weekend in Iceland between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev. I urge its unanimous adoption.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 404, legislation calling on the Soviet Union to permit Naum Meiman and Inna Kitrosskaya-Meiman to emigrate, and to resolve all divided family and emigration cases. Dr. Neiman, a leading Soviet Jewish refusenik, and his wife have attempted to emigrate from the Soviet Union for over 10 years. They want to be reunited with their daughter in the United States. But the time for this reunion is growing short since Mrs. Neiman is terminally ill with cancer.

The plight of the Neimans serves as a painful reminder of the thousands of Soviet citizens who are held captive by their government—a government unwilling to honor its commitment to the Helsinki Final Act, a government having no regard for individual liberty and justice. And a government emphasizing repression rather than reunification. Once again, we call on that same authority to release two of their prisoners, two very needy, very brave individuals.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I am convinced that we must continue to put pressure on the Soviet Union. For this reason, the subcommittee has held numerous hearings and numerous markups on the Soviet Union during my tenure as chairman. We must not ignore one offensive act, whether it is a denial of emigration, a denial of intellectual, religious, or political freedoms, or the denial of dignity so necessary for the human spirit.

Today, we in the U.S. Congress intercede on behalf of the Meimans and all other unresolved emigration cases. Tomorrow, today's demands of the Soviet Union on behalf of its citizenry will not be forgotten. We must continue our fight until not even one person is barred from leaving the Soviet Union, or from living a life free from oppression within this East bloc country.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIM WIRTH] for this very worthwhile resolution. Its passage will signify our dedication and sincerity to the Meimans and countless others who look to our country for support.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution and applaud my colleagues for bringing to the floor House Concurrent Resolution 404 expressing the sense of Congress that the Soviet Union should immediately provide for the emigration of Noam Meiman and Inna Kitrosskaya-Meiman and for the resolution of all divided family and emigration cases.

I commend the President for his resolve to raise the issue of human rights and specifically that of Soviet Jewry, at the upcoming presummit with General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev. I believe that this presummit allows the opportunity to focus upon one of the major differences between our two countries—that of human rights. In our attempt to come to an agreement on arms control we must again be firm on our commitment to the release of those who wish to leave the Soviet Union.

Sovietologists have said that General Secretary Gorbachev is in stark contrast to his predecessors in that he is willing to open up the Soviet society. Yet we have not seen this with regard to human rights. Many hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews want to emigrate and are unable to. These refuseniks are being persecuted by the KGB and Soviet police for the crime of wanting to emigrate and take up residence in a free country. I can only hope that these experts are right about the General Secretary and that he will now allow free emigration.

One might think with such well-known refuseniks such as Anatoly (Natan) Scharansky, Ilya Essas, Vladmir Brodsky, Yakov Gorodetsky, Grigory, and Isai Goldstein being allowed to emigrate this year that overall Soviet Jewry emigration has increased. Just the opposite is true. Soviet Jewry emigration has reached an all-time low. If the figures continue at the present rate, less Soviet Jews will leave the U.S.S.R. this year than in any other year. Through September only 631 Soviet Jews have been allowed to emigrate. This figure includes all the well-known refuseniks. So, despite all the fanfare on the release of these well-known refuseniks, emigration has actually worsened.

My own adopted refusenik Aleksandr Paritsky was reported in early September to be in a Moscow hospital for serious heart ailments. He is physically fragile and weak. I call upon the General Secretary to allow Aleksandr to emigrate to Israel where he can receive some of the best medical attention in the world. It is bad enough to be kept in a country against ones will. It is even worse when ones medical condition is fragile. A positive action by the General Secretary will not only be a humanitarian gesture but will indicate to us all that the General Secretary is acting in good faith in an attempt to relieve the human rights problems that exist in his country.

I am hopeful that at the presummit President Reagan can persuade Gorbachev that we will not compromise on his country's human rights violations. The success of the presummit will surely be judged in part based upon Gorbachev's actions on human rights.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 404

Whereas the signatory countries have pledged themselves to "fulfill in good faith their obligations under international law";

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Concurrent Resolution 406 and House Concurrent Resolution 404, the two concurrent resolutions just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

RISK RETENTION AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 2129) to facilitate the ability of organizations to establish risk retention groups, to facilitate the ability of such organizations to purchase liability insurance on a group basis, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment to the House amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendments

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to the House amendments.

(For text of the Senate amendment to the House amendments, see proceedings of the House had earlier today.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, but just to say that we have conceded on this side to bring this matter under a unanimous-consent order. It would then be expected that we would get to the immigration and naturalization measure.

I have made an announcement on our side at least that Members wishing to bring up pieces of legislation we are getting these last 2 days at least give the leader here 20 minutes notice and to have capsuled what they intend to bring up. Whether or not that is a good suggestion for the majority side or not, I think that is the way we are going to follow procedure on this side to expedite the business of the House with some order so that we know where we are coming from and not be caught unawares.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, we are about to take final action on the Liability Risk Retention Act of 1986. This is a very important measure which can help address the liability insurance crisis. I want to congratulate Mr. WYDEN and Mr. LENT for the successful completion of this legislation to which they have devoted so much effort.

The bill under consideration is one on which we in the House worked for many weeks in order to ensure a carefully balanced bill. By facilitating the formation of self-insurance groups and purchasing groups, the bill can help provide much-needed additional insurance capacity and alternatives to traditional insurance. At the same time, we have sought to provide protection for the public against potential commercial abuses.

To facilitate formation of risk retention groups and purchasing groups, the bill preempts certain State laws. Such preemption constitutes a somewhat novel role for the Federal Government regarding insurance regulation, an area of traditional State responsibility.

Due to the novelty of this approach, it is important that we follow the implementation of the new law very closely. To assist in that effort, the bill requires two reports to Congress by the Secretary of Commerce on implementation of the act. We in Congress will be watching closely to see whether the balance we tried to strike in the bill is maintained in implementation.

I hope that this bill will help many businesses and organizations that have been unable to obtain affordable insurance. The insurance crisis poses a complex challenge to all of us. With enactment of the present bill we will have taken an important first step toward addressing the crisis.

Let me add the following point:

On September 23, the House passed H.R. 5225 without objection. Immediately following passage the House took up S. 2129 and amended it with the text of H.R. 5225. Since passage of the House bill, the other body has agreed to accept the House bill with several clarifications and the omission of the part of section 8(c) of the House bill relating to governmental units. This section would have added a new subsection 6(e) to the Product Liability Risk Retention Act of 1981, as amended. I wish to clarify why that provision has been deleted from the bill we are considering today.

It has been decided that the provision is unnecessary since there is nothing in the Product Liabiliity Risk Retention Act or the amendments under consideration that prevents States from doing what the deleted provision said they could do.

I would like to make one other clarification. To paraphrase the bill, liability is generally defined to mean legal liability for damages because of injuries to other persons or damage to their property, resulting from any business or operations. I want to make clear that the term operations includes commerical fishing operations or other maritime operations.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, during this Congress, we have all heard from our constituents about the liability insurance crisis. A liability horror story has made the news nearly every day. Many businesses are going bare and, thereby, risking financial disaster if severe losses should occur. With the passage of the legislation we are considering today, we will be able to tell our constituent that relief from the crisis is on the way.

S. 2129, the Risk Retention Act of 1986, will provide individuals and businesses a means of self help. They will no longer be totally dependent on the traditional liability insurance market. The legislation will also allow individuals and businesses to pool together to form their own insurance cooperatives. It will allow commercial liability insurance to be purchased on a group basis. The legislation stipulates that members of risk retention and purchasing groups must have similar liability. This will protect members from unintentionally assuming unknown and potentially costly insurance risks. To safeguard against potential abuse, each State insurance commissioner is provided authority to protect policyholders from any fly-by-night operations.

On September 23, the House passed H.R. 5225 without objection. Immediately following passage the House took up S. 2129 and amended it with the text of H.R. 5225. Since passage of the House bill, the other body has agreed to accept the House bill with several clarifications and the omission of the part of section 8(c) of the House bill relating to governmental units. This section would have added a new subsection 6(e) to the Product Liability Risk Retention Act of 1981, as amended.

It has been decided that the provision is unnecessary since there is nothing in the Product Liability Risk Retention Act or the amendments under consideration that prevents States from doing what the deleted provision said they could do. Does the gentleman agree?

I would like to make one other clarification. To paraphrase the bill, liability is generally defined to mean legal liability for damages because of injuries to other persons or damage to their property, resulting from any business or operations. I want to make clear that the term operations includes commercial fishing operations or other maritime operations.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill will provide the relief our constituents so desperately need from the liability insurance crisis, and I urge my colleagues to support it. I would like to commend both Congressman WYDEN and Chairman FLORIO, as well as the Members of the other body, for their efforts on this bill. Without Congressman WYDEN's persistence, diligence, and willingness to compromise, it is unlikely this bill would be on its way to the President now. Without Chairman FLORIO's interest and hard work this bill would not be the excellent legislation it is. Finally, I would like to thank Chairman DINGELL for his cooporation and support in the craftings of this legislation.

Finallly, Mr. Speaker, no one pretends that risk retention and purchasing groups are a panacea. S. 2129 will not solve all the problems facing the liability insurance market. However, it will provide an alternative to the traditional insurance market. In this troubled time, it may be the most and the least we can do.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

All points of order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of sections 302(f) and 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall continue not to exceed two hours, with one hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and with fifteen minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of each of the Committees on Agriculture, Education and Labor, Energy and Commerce, and Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. In lieu of the amendments recommended by said committees now printed in the bill, it shall be in order to consider an amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of the bill H.R. 5665 as an original bill for the purpose of amendment. The substitute shall be considered as having been read, and all points of order against the substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI, and with the provisions of sections 302(f) and 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, are hereby waived. No amendment to the bill or to said substitute shall be in order except the amendments contained in the report of the Committee on Rules on this resolution. Such amendments shall be considered only in the order in which they appear in said report and may only be offered by the sponsor designated in said report, or by the chairman of the appropriate committee, or his designee, where a committee is designated. Said amendments shall be considered as having been read and shall not be subject to amendment or to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole, but shall each be debatable for the time specified in the report of the Committee on Rules on this resolution, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto, and all points of order against said amendments are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text by this resolution. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, which may not contain instructions. After the passage of H.R. 3810, it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1200 and to consider said bill in the House, and all points of order against the consideration of said bill for failure to comply with the provisions of sections 302(f) and 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, are hereby waived. It shall then be in order in the House to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the said Senate bill and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H.R. 3810 as passed by the House, and all points of order against said motion for failure to comply with the provisions of sections 302(f) and 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, and with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived. It shall then be in order to move that the House insist on its amendment to the bill S. 1200 and request a conference with the Senate thereon. It shall then be in order to consider in the House, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, a bill containing the text specified in section two of this resolution, if offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or his designee, debate on said bill shall continue not to exceed ten minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, or their designees, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on said bill to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, which may not contain instructions.

SEC. 2. The text of the second House bill made in order for consideration by this resolution is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Section 3306(c)(1)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out 'before January 1, 1988,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'before January 1, 1993,'."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. SENSENBRENNER

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SENSENBRENNER moves to postpone consideration of House Resolution 580 to Tuesday, October 14, 1986.

The SPEAKER. Under rule XI, the Chair cannot entertain that motion at this time.

In the opinion of the Chair, the motion to postpone consideration of House Resolution 580 is a dilatory motion within the meaning of clause 4b of rule XI, just as questions of consideration and motions to commit have been held dilatory under that rule.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, if I may be heard on this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin to speak to the propriety of his motion.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I come to a different conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, there are two precedents in the House of Representatives, both dating from 1980 that state that—

A motion to postpone further consideration of a privileged resolution may be offered before the manager of the resolution has been recognized for debate and is debatable for 1 hour controlled by the Member offering the motion.

On May 29, 1980, the House was considering a privileged report and privileged resolution from the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct. A motion similar to the one which I have offered was entertained by the Chair and a point of order against consideration was overruled by the House.

During the consideration of that privileged resolution, after the House rejected the motion to postpone further consideration to a day certain, that action was reconsidered and based upon newly discovered evidence, upon reconsideration, the motion was passed.

Rule XI, clause 4(a) defines privileged reports in amendments, and it puts on a level of the privilege attaching to a report of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct reports of the Committee on Rules.

Clause 4(a) of rule XI must be read in conjunction with clause 4(b), which the Speaker previously cited.

Section 727 of the Rules of the House of Representatives defines questions of privilege, and it states, in part, "Therefore, 'questions of privilege' take precedence over these matters which are privileged under the rules," citing Cannon's Precedents III, 2426-2530; V, 6454; and VIII, 3465.

Second, it appears that a motion to postpone to a day certain of a report of the Committee on Rules making in order a bill is a question of first impression, and while other types of motions have been ruled out of order as dilatory, a motion for postponement to a day certain has not been decided by the Chair.

I would submit that the question of postponement to a day certain is not dilatory because it refers to a specific date when the House will consider the bill; whereas other motions, such as motions to commit, motions to table, and motions to indefinitely postpone are dilatory because they do not refer to a day certain.

All that this Member is asking the Chair to rule on is to give the House the opportunity to decide by majority vote whether this resolution should be considered today or should be considered next Tuesday.

I believe that the House should have that opportunity, and based upon the precedents, the rules, and the interpretation cited, I would ask the Speaker to rule my motion in order.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] standing to be heard on the motion?

Mr. BEILENSON. If I may, Mr. Speaker, very briefly. As the Speaker obviously recalls, the Speaker recognized this gentleman for 1 hour, and at that point, it seems to this gentleman, that the clause 4(b) clearly takes effect. It is clear on its face that the gentleman's objection does not pertain at this point.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet seeking recognition at the time that the Speaker made that statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was on his feet in a timely manner seeking recognition. Does any other Member desire to be heard on the Chair's ruling?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard in support of the contention that has just been so comprehensively presented by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER].

The precedents, both under Cannon's in the rules embodied in Cannon's Precedents, 333, and as codified later, or what we consider codified in Deschler's Precedents and Rules, I hold that the House is entitled, under the circumstances of the presentation of this rule, which did not satisfy compliance with the rules that must give a Member an opportunity to read the printed version of the rule, as well as the bill certified for House consideration under that rule.

I maintain, after checking with the Public Printer, that no 435 copies of this rule or bill have been printed in sufficient time to have it in the hands of us, the regular hoi polloi Members of the House.

Therefore, I strongly endorse the request of the gentleman and seek that the Chair rule in such a way that the majority of this House shall have a chance to vote on whether or not we should postpone further consideration to a time when we can have a chance to look at this dispassionately, leisurely, and carefully.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, may I be recognized on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] is recognized.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I want to add to what has been said with respect to the point of order, that the purpose, since it is one of first impression, it would appear, with respect to a motion to postpone to a date certain, and not too far into the future, at least from this gentleman's point of view, is offered for the purpose stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], that is, that all the amendments that were considered in the rule defeated 1 week ago, some have been wrapped into the new rule and will be a part of the principal bill if the rule is adopted; others are set aside for debate specifically and new amendments not previously considered will now be a part of this rule.

Since the Committee on Rules has not printed the content of each one of the amendments, and especially the new amendments not previously considered before by this House, nor by the Committee on Rules, it seems that every Member of the House ought to have at least the weekend and a few days to get that print and study the content, because under the modified closed rule that could pass this House, debate is limited.

It is for that reason that I think the Chair should rule that the point of order is well-founded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Under clause 4(b), rule XI, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn, but after the result is announced, the Speaker shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the report from the Committee on Rules shall have been fully disposed of. This has been construed to require rejection of the previous question before such motion may be offered.

The gentleman's argument is not well taken.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against consideration of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, rule XI, clause 2(6) requires a 3-day layover of reported measures, with the exception of matters that are in reports of the Committee on Rules. That exception is contained in rule XI, clause 4(b). The report of the Committee on Rules, both the resolution that was just reported by the Clerk, as well as the written report of the Committee on Rules, did not contain the text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute, which is some 215 pages long.

That measure was introduced as an original bill yesterday by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], but the Committee on Rules did not include the text of this within any of the documents that it filed last night pursuant to the rule.

When the Committee on Rule's report was filed, I had a colloquy with the Speaker pro tempore, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VALENTINE], and it was very clearly stated that this document, which is made in order as the amendment in the nature of a substitute, was not included in any of the papers that were filed by the Committee on Rules.

I believe that that omission, particularly in light of the fact that the text of the Committee on Ways and Means bill was set forth in full in the resolution means that this document does fall under the 3-day rule and it cannot be made in order under rule XI, clause 2(6).

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule against the gentleman.

The Committee on Rules has the authority to make in order the text of an introduced bill as an amendment merely by referencing the bill number on the rule, and there has been a copy made available on the floor. That bill is not a reported bill which is being separately considered and so clause 2(l)(6) of rule XI does not apply.

The point of order is not well taken.

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 18, nays 387, not voting 27, as follows:

Messrs. WALDON, ENGLISH, SEIBERLING, and MARLENEE changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3810, IMMIGRATION CONTROL AND LEGALIZATION AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 580 is a modified open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 3810, the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments of 1986.

The rule provides 2 hours of general debate, with 1 hour allocated to the Committee on the Judiciary and 15 minutes each to the Committees on Agriculture, Education and Labor, Energy and Commerce, and Ways and Means. In each case, the committee's time will be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that the text of H.R. 5665 will be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment. H.R. 5665 incorporates many committee and individual amendments that were presented to the Rules Committee when it first began consideration of a rule in immigration reform.

The rule waives sections 302(f) and 303(a) of the Budget Act against consideration of the bill and against the substitute. It also waives clause 5(a) of rule XXI against consideration of the substitute.

Clause 5(a) of rule XXI prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill. The bill provides for 100-percent reimbursement to States for costs associated with the implementation of the systematic alien verification for entitlement program which would become effective immediately upon enactment. That provision constitutes an appropriation in a legislative bill.

Section 302(f) of the Budget Act prohibits consideration of legislation which provides new discretionary budget authority, new entitlement authority, or new credit authority which exceeds the allocation of budget authority under section 302(b) of the Budget Act allotted to the subcommittee having jurisdiction over the legislation. H.R. 3810 includes a number of provisions that make budget authority available immediately upon enactment. These include compensation for the appointment of a special counsel to investigate immigration-related unfair employment practices and a requirement that the Federal Government reimburse States and localities for the costs of incarcerating illegal aliens and certain Cuban nationals. Since no allocation of new discretionary budget authority was made to the Judiciary Committee for fiscal year 1986, no measure would be in order within the jurisdiction of the Immigration Subcommittee which provides new budget authority for the current fiscal year.

Section 303(a) of the Budget Act prohibits consideration of legislation which contains new entitlement authority for a fiscal year until the budget resolution for that year has been adopted. One provision of the bill provides new entitlement authority for education assistance for institutional reimbursements which will first take effect in fiscal year 1988. The bill also provides that individuals who are legalized under its provisions are to be ineligible to receive most forms of public assistance for the 5-year period starting from the date of legalization. Entitlement to benefits for such individuals will first occur in fiscal year 1991. Since both of these provisions constitute entitlement authority which first becomes effective in a fiscal year for which, quite obviously, no budget resolution has been adopted, they violate the provisions of section 303(a) of the Budget Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee hesitates to grant waivers of the Congressional Budget Act. In this situation, however, the committee felt that the waivers included in the rule were justified in order to allow the House to work its will on the product of our committees who have found these entitlement programs to be necessary elements of a complete and responsible immigration reform package.

Under the provisions of the rule, no amendments are to be in order to the substitute except for 14 amendments which are printed in the report which accompanies the rule. The amendments are not amendable nor shall they be subject to a demand for a division of the question. Debate time for each amendment is specified in the report and in each case is to be divided equally between the proponent of the amendment and an opponent. Pro forma amendments are not allowed under the rule. The amendments must be offered in the order specified in the report and only by the designated Member, or in the case of a committee amendment, by the chairman or his designee. The rule also waives all points of order against the amendments made in order under the rule.

The rule also provides for one motion to recommit the bill. The motion to recommit may not contain instructions.

Mr. Speaker, to allow the House to go to conference, the rule makes it in order to take S. 1200 from the Speaker's table and to consider the bill in the House. The rule waives sections 302(f) and 303(a) of the Budget Act against consideration of the Senate bill. The rule makes in order a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and to insert in lieu thereof the text of H.R. 3810 as passed by the House. Clause 5(a) of rule XXI and sections 302(f) and 303(a) of the Budget Act are waived against that motion.

The rule makes in order a motion that the House insist upon its amendment to S. 1200 and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The rule provides for consideration in the House of a House bill consisting of the text contained in section 2 of this resolution. This bill will extend until January 1, 1993, the exemption from the Federal unemployment tax for H-2 workers. All points of order are waived against consideration of the bill. The bill will be offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or his designee. Debate on the bill is limited to 10 minutes, which will be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means or their designees. And finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit which may not contain instructions.

Mr. Speaker, as Members will recall, 2 weeks ago the House defeated the rule which would have provided for consideration of this issue. Some Members felt at that time, not entirely without reason, that that rule was not as fair as it could have been because it did not allow amendments to the particularly difficult and complex solution contained in the bill to the agricultural worker problem.

That issue has now been resolved to the satisfaction of the principal Members on both sides of that issue and on both sides of the aisle, and these Republicans and Democrats alike who have been most involved and active on this legislation believe they have now drafted a bill that will meet with the approval of the majority of the Members of this House. They deserve our thanks and commendation for staying with this most important issue and for reconciling their differences and coming back to us with a bill that will, if passed and signed by the President, go a long way toward solving the vast and growing problem of illegal immigration in the United States. We should allow them the opportunity to bring that bill before the House.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. Before yielding to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROYBAL. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would sure like to understand the fairness of the rule that you are proposing. I fail to see any fairness in it, but perhaps I am mistaken. Maybe you can explain the fairness of the rule by answering the following question:

It is my undertanding that in the first hour the Committee on Agriculture will have 7½ minutes on one side and 7½ minutes on the other side. Is that correct?

Mr. BEILENSON. The first hour under general debate, as the Members recall, will be devoted to the Committee on the Judiciary which has 1 full hour. Thereafter, as the gentleman points out, each of the other four committees of jurisdiction will have 15 minutes to be equally divided between the majority and minority.

Mr. ROYBAL. Fifteen minutes for each of the committees of jurisdiction, which will take the full hour; is that not correct?

Mr. BEILENSON. That is correct.

Mr. ROYBAL. In other words, 1 full hour will be devoted to the Committee on Agriculture, to the Committee on Education and Labor, to the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. BEILENSON. That is correct. Those four committees together have 1 hour of general debate.

Mr. ROYBAL. There is an hour left, and there are 435 Members of this House. I do not know whether my arithmetic is correct, but if each one were to speak on this subject matter we would have .0015 of a second, of 1 second, to speak on this subject matter. I see no fairness in this.

Now does the gentleman really believe that Members of this House would not be interested in participating in this debate?

Mr. BEILENSON. As the gentleman well knows, we always limit to some extent or another the amount of time for general debate. People who are most focused in and concerned about amendments will later have the opportunity to address the House.

Mr. ROYBAL. Will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. If the gentleman will allow me to respond further for a moment——

Mr. ROYBAL. First of all——

Mr. BEILENSON. If this gentleman may respond for just another moment, may I say to my friend, and then I will be happy to yield further, the ranking minority member and the chairman of each of these committees agreed to that amount of time for general debate. The major committee of jurisdiction, the Committee on the Judiciary, has a full hour, and it was agreeable to all of the Members involved from the four other committees that they would share 1 hour.

Mr. ROYBAL. That agreement, of course, was an unfortunate thing to have taken place. But that is not the point at this part of the debate.

I still want to be sure that I understand the fairness of the rule. The gentleman probably remembers that 6 years ago we had an open rule. He also probably remembers that 2 years ago we had 10 hours of debate. Now it is cut down to 2 hours of debate with 1 hour given to members of the committee, and then the rest of the House has 1 hour to participate in a debate that is going to affect millions of people in the United States.

I do not find that to be very fair. Do you?

Mr. BEILENSON. This gentleman never said anything about fairness with respect to this rule. This gentleman, in fact, said that some Members felt the rule defeated a couple of weeks ago was not so fair as it could have been, and this gentleman agreed. But we are faced by certain constraints, as the gentleman from California well knows, and if we had some help from certain Members on this floor at an earlier time, there obviously would have been a great deal more time for both general debate and debate on amendments on this particular bill.

A lot of Members, including myself, have been urging that we get the bill to the floor earlier so that we could have had full and complete time for debate. A lot of folks, including people this gentleman will not name, have been opposed to that, and it has made it very difficult for us with a couple of days left in this session to have adequate time for this or any other legislation.

Mr. ROYBAL. Will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. Of course, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROYBAL. I think the gentleman is incorrect in the statement he has made if he is making reference to any one of us here on the floor. The truth of the matter is that all these deliberations and all of these deals took place in a closed session when even after we offered to be of assistance in any way that we possibly could we were not permitted in the room.

Let me finish the statement. So no one can say that there was no one that maybe opposed this piece of legislation that did not try in some way to bring about some semblance of fairness in bringing a proper rule to this House.

Now there is a great deal of difference between 10 hours of debate 2 years ago and 2 hours now and then reducing that to only 1 hour for the Members of this House to debate. When you have fifteen-hundredths of 1 second for each Member to debate this rule, I think that that is somewhat ridiculous.

Mr. BEILENSON. The Rules Committee, I would say to the gentleman from California, was hopeful that not every Member would speak for that one fraction of a second.

The gentleman is consuming all of my time, and perhaps the gentleman who apparently may not be in support of the rule could request additional time from the folks on the other side.

Mr. ROYBAL. If I may remind the gentleman, when this was on the floor before I could not get time from this side, I had to go to the other side.

Now whatever the situation is, it seems to me that the rights of the Members of this House are being violated in this rule. These secret meetings, these deals that were made with the other side, the sessions that have been held to the point where a conference that is supposed to take place after the legislation has passed, that conference has already taken place, and now you put into this piece of legislation 32 additional amendments that no one knows anything about. Then you expect the Members of this House to say yes, we agree.

Mr. BEILENSON. Including some amendments the gentleman himself requested.

I take back my time. I must take back my time in order to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], because we have virtually run out of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. KILDEE). The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] has consumed 13 minutes.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform my colleagues that the immigration reform bill has risen phoenix-like from the ashes and that it may actually take wing and soar to passage this time around. And it's all due in large part to the persistent and bipartisan efforts of the chairmen and ranking minority members on the Committee on Judiciary and its Subcommittee on Immigration—namely, Representatives RODINO, FISH, MAZZOLI, and LUNGREN; and to the efforts of those Members involved with the farmworker issue—Representatives SCHUMER, PANETTA, MORRISON, and BERMAN.

I am especially pleased that we are here today crediting these Members with the rebirth of the phoenix instead of trying to affix blame for the death of Cock Robin. I think it's testament to how the spirit of bipartisanship, working in the national interest, can triumph, even in the chaotic and contentious final days of a Congress.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 580 is a modified open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 3810, the immigration bill. The rule provides for 2 hours of general debate, with 1-hour allocated to the Judiciary Committee, and 15-minutes each to the Committee on Agriculture, Education and Labor, Energy and Commerce, and Ways and Means.

The rule makes in order an amendment in the nature of a substitute which is the text of the new bill, H.R. 5665, introduced by Representatives RODINO and FISH. Appropriate points of order are waived against both the reported bill and the substitute.

I would point out that new substitute folds in some 32 amendments, whereas the substitute made in order by the previous rule had folded in some 23 amendments as part of the original text. Each of the 14 amendments made in order by this rule are subject to specified time limits of 10 or 20 minutes each, for a total of 4 hours.

So, what we have in this new rule is an abbreviated process that will consume 6 hours in general debate and amendment time, compared to 13 hours under the old rule. This is made possible because 11 of the amendments made in order for separate votes under the previous rule are now incorporated in the original text; 8 amendments have been dropped, mostly with the concurrence of their sponsors; and debate time has been further curtailed on some amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this slimmed-down rule does not allow us as much debate or as many votes as we might want. Ideally, I would prefer a wide-open amendment process. But time constraints just don't permit that. Moreover, we have a bipartisan procedural agreement here that helps to ensure that most major issues will be debated and voted. So I think this is a reasonably fair and workable process.

Mr. Speaker, the main hangup under the previous rule was the farmworker provision and the fact that a major alternative, the Lungren amendment, was not allowed to be offered.

I am pleased to report that the new bill includes in its text a compromise on the agricultural worker issue that has been worked out between all the principals involved, including Senators SIMPSON and WILSON and both grower and labor interests. It is essentially a hybrid of the Schumer and Lungren alternatives and establishes a two-tier system for admission as special agricultural workers. I will let the sponsors explain the compromise in greater detail later. I simply want to commend them on staying with this and resolving their interests to the acceptance, if not complete satisfaction, of all concerned.

Mr. Speaker, another bone of contention in the previous rule was the incorporation of the Moakley provision granting extended voluntary departure status to illegal immigrants from El Salvador and Nicaragua. Under the previous rule that provision was made part of the substitute, without a separate vote. Under this rule, a motion to strike it is in order Finally, Mr. Speaker, you may recall that one of the objections we had to the previous rule was that it denied the majority its traditional right to recommit the bill with instructions. I tried once again to restore that provision and again failed in the Rules Committee caucus. And while I am upset that we have been denied that opportunity, I think its exclusion is less objectionable under this new, bipartisan procedure.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that neither the rule nor bill does everything I would like to see; and I am sure that is true for most Members on the other side of the aisle as well. But, I think we have to step back and look at the big picture; and, on the whole, I think you will see that this is about the fairest and most practicable procedure and bill that we are ever going to get. I fear that if we let this opportunity pass today, it may not come our way again in the next Congress, even though the immigration problem will be bigger and more intractable next year than it is now.

Mr. Speaker, it's easy for us on the sidelines to second guess those responsible for this legislation and dismiss or criticize their efforts because we aren't pleased with one aspect or another of this legislation. But, as imperfect as this bill may be, and I'm hopeful we can improve it by amendment and in conference, the fact remains that this is an issue whose time has come, and which we must deal with now. This legislation has been worked and reworked over three Congresses involving thousands of hours on the part of Members and staff from both Houses and both parties. This is truly one of those issues which cries out for a national consensus and action. We have that within our grasp today. Let's not let it slip through our fingers.

I urge adoption of this rule so that we can proceed to the consideration of this most critical piece of legislation.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished minority whip for yielding to me.

I am enthralled by the gentleman's argumentation. I sat here and listened the last time when he was straining the rules to object vociferously to the rather authoritarian procedures that had resulted in what he considered to be an unfair rule.

The same gentleman he is praising this time was the one that the gentleman was complaining of for attempting to foist an unfair rule.

Mr. LOTT. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I may reclaim my time, I commended the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] even at that point for his efforts. He came close, but no lollipop. I certainly was not critical of him even at that point.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I will correct the interpretations of my memory of that set of circumstances; but the gentleman now says that, "It's all right to have 'Star Chamber' proceedings."

The gentleman knows as well as I that the Rules Committee met in secret: Star Chamber. It denied anyone of us any access to its proceedings. We wrote the chairman of the Committee on Rules a long time ago, after the defeat of the last one. We conversed personally; asked to be heard; asked to have access.

The gentleman cannot say that this rule did not come out of "Star Chamber environmental protection." So that the gentleman is saying to us that as long as he, the minority, give their imprimatur to this tactic and have a party to it, it is OK. But when they feel they are shunted out of it, well, then, it is not OK.

What I am telling the gentleman is, that we agreed with you the last time; we are still a minority on this issue. Under the rule we will be denied any time, if we are in opposition to this bill and this rule.

I just wanted to point out the inconsistencies in the gentleman's argumentation.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think that the gentleman is certainly justified in doing that; I do think that this is a fair rule. It was reported out in an open meeting of the Rules Committee, but I want to make this point:

There are those here in this Chamber that want no immigration bill, period. I am not one of those.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Neither am I.

Mr. LOTT. Well, there are others that have allowed this process to drag on and on and on with the hopes that it would die in the end just because we could not move it through the House or through the conference, and this is our last gasp.

The gentleman from California was summarily unfairly treated last time; he has met with those on that controversial issue, the Schumer amendment, they have worked out something as best they could, and I think that, all things considered, it is the best we are going to be able to do.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER].

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Rules Committee got the lollipop on this rule, either. They got a can of castor oil and they are trying to have all of us gulp it down and get this bill passed.

I support immigration reform. I do not think this bill is immigration reform. This bill is really the triple amnesty bill. First we have regular amnesty for illegal aliens who have been here since January 1983; much more generous than the Hessberg Commission recommended.

Second, the bill has Moakley-DiConcini amnesty for Salvadorians and Nicaraguans; and third, the bill has Schumer amnesty for temporary agricultural workers who have been here, working for some time during the last 3 years.

Now I would like to see an immigration bill come up, but I think that since this is our one opportunity, we had better do it right, and this rule does not allow the membership of the House of Representatives to do it right.

I am going to ask the membership to vote down the previous question so that I can offer an amendment to the rule which first will allow a motion to strike the Schumer provisions. There is no motion to strike allowed in this rule; so that way, if you vote for immigration reform, you vote for legalizing all of these people who have come into our country to temporarily serve as agricultural workers, and granting them permanent residence eventually means that they will be able to petition in their relatives and Lord knows how many more aliens will come into the country.

Second, I think that certain issues that are made in order by the Committee on Rules, such as my amendment to strike the Frank antidiscrimination provisions and the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] to strike the legalization program, really deserve more than 20 minutes debate, because they are very serious changes in policy.

My purpose is not to filibuster; I think that 30 or 40 or 60 minutes of total debate will allow everybody who wants to be heard on these questions to be able to speak their peace, and for the House to vote thoroughly informed; but the 20-minute restriction on these types of amendments certainly is not going to allow the debate to take place that really ought to.

So I would hope that the membership would vote down the previous question so we can get a proper rule to pass true immigration reform rather than the triple amnesty bill which this rule practically forces us to vote on.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished, knowledgeable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time, and I hope I am as knowledgeable as the gentleman says I am.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and I urge its adoption by the House so that we can get on to the long-awaited task of voting on immigration reform.

Let me salute briefly three people who had a lot to do with the fact we are here today. One is my friend from California [Mr. BEILENSON] who from the start has been a stalwart supporter of ours on the Rules Committee, to get that job done.

□ 1245

Our chairman, Chairman PEPPER, and the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. LOTT, who while he has had some disagreement here, has always been willing to talk with us about the issue and try to bring it up. The gentleman from Mississippi said something about this is the last gasp. In my notes I have here the term eleventh hour. We have heard always that this is the eleventh hour, meaning that we are on the borderline of not getting something done. Actually, this is the eleventh-and-a-half hour, we are even beyond the eleventh hour. Therefore, if—and I join my friends from Texas and California saying I wish we had a different procedure here—the fact is we are where we are and we will not even debate the bill unless we take this procedure.

Two weeks ago when we had the earlier rule with some reluctance and lack of enthusiasm, I supported the committee's rule. It was a decent rule. This is a much better rule. Two weeks ago we had 32 amendments that would have been somehow debated on. Now we have, I believe it is, 14 that are made in order which means we have a much narrower focus, which is the way we should.

Second, 2 weeks ago my biggest problem was with the Schumer-Berman-Panetta compromise, and that was modestly attended to by the Rules Committee having made five areas of change in that bill as it was reported by the Judiciary Committee. This rule before us today has very substantively changed the Judiciary version of the Schumer-Berman-Panetta compromise.

As you will remember, the original Schumer proposal called for immediate green cards, immediate permanent residency for these temporary agricultural workers.

This is not the case anymore. No agricultural worker gets an immediate green card.

Second, I argued at the committee unsuccessfully about the question of disabilities, disability from various forms of public welfare which we disable with respect to the underlying group of legalization applicants.

In this committee version these people are disabled from most forms of public assistance, which is proper.

The committee continues the recruitment provision which says, at my instance, that domestic workers will be recruited first before you go to a pool of undocumented foreign workers.

Furthermore, the man-day which could have been originally as few as 1 hour a day and was as little as 60 man-days, is now at least 4 hours and at least 90 man-days before an individual can qualify for this temporary residency.

The sunset which was in the committee something like 20 years was reduced to 12 years at my request by the original rule, is now down to 7 years in this rule, only 3 years of which is going to be in the area of replenishment.

I am frankly still not totally comfortable with the Schumer proposal. I think the premises, the dual premises of immediate residency whether temporary or permanent, and then a very long-range abundant supply of labor for the agricultural interests is, I think, a little unbalanced. But given the situation where we are today and given the good-faith negotiations which took place ardently over the last couple of weeks since the defeat of the earlier rule, I think the House without question support the efforts of the committee today. I think the House can at the end of the day, whenever that is, support the committee bill, and I think we will go on to a better day for true immigration reform.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time to discuss this. The rule before us today is a lousy rule. And the agricultural provisions that are in this bill that would be adopted if we adopted this rule are lousy provisions, and I do not blame anybody for voting against this rule, but I do plan to vote for it nonetheless myself.

Now, after I have said all of that, you wonder what is so terrible, and why am I doing that? I think this is a terrible rule, frankly, because it is still a gag rule, it is still a closed rule as to these agriculture provisions. There are no opportunities to offer amendments, and those agriculture provisions are bad, bad provisions. First of all, there is no opportunity to offer amendments even to the H2 section to strike out such things as the, first time in the history of our program, granting Legal Services Corporation lawyers to the temporary workers who have come into this country under contract and who have already the opportunity for legal counsel under those contracts. But most of all, it is not just the minor amendments that concern me, it is the so-called Schumer, modified Schumer compromise that has been worked out that is still bad.

The Schumer provision as modified is still bad because it is unconditional, because it is open-ended and because it is unfair. It is unconditional no matter what hoops have to be gone through, as you will hear described throughout this debate today; it is unconditional because only a period of time has to pass once you have been granted status and been in this country for 90 days and come forward and be shown that you have in the last year to be eligible to get into the pipeline to be a citizen; it is unconditional only because a period of time has to pass before you get that permanent resident status and before you are eligible to become a citizen. There is no requirement that you have to work in the fields anymore, or whatever.

It is unconditional for anyone who is in the replenishment area for all practical purposes. They are in the hoops, too. It is open-ended in the sense that there is no cap on the number of workers who can be let in under the 90-day provisions. That is, if anybody worked in agriculture within 90 days within the year specified, May 1, 1985, to May 1, 1986, and they can prove it under the documentation required in this bill, they can come in. There is no cap, there is no limit on the numbers of people involved. And of course there is no limit on the number of people who will be able to come in as their relatives as they gain status that makes them eligible to bring relatives into this country. It is unfair because we are talking about separating out the agricultural workers industry while the dishwashers and the factory workers who are illegal aliens that we are going to grant amnesty to, that I do not agree to doing but would be under other portions of this bill, do not get the same treatment. They have to have been here since January 1, 1982.

But I am voting for this rule nonetheless. I am voting for it partly out of deference to my good friend and colleague, Mr. LUNGREN, who has worked so hard to get a compromise, and this is somewhat of a compromise. I am voting for it partly because I think we should debate this whole matter. But mainly I am voting for this rule because, despite all of the reservations I have about this, I am most concerned about the numbers of people illegally coming into this country, about the need to close our borders, about the absolute necessity to have employer sanctions. And I do not know any other opportunity we are going to have in this Congress to address those matters if we do not vote for this rule.

So despite all my reservations, I am voting for the rule.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The Chair does not entertain the gentleman's point of order at this time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. I thank my colleague from California for yielding these 2 minutes to me.

This is like Rasputin; immigration refuses to die. It comes up again and again and again. There is a great deal of frustration on this side in this Chamber, both for those who favor immigration and for those who are opposed to immigration.

Just let me say one thing to the Committee on Rules: I would like them to know that I am appreciative that the sunset for sanctions has become part of this legislation. I also thank them for making certain that the Bureau of the Census is taken out of the provisions of the confidentiality of the upcoming census of 1990, will not be jeopardized by this legislation.

I say that because I think there were two meaningful entries into the rule.

Now, having said all of that, I want to make it very clear I think that the debate on immigration has to take place. I think it is essential. I think there are people in this Chamber who have consistently been criticized editorially, and groups, racial groups in this country criticized for saying that they are against immigration. We are not against immigration, we are against discrimination. It is back to employer sanctions where I lead myself, I want to make it very clear that sanctions as written into this bill will be detrimental to those people of color, those people who speak with an accent. I am going to vote for the rule because the debate must take place, but I am not going to vote for final passage of the immigration bill for those reasons.

Now, having said that, I want to make it very clear that the employers who are watching this show today will end up being the judges and juries of people who come to their offices for employment. It is a heck of a burden to put on American industry.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule today. We must simply do something to stem the tide of illegal immigration. I take this time to remind my colleagues that in 1982 we brought this measure to the floor at 10 p.m. one Thursday night, and again at 10 p.m. on Friday night shortly before Christmas. It failed of passage. In 1984, we debated this measure for a full week, 8 to 10 hours a day, then had 10 days of conference. Then it floundered and died.

Now the gentleman from California, who I greatly respect, opposes this measure, and that is his perfect right. But he now says that we have inadequate time for debate under this rule. In 1984, the same gentleman put over 100 amendments into the RECORD in an attempt to kill this bill. We debated those amendment with no time limitation whatever and succeded in frustrating the legislative process.

I submit, speaking of frustration, to those gentlemen who are Members of the majority party, who almost always support closed rules, you now understand the frustration and time limitations that those of us in the minority suffer under almost every day around here. I sincerely hope the gentleman will remember that at other times in the future.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRIS. I will yield if time permits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS] has expired.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Since my name was mentioned, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

Mr. DAUB. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this is, well I say to my colleagues it could be slicker than the great train robbery.

This rule is a new face on an old dog, but it will not hunt.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] is going to offer a motion or will require that we have a chance to vote down the previous question. I intend to support the gentleman's request. I do so with a heavy heart for a number of reasons. I do think it is time that we voted, I do think there will be a rule granted and I do think we ought to have our debate and much of what has been said I find myself in agreement with.

But we do not change what we had in the previous rule too much from what we have in this rule. There have been some compromises that I favor, the adding of the motion to strike, the amendment on extended voluntary departure, I think, is an improvement in the rule. The question of allowing a motion to recommit is an improvement but it does not offer a motion to recommit with instructions. But we were denied the very thing that my friend from California, Mr. LUNGREN, sought in the beginning, the one significant intellectual improvement in the bill was an opportunity to strike the rolling legalization provisions contained in the Schumer-Berman amendment.

There can be no doubt about it that this rule allows us the opportunity to say "no" to the question of granting people who have been here for even less time than would be granted amnesty under the general provisions of the bill, 3 years under bucket No. 1 and 2 years under bucket No. 2, if they worked in agriculture, the opportunity to become citizens of this country within a 6-year period of time.

If you voted against the previous question last time and if you voted against the rule last time, and if you voted against the bill, you would be casting three "no" votes that in my opinion are justified today.

There is no logical reason of substance to distinguish your "no" votes on the motion with regard to the previous question or the motion with regard to the rule the last time, from the same two opportunities you will have today to vote "yes" or "no."

The rule today is more restrictive. It folds into the bill itself upon the adoption of the rule a number of things that ought to have been debated that were made in order under the previous rule: the Bryant amendment to restore language that would allow debate on a Social Security validation system; the Richardson amendment on the reduction of penalties for first-time offenders who hire illegal aliens and excepting small business from sanctions; the Lungren amendment on two-tiered legalization; the Richardson amendment on the mandate that State education agencies include English; the Dymally amendment on naturalization for certain Filipino war vets. A number of things are not going to be able to be debated that ought to be debated under this rule. So the rule is indeed more restrictive, not only in time but in terms of substance, the content of what we would have had the opportunity to debate.

What was the rule, is not now in the rule; new things are included and some things are folded into the bill automatically that will not be debated.

But I wanted to spend the rest of the time on my most serious objection to the way in which we proceed. That is the question of amnesty; 20 minutes are provided under the Lungren amendment, 10 minutes on a side. Within 3 to 5 years each alien who has been given amnesty will be eligible for citizenship. At that point in time under the legal immigration rules in th country every mother, father, sister, spouse of each and offspring thereof will be eligible for immigration into this country.

That has been referred to in a number of articles by a number of scholars as the impacting problem of chain migration. Michael Teitelbaum has referred to it as the "echo effect." The echo effect, the chain migration, the function of taking 10 million of those undocumented persons who are in this country, 65 percent of whom will come forward when a legalization program is offered, and then allow them to get their green card, then to become a citizen, then to bring in all of their other relatives, puts an explosion into the population control problem we face in this country of somewhere between 30 and 70 million new citizens within a 10-year period of time if this bill becomes law.

I think that costs of that to local governments will be severe and strain them indeed for education, for welfare and for other benefits that those folks would need. I think that because our economy is moving through such a rapid technological change, we are going to have to require greater amounts of education, and we cannot get that done.

So for those reasons, I am going to have to support the gentleman from Wisconsin and urge a "no" vote on the rule, and ask that you consider voting "no" on the bill itself.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule for two reasons: First, because the time has come to bite the bullet on immigration reform, and, second, this rule will permit 5 million, 8 million people to come out of servitude, out of the shadows, and this may be the last chance we have to do that.

Some of us Hispanic Americans have found it necessary to oppose passage of the immigration bill in the last Congress, while others chose to support it. But we are united in our concern about discrimination that could result from employer sanctions and the enactment of an abusive guest-worker program.

We think that the legalization provisions are sound in this bill. The elements of acceptable immigration reform, some believe are at hand. I hope we can support an immigration reform bill after this debate.

However, such a bill must contain the following provisions, virtually all of which have already been approved by the House Judiciary Committee and the Rules Committee.

First, the Frank amendment; this redress system for victims of discrimination passed the House by a vote of 404 to 9 in the last Congress. This provision is currently in the bill and reflects a compromise agreed to by the Senate in the last session of Congress. Further compromise cannot be permitted.

Second, sunset on employer sanctions; I share the concern about employer sanctions, that they might bring discrimination, that they might not work, that they might be burdensome on employers. Any legislation adopted by the House should contain a sunset provision. This is in the bill under the rule, the Garcia amendment. This measure is absolutely critical to ensure that Congress review the potential discriminatory effects of this program before permanently mandating a sweeping and untested new law.

Third, judiciary legalization. The legalization program approved by the committee contains a 1982 eligibility date. It is the only legalization program currently under discussion that is sufficiently generous and workable. It will free 5 million people from the shadows, from bondage. They deserve this treatment of earning their citizenship. It is time somebody stood up for them.

Fourth, foreign agricultural workers. Foreign agricultural workers should not be admitted to the United States without the following guarantees: First, that there be no adverse effects on American workers; that foreign agricultural workers may remain in the United States with guaranteed legal status; that agricultural workers will be afforded full protection under Federal and State constitution and laws. I believe that as flawed as it is, the Schumer compromise is the best we can get, and we should give it a try.

Fifth, Salvadoran and Nicaraguan refugees. The rule allows for a shot at this issue. Continued violence in El Salvador and Nicaragua illustrates the urgent necessity for enactment of this provision. Let us treat Salvadoran and Nicaraguan refugees the same way we treat everybody. And we need a new definition of political refugees.

This rule also contains in the enrolled bill a provision that is fair and just to Cuban political prisoners.

The bill also contains a provision that deals with border revitalization. The biggest problem we have is not having had a dialog with Mexico. Economic development at the border must take place to stem immigration. This provision in this rule allows for substantive legislation that deals with a better dialog with Mexico.

I urge support of this rule.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the rule is not all we might desire, but the opportunity to deal with the immigration even this late in the session overcomes the negatives.

My major concerns are with the farmworker provisions. The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] and I feel a distinct obligation to all of you who supported us in 1984 to bring you an agricultural program that meets both the needs of farmworkers and farmers.

This rule provides for and protects a compromise to be supported by the chairmen from both bodies all the way through conference. This seems to be the answer to one of the major arguments over immigration reform.

So I urge my colleagues to support the rule, and let us proudly, if not perfectly, get this immigration behind us.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the proposed rule controlling debate of H.R. 3810, the immigration reform legislation.

While I generally object to the use of House parliamentary procedure to defeat a piece of legislation, I must object to the rule in its present form as being too restrictive of debate on the issues and not being available in a timely fashion to Members for careful analysis.

The rule before us today was crafted late last night behind closed doors after virtually no testimony or input from many of us in this body which may have proven quite constructive in nature. On a major piece of legislation such as immigration reform, it is inconceivable that Congress would be forced to pass judgment on this measure under such severe time restrictions and in such a hurried manner. This is no way to conduct business and it is certainly no way to intelligently evaluate the variety of issues inherently raised by this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I must also object to the fact that although debate on this measure has already begun, Members have still not yet been provided copies of the legislation or the amendments we are supposed to be voting on. Thirty-two amendments, the contents of which many of us have not seen, are made part of the original text of the bill. This highly unusual procedure is in violation of the 3-day rule as well as the printing rule. These are not rules for the sake of having rules, but are instead designed to prevent situations exactly like this one in which legislation that no one has read gets pushed through at the expense of the public's right to a free and full debate.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to make one point, and that is immigration reform is easy to kill, hard to keep alive.

It will be very easy to vote "no" on a whole number of measures today and end our last chance to get fair, humane, decent, and real immigration reform. We can kill it one way, we can kill it another way, and we can kill it a third way.

But what I have seen in the last 2 weeks has been nothing short of utterly remarkable. I have seen people on both sides of the aisle, people from different parts of the country, people of different ideologies, age groups, and persuasions, pulling together because they did not want to let this bill die. The easy route would have been to just let things fall by the wayside as they were falling 2 weeks ago and then 1 week ago again. The easy thing to do would have been to say, I did not like paragraph 37(b), I am out.

That did not happen. The members of the Rules Committee, the members of the Immigration Subcommittee, the courage of my colleagues, Mr. BERMAN and Mr. PANETTA, the decency and desire for a bill of the gentleman from California, Mr. LUNGREN, and of course the leadership of the chairmen of the committee and the subcommittee, Mr. RODINO and Mr. MAZZOLI, kept this thing going.

We may not win today. There are a lot of pitfalls still left before us. But we have given it our best shot. And if we cannot do it, we can at least say that, in good faith, everyone tried.

To use the phrase of the gentleman from Kentucky, I truly salute all my colleagues. What they have done in the last 2 weeks and in the last year strengthens my faith in this country, in this Congress and in the American people.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, this is truly a joyous occasion for those of us who work for immigration reform. It has been kind of a rocky road to get here; some people have wondered whether the bill was really a corpse. I guess I described it to somebody as a corpse going to the morgue and on the way to the morgue the toe began to twitch and we started CPR again.

We are here, it is not the best way to be here, but let me just say what I have said on this floor 4 years ago and 2 years ago: As long as we attempt to achieve perfection on this floor we are never going to address immigration reform.

RON MAZZOLI and I have said many, many times that this is not a great bill but it is the best bill we can have. This is not a great rule, but it is the best rule we can possibly have.

I do not happen to think the agricultural approach is the best approach. But I do know that I cannot get the best approach up from my perspective. I know that for any number of reasons. I think the Wilson amendment is preferable, but I know I cannot get the Wilson amendment up here. We have discussed why many, many times.

So the question comes now: Can we do it in the last days of this Congress? In the last two Congresses immmigration reform has been defeated because of time. In a very paradoxical sense, immigration reform may come forward this time because of time. That is, we are in a pressure cooker now. People understand we need immigration reform. More and more Members talk to those of us on the committees involved and say to us, "We need immigration reform. People are talking about it back home." So now folks are in the mood to do it. Since we have a little bit of time, maybe we are not going to be dilatory. Maybe we are not going to be evasive. Maybe we are not going to put it off to some other time, some other day, some other Congress, some other administration.

Remember, what Congress often does is create a commission to study things and then we are going to act on those commission recommendations. That happened in the last administration. I made some partisan remarks about the Carter administration taking this tough issue and doing what Congresses and administrations do, creating a commission and making sure the commission reports after the next election. They did it. But what happened? This commission did good work. This administration took those recommendations and refined them and sent them here. But that commission submitted its report in 1981. Do we want to wait another 5 years?

I asked Members to go down to the border and see what is happening. We are having more violence on the border, we are having more Border Patrol officers assaulted, shot at. We are having more illegal aliens shot at, hurt. Illegal aliens hurting illegal aliens. American nationals hurting illegal aliens. Illegal aliens hurting American nationals and American citizens.

We have got to deal with the problem. The point is we can talk about it, and this is a talking body, there is no doubt about it. But at some point in time we need action.

This is not a perfect bill; this is not a perfect rule. I think we have most of the major amendments allowed here for debate. There are others I would have wished to be allowed; others I wished we could have had an individual debate. I did not get everything that I thought was best; I did the best I could.

I am asking Members on my side to join with the President in his quest to get immigration reform. He has asked us to have immigration reform. No President in the last 20 years has done more to have immigration reform than this President.

This is not precisely what he would draft; it is not precisely what I would draft; it is not precisely what the gentleman from Kentucky or the gentleman from New Jersey would draft, but it is what we have got before us. If we continue in our pursuit of perfection for a rule or a bill, we will defeat the best we can do.

All we are asking the Members for now is give us a "yes" vote on this rule. Do not vote down the previous question. Give us a vote on the rule so we can do the best that is available to us, so we can deal with a bill that is the best that is available to us. That is what I think folks back home expect of us.

We have gotten a reprieve because of other things that are keeping us here in this House. We have got time; let us use this time wisely. Let us deal with this bill.

I happen to think that we have done what is necessary to make the compromise in the area of agriculture workers acceptable. I have to swallow hard for a lot of it, and I will swallow hard, but it is necessary.

For those of you who want legalization I say this is the train. There is no guarantee we will have legalization next time. For those of you who do not like legalization let me just tell you, if we postpone it this time, we will be here 2 years from now and 4 years from now and we all know we will move the date up for legalization if we have it. So if you do not want more legalized, vote for the rule. If you want some legalized, vote for the rule. Let us get on with the business. We need a "yes" vote.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am an optimist by nature. I hope sometime it will become possible for the Rules Committee to craft a rule that will please, on every occasion, every Member of this House; that would be very gratifying, I can assure you, to the members of the Rules Committee.

We have already, I thought, achieved in respect to this bill, a remarkable unanimity. A little while ago we had the rule up on the floor which was defeated because of the bitter feeling there was over the Schumer amendment between Members of the House on both sides of the aisle.

We also had a bitter disagreement between the minority and the majority; they wanted some things that we were not able to give them, we thought, in the rule. The rule was defeated. Later on, due to the heroic and magnificient efforts of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and many of his colleagues, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and many others, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] and many others, they came to the Rules Committee and said, "We have been able to work out these differences; modification of the Schumer amendment. We brought the two parties together." So the Members of both parties of the Rules Committee met in the chairman's office before our formal meeting. We heard from Mr. LUNGREN, who has made a magnificient contribution. We heard from the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and finally the members of the Rules Committee agreed to go along with this agreement that had been worked out.

Now, it pained me when I came to discovery a little bit later I read the letter from Mr. GONZALEZ to the committee while we were in session. He wanted to be heard. We decided that since the essential agreement had been worked out we were pressed for time in the late afternoon, yesterday afternoon, early evening, that we did not think it was necessary to hear witnesses, but we went on and voted the rule out.

When I learned that my two beloved friends from California, Mr. ROYBAL, and from Texas, Mr. GONZALEZ, felt strongly about this matter, opposed to this rule, I felt very badly about it. I am sorry that they do not agree. But what a remarkable unanimity we do have between the parties and between the factions that have had differences over this matter.

With all my regrets to my distinguished friends, I hope there will be another opportunity when they can be fully heard. Maybe the changes can be made in the statute that will be agreeable to them, but we do need an immigration bill, I believe the majority of this House wants and immigration bill, this country wants an immigration bill. We have got a wonderful opportunity to have it now.

I hope this rule will be adopted and we can enact this measure.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi said it eloquently: If not now, when?

We are in a crisis; we have been in a crisis. In 1972 when this problem first began to fester, 200,000 undocumented aliens were apprehended trying to enter the country. Today, 1986, 14 years later, after having failed to address the problem, nearly 2 million undocumented aliens have been apprehended during this past year coming into the country.

The number who are not apprehended is unknown, though many believe that only one out of every three attempted undocumented entries are detected.

It is estimated, though there is no exact figure, that there may be as many as 8 to 12 million undocumented persons in the country. How can we live with this problem? How can we not address it? If we do not address it now, when?

The bill before us addresses the problem in two ways: One, by providing sanctions so that the employer who, up until now, has acted with impunity, will no longer be able to knowingly hire the undocumented person; two legalization, so that the millions who now live in servitude, as my friend, the gentleman from New Mexico, has described, will be given the opportunity to be eligible for lawful residency, and, if they choose, eventually citizenship.

It is a miracle that we have been able to bring diverse forces together to craft an agricultural compromise worthy of everyone's support. I hope that the previous question is not voted down, and I hope that the rule is adopted, and I hope that we have passage of this very critical measure today.

Mr. Speaker, all of us who have worked so hard for immigration reform were greatly disappointed when our recent efforts to get the bill to the House floor proved unsuccessful.

Rather than resign ourselves to letting the 99th Congress expire without a House vote on the immigration reform bill, I decided to convene a series of meetings to determine whether anything could be done to resolve the problems that prevented us from bringing this urgently needed legislation to the floor.

We have held a number of meetings, including discussions with Members of the other body. These were truly bipartisan meetings, and I was greatly encouraged by the spirit of compromise that characterized them. The key issue, of course, during these meetings was the agricultural worker issue. My colleagues will recall that the controversial nature of the guestworker program adopted by the House last year and the manner in which that program was treated in the previous rule was of deep concern to many of us. I had stated often that I could not support a bill with a guestworker program and for this reason, several of my colleagues attempted to work out an alternative approach which would ensure that those invited into this country to provide agricultural labor would be placed on the "road to citizenship."

However, it was apparent that the previous compromise worked out was not supported by this body because it granted immediate permanent residence to many of these workers.

As a result, last week we began to craft a new agricultural worker proposal which would continue to protect agricultural labor and at the same time accommodate the needs of western growers. The result is a modified agricultural program that I believe is worthy of the support of my colleagues not only in this body but in the other body.

Basically, while this new compromise postpones the acquisition of permanent residency, it still places these workers on the road to citizenship by granting a period of temporary residence followed by permanent residence. At the same time, these workers would be provided with the necessary rights to prevent against their exploitation.

Now, of course, the problem is one of time. With few days left in this term, we recognized that we cannot afford to consume inordinate amounts of floor time. Accordingly, I believe that only those amendments that are truly controversial should be debated and voted on. The rule now before us reflects that same philosophy and folds into the base bill additional noncontroversial amendments that were not folded in under the previous rule.

Mr. Speaker, there is no more time for delay. We have before us a fair and equitable rule that reflects the input of majority and minority Members alike.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] has 4 minutes remaining and the time of the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] has expired.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I do want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] a few moments ago when he called for a "yes" vote on the previous question and a yes vote on the rule.

Since the House, on September 26, failed to agree on a rule providing for consideration of H.R. 3810, a lot of water has gone over the dam and we come before you today with the result of hours and hours of discussion, a bipartisan rule and bill that is being supported by the minority, as well as the majority.

I urge a yes vote on the previous question and a "yes" vote on the rule.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to one last time urge my colleagues to vote for this rule, and I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON].

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to urge support for the rule and for the previous question and to join with the comments my friend from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] made sometime earlier in commending some of the Members around here for having brought this to us.

Especially, if I may say so, I commend the senior Members who wrestled with this problem for a good many years, in many instances: The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO], the chairman of the committee; the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI]; the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and if I may also say so, the gentleman from the other body from Wyoming, [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. Speaker, illegal immigration is a large and growing problem. It deserves our attention and our positive action this year. It can only be solved through the actions of the Congress and the longer we leave it unaddressed, the larger and more difficult the problem becomes.

Our response to the problem will be both less effective and less successful and less decent and less humane the longer we wait. So let us pass this rule, get on with the business of confronting in a serious and determined way, this most serious and pressing domestic issue.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule on the Immigration Control and Legalization Act, and urge my colleagues to defeat the resolution so we can bring the bill back to the floor with a rule which allows the Members of this House to address the key issues surrounding the immigration reform legislation.

Although there is general support for reforming our immigration laws, the legislation before us today fails to resolve the major problems which have led to the need for immigration reform—our porous borders and inadequate resources dedicated to alien interdiction programs. In addition, the legislation provides for the legalization of thousands of alien farm workers who have no ties to this country whatsoever, except for the fact that they have worked illegally in the U.S. agricultural sector for a limited period. Although the modified Schumer proposal is far better than the original, I cannot support a rule which does not allow amendments to this aspect of the legislation. I believe the Members of Congress deserve the opportunity to strike this provision which essentially creates a new amnesty program for farmworkers.

During Rules Committee consideration of H.R. 3810, I urged the committee to adopt a rule allowing me to offer a "triggered amnesty" amendment to delay legalization until a Presidential Commission determines that our borders are secure. The provision, similar to one included in the Senate bill, would adopt the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy's recommendation that legalization not proceed until appropriate enforcement mechanisms have been instituted. Despite the fact that the amendment would address many of the concerns which have been raised with regard to the bill, the rule does not provide for its consideration.

As you know, I am greatly concerned over the fact we are still a long way from bringing the border situation under control. Last year, the INS located 1,348,749 aliens in this country who were deportable under the Immigration and Nationality Act—millions more escaped detection. The Agency has an average of only one agent on duty for every 9.8 miles along the southern border. Only one out of every two or three illegal aliens who come across the border are apprehended, while one-third of the total apprehensions are repeat offenders.

No one knows for certain how many illegal aliens are already in this country, but estimates range between 3.5 and 10 million with more coming in every day. Indeed, we arrested our 1 millionth alien on May 25. In San Diego alone, we are averaging 1 arrest every 35 seconds. The INS estimates it will apprehend 1.8 million illegal aliens this year almost 5,000 per day—a 50-percent increase over last year's record level. During some periods, we have to stop the arrests because our holding areas are full.

It is clear that the INS and the border patrol have not been given the resources to address this serious problem. To fail to adopt the select commission's recommendations as part of the immigration reform package will only result in millions of more illegal aliens flooding across our borders and require Congress to confront the need for a second legalization program in the near future. I do not believe that the American people would support another blanket amnesty under these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, it is not too late to send this measure back to committee and to bring the bill to the floor with a rule which will allow us to address these major issues.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 299, nays 103, not voting 30, as follows:

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO] will be recognized for 30 minutes, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the following Members will be recognized for 7½ minutes each: The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA]; the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. MORRISON]; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD]; the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS]; the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN]; the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER]; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI]; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that the time allotted to both sides is all given to those proponents and the spokesmen in behalf, that those of us in opposition be permitted to be heard for equal time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to advise the gentleman from Texas at this time that the Committee of the Whole cannot entertain that request. The House has adopted the rule with respect to allocation of general debate.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, can the Chair advise what precise time it would be in order to make such request?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to advise the gentleman from Texas that that request should be made in the House and not in the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole is unable and cannot change the rule recommended by the Rules Committee that has been adopted by the House.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the measure before us.

Mr. Chairman, during each of the past two Congresses the Judiciary Committee has brought to the House floor legislation to reform our Nation's immigration laws. Over the past 5 years, in the Judiciary Committee alone, immigration reform legislation has been the focus of 23 days of hearings, during which we have heard testimony from over 250 witnesses. In addition, during that period, we have had 18 days of subcommittee and full committee markup, and during the 98th Congress, the House considered the bill for 7 days. Following that, House/Senate conferees met for 10 days in efforts to craft a compromise bill.

The bill before us today was favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee by a record vote of 25 to 10. The bill was then sequentially referred to six other standing committees, all of which considered it, and none of which adopted amendments fundamentally altering it.

Mr. Chairman, my purpose in reciting this brief history is to remind my colleagues that the legislation now before the House has been extensively analyzed and debated not only by the Judiciary Committee but by many other committees, and not only in this Congress but in five previous Congresses.

Despite this extensive analysis and debate, this bill, even with the non-Judiciary Committee amendments incorporated into it, remains essentially the same bill as the one approved by the House last Congress, as the one considered on the House floor in the 97th Congress, and, in fact, as the one approved by the Judiciary Committee way back in 1975. It is testimony, I think, to the reasonableness, the persuasiveness, and the urgency of the twin concepts of employer sanctions and legalization that despite the intense scrutiny given to the myriad immigration reform bills over these many years those twin concepts are still the cornerstones of the legislation we will be considering today.

In my opinion, there can be no true reform of our immigration policy unless those conceptually interlinked concepts are enacted, and should this bill at any time fail to include an effective sanctions program and a generous legalization program I will withdraw my support and actively oppose the bill's passage.

The arguments in support of employer sanctions are well known and I will not repeat them now. The concept of employer sanctions, which I devised in 1971, has received the wholehearted support of the past five administrations and was overwhelmingly endorsed by the bipartisan Presidential Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy. Quite simply, until the magnet that draws people here—jobs—is removed, we will never be able to effectively control our borders.

As I have said before, I do not believe that the passage of employer sanctions will result in discrimination against minority members. Nonetheless, I recognize that there is a genuine and sincere difference of opinion on this matter with some arguing that some employers who do not understand fully the requirements of our sanctions proposal will prefer to play it safe by simply not hiring anyone who they believe may not be here legally. For this reason, when the Frank amendment was separately voted on in this body 2 years ago, it was approved by a vote of 404 to 9. Accordingly, I am now convinced that just as employer sanctions is an essential element of immigration reform the Frank amendment is an essential element of employer sanctions.

With respect to legalization, I think it would be worthwhile to explain the policy judgments and concerns upon which our legalization program is based.

Best estimates place the number of undocumented aliens in the United States in the millions. Consider what it must be like to live in an undocumented status. Because every contact with a government official could result in the discovery of the individual's immigration status and since that discovery culd result in deportation, undocumented persons must keep all contacts with governmental authorities to an absolute minimum. This means that when their homes are burglarized they will think twice about calling the police. When their employer short changes them or doesn't pay them for overtime, or pays them less than minimum wage, they will complain to no one. When their landlords refuse to fix the plumbing or refuse to provide heat, they will feel helpless to rectify the situation.

I submit that having within our borders millions of people living under this dark cloud of constant fear is not in the best interests of the United States. Once it is known that an individual is incapable of asserting his rights, there will always be those who are all too ready to exploit their advantage over that individual. In short, we are talking about made-to-order victims, and until these individuals are either removed from the United States or legalized, this utterly unacceptable situation will continue to exist. The options, then, are deportation or legalization.

The first option, deportation, is really no option at all. First, any effort designed to even attempt to locate, provide hearings to, and then physically deport millions of individuals would cost billions of dollars. To understand just how extraordinarily expensive such an effort would be one must realize that in a typical year INS now is able to deport only about 20,000 individuals at a cost of several million dollars.

Second, and more important, any effort to implement such a massive deportation program would necessarily involve sending out thousands upon thousands of INS investigators to scour the country in search of undocumented aliens. Hundreds of thousands of business premises would be raided. Any individual on the street who "looks or sounds foreign" would be stopped and interrogated. It is inconceivable to me that an investigative effort of this magnitude could be conducted without violating the rights not only of undocumented aliens, but also legal aliens and U.S. citizens as well.

The third reason why deportation is not an option is that, in the case of longtime residents, deportation is unfair, and would be perceived as such by the public. The Legalization Program contained in the bill before us covers only undocumented aliens who have resided continuously in the United States since before 1982 or before. Many of these individuals have U.S. citizen children. Many work with U.S. citizens. Many have U.S. citizen friends who, as we often see in the context of private immigration bills, would be appalled to learn that their hardworking friend or neighbor is slated for expulsion from the United States. I therefore do not think it surprising that in a poll conducted by CBS News earlier this year fewer than one-third of the respondents said that the law-abiding, undocumented persons who have lived here several years should be deported from the United States.

It is no secret that the great obstacle to the enactment of immigration reform, in recent years, has been the foreign agricultural worker issue. As I have said many times before, in my judgment this issue has no relevance to the problem confronting us—the problem of undocumented persons coming to and remaining in the United States.

I am strenuously and irrevocably opposed to any massive guestworker program. Aware of my feelings on this issue the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN], and again, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] set about, over a year ago, to craft an agricultural program that would satisfy the requirements of the large western growers without sacrificing in any way the rights or hard-won gains of either foreign or domestic farmworkers. The solution they crafted was to allow the farmworkers needed to become immigrants, rather than bring them in as nonimmigrants.

Some viewed this proposal as overly generous and could not support it. As a result, we recommended our discussions and negotiations, taking into account the views of a variety of Members, majority and minority alike. Of invaluable assistance in this process were not only the gentlemen already mentioned but also the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT], the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] and, of course, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI]. We discussed that revised proposal with our Senate counterparts, and on the basis of their contributions revised the proposal once again. As before us today, this final proposal fully protects all farmworkers, provides the growers with the labor they may need, and should offend no one's sense of fairness or equity. It is a proposal I wholeheartedly support.

Mr. Chairman, before the year ends, INS will have apprehended a record number 2 million undocumented persons attempting to enter the United States. That is why it is absolutely essential that we act favorably on this most important legislation.

I am deeply concerned that if Congress does not meet its responsibility to put our immigration law and policy in order, we will soon see—as we are now witnessing in some areas of the country—increasing resentment against legal immigrants and refugees. I am fearful that unless action is taken to address the undocumented alien problem, the American people will forget their immigrant heritage and restrictionist pressures will grow.

Illegal immigration is not a problem that will simply go away. If we do not address it now, if we simply put our heads in the sand, we will allow a pressing problem to become an overwhelming problem. The American public is demanding action now. I hope this Congress does not let them down.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, momentarily I was on my feet just to be sure that when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO] our distinguished chairman, said he yielded back his time, not having yielded himself a specific sum, that he did not yield back the entirety of the Judiciary Committee time.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] is the designee of the committee, and serves in that capacity at this time.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the Chair. And I will be then recognized for the remainder of our time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, as many know, I have long advocated that it is critical we complete action on this immigration legislation before the end of this Congress. Our subcommittee completed action on the bill long ago; the Committee on the Judiciary completed its markup on this bill in June; the Senate finished its bill last year.

As was mentioned in the debate on the rule, we considered a measure much like this 4 years ago in the late hours of the lameduck session; we had a virtually complete open rule; as many as 300 amendments were filed; no limitation of time, and we ran out of time.

Two years ago, we dealt with this bill on this floor with a very fair rule. We had 69 amendments in order. We spent 10 days over 2 weeks working that out. We went into conference; we spent many days in 1 month trying to work out a conference, and we were unsuccessful.

In both of those previous Congresses, the Senate acted far before the House did. So it seems to me that the focus is on the House. If we are going to get a bill out, the House must act; we cannot wait any longer.

The administration has repeatedly expressed its support for immigration reform legislation, particularly the President has. He has made statements in past years and early this year met with Chairman RODINO of the Judiciary Committee, with Mr. FISH, with Mr. MAZZOLI, and myself, giving his support for immigration reform legislation, including support, I might add, for funding.

Many share my own view that already we have a crisis on our southern border. We have huge numbers of undocumented aliens crossing our borders daily. What we witnessed in the last years is a deterioration of any semblance of control over who may enter into our country.

Last year we had 1.2 million apprehensions of people who were here illegally. This year, apprehensions are running somewhere between 43 and 50 percent above last year.

By simple mathematical calculation, anyone can determine that we are going to have somewhere between 1.8 and 2 million apprehensions of illegal aliens this year. For every one apprehension that is made, Border Patrol officers will tell you somewhere between two and four successful illegal entries are made.

For Members who have been on the border recently, they can see how it deteriorates on a daily basis. Some members of my own delegation from California have been there more recently; as late as last week, and have told me about how it has even deteriorated from the last time I was down there.

The fact of the matter is, we have a crisis. It seems to have been recognized everywhere in the United States except in Washington, DC, on Capitol Hill, at least if you judge by the success of our attempts to have meaningful new legislation.

When you add up the numbers of people that come into this country illegally every year, on the low side this would amount to around 2 million people, or the equivalent of 4 new congressional districts on a yearly basis.

According to the San Diego Border Patrol—and they control only 66 miles out of the almost 2,000-mile border we have on the South; their apprehensions over the last 6 months, October to March, have risen by an incredible 48 percent over the same period a year ago.

More than 270,000 illegal entrants were arrested in just the 66-mile section that is under the control of the border control unit in San Diego. Of those illegal aliens, 6,500 were not from Mexico; were not Mexican nationals; but rather came from 55 different countries.

They not only are now coming from Central and South America; they are coming from Africa; they are coming from Asia; they are coming from Europe, both East and West; they are coming from every continent on the face of the Earth, but they find that coming through Mexico and through our southern border is a fairly easy transit today.

In the first 17 days of April we were averaging 2,451 arrests a day, a rate that led to more than 70,000 arrests for the month. That is just in that 66-mile section that is under the control of the Border Patrol for San Diego.

During this month, in the San Diego area, we are encountering an average of one undocumented worker, one undocumented worker picked up by the Border Patrol every 35 seconds. We know that we are locating at best only about half of the flow of illegal entrants.

The rest are making it past them, soon to join their compatriots throughout California and the rest of the country.

The numbers speak for themselves. They say more than any Member can say. The question is, what are we going to do about it? How bad does it have to get before we do something?

Elements that make up an immigration reform bill must be crafted to work in concert with one another. If we are going to demagnetize the attraction of unlawful entrance into the United States, we must have sanctions with respect to employers who knowingly—I underscore the word knowingly—hire those who are here illegally.

At the same time, if we have sanctions, we must not put those who have developed a dependency on undocumented labor in the position of either intensely violating the law or going out of business if they are unable to find a sufficient level of domestic labor.

It seems to me that is the reason we have to have some compromise in the area of agricultural workers. I do not particularly like what we have here; but it is the best we can get. I happen to think the Wilson amendment is a better, cleaner way to do it. I cannot get it. No one else can get it here. We have tried for 8 years. Are we going to try again? We can try for another 8 years, and we are still not going to solve the problem.

So yes, I have had to swallow hard, but I hope others will swallow hard in recognizing that it is necessary, as a result of the votes we have had on the floor, to do something in the area of agriculture.

The centerpiece of any comprehensive immigration reform bill, as I say, has to be sanctions against the employers who knowingly hire, refer, or recruit undocumented aliens for jobs.

But in addition to the control of our borders and in fact complementing that type of direct action on the control of our borders, in addition to having increased border patrol, there are humanitarian considerations supporting immigration reform that cannot be overlooked.

At present, undocumented workers are beyond the protection of our labor laws, or are afraid to report crimes. Many of us are undoubtedly familiar with the underground existence of the undocumented alien, and are not just using the term "underground" in a figurative sense.

Many of you have gone through areas of California, areas of Texas, areas of other parts of the Southwest of the Nation; you will find spider holes where people live in literally dug out dirt hovels, in which they may have an entrance that is no more than 3 feet. They get in there, they are about 1 to 3 feet below the ground; they actually are about where people are when they are buried, and they live there. They live in communities of thousands in southern California, with no water, with no amenities, using whatever is necessary; washing and drinking, using water that flows off the fields.

We have got to do something about that. If anybody believes, and I know some sincerely do, that we can round up every illegal alien that is here and send them home, I think they are sadly mistaken. We have to reach an accommodation with respect to those who have been here for a long time, and have roots in our community, and that means we have legalization.

There will be a motion to strike; I certainly respect the sincerity of the Member who is offering it and those who will support him, but I say please look at that carefully. I think you need a legalization of those folks who have been here for a long period of time.

The strange thing is, most people are against illegal aliens; most people will tell you to round them all up and send them home; but those same people will say: "By the way, Congressman LUNGREN, can your immigration subcommittee pass a private bill for this person I know down the street, for the woman who works in my house, for the children who go to school with my children, for the person in the church choir that I sing with; they don't happen to have papers. Will you do something for them?"

That is not schizophrenia; I think it is a recognization that most of the illegal aliens who are here are good people. They are humane people. They have come here to work, and when we know them, we in most cases like them and we will go out for them. But we know we have to do something overall about illegal immigration.

Let us reform the laws; let us have this bill brought forward; let us have the connection that I think is necessary between employer sanctions and legalization, and let us get on with doing the job we have to do.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

□ 1415

Mr. ROYBAL. I would like to get some information with regard to the contents of the bill. Can the gentleman tell us how much money is earmarked for the sole purpose of so-called protecting the borders, that is earmarked, not the overall amount but earmarked for the purpose?

Mr. LUNGREN. There will be an amendment that is in order to be offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD] to authorize a 50-percent increase for 3 consecutive years.

Mr. ROYBAL. But in the bill you do not have anything.

Mr. LUNGREN. As the gentleman knows, last year, and certainly being on the Appropriations Committee, he is one of the people who has helped us, last year we had the largest single increase in the Border Patrol in history. We did that as a showing of good faith that we were going to go forward and help bolster the Border Patrol. The administration went along with us. We had 1,000 positions. But talking with the people in the Border Patrol, they said, "That is fine, give us more people, give us more manpower, but if you do not give us employer sanctions, you're not giving us what we need."

Mr. ROYBAL. Again, the question is how much money is earmarked to remedy the situation that the gentleman is talking about? If he does not know the answer, I can give it to him.

Mr. LUNGREN. Well, I thank the gentleman. If the gentleman has the answer, then he does not need to know, does not need an answer.

Mr. ROYBAL. No, no, I would like to have the figures.

Mr. LUNGREN. I do not have the figures at my fingertips, and my time is limited. If I have more time, I will yield, and we can go into that.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman very much, and I thank the Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to join with a number of my colleagues in speaking in support of this legislation—H.R. 3810, the immigration reform bill.

Since the House on September 26, failed to agree to the rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 3810, the immigration reform bill, several of my colleagues and I have continued to meet in hopes of reconciling the controversial issues surrounding the agricultural labor provisions contained in the bill. Majority and minority Members in both the House and Senate have been meeting in close consultation to produce the agriculture agreement in the bill we have before us today. This agreement is the result of many hours of discussion on this issue with the hope of developing a compromise which would meet the major concerns of interested Members necessary for bipartisan support. As you can imagine, this has been no easy task. However, we continued to spend what little time we have still remaining in this Congress in these negotiations with one common objective in mind—that we complete immigration reform legislation this year before we adjourn.

We are at a time of crisis in the enforcement of our immigration laws. The public perception that immigration is out of control is, unfortunately, a correct perception. No legislation before this Congress is of higher priority. An immigration reform bill has been pending before Congress, in some form, for nearly 6 years since the select commission reported its findings and made its recommendations to the Congress. The Senate in three successive Congresses passed this legislation. If we fail to enact reform in this Congress, I fear that when a later Congress considers immigration reform, it will produce a bill which will be narrow and restrictive. It will be driven toward passage by what then will be the pent-up frustration of the American people.

I believe, then, that it is essential that we regain control of our borders if we are to have any hope whatsoever of avoiding a repressive public reaction that will fail to distinguish lawful immigrants and refugees from illegal aliens. At stake may be nothing less than a compassionate immigration policy. The American people in the face of an illegal immigration crisis should not lose sight of the fact that immigrants have been a great source of this country's strength, and refugees have made an immense contribution to our society. But huge numbers of illegal aliens rushing past our borders may have already started to blur that understanding.

I believe this legislation we have before us today contains the essential provisions needed to cope with illegal immigration. Most of us who have been intimately involved in the debate are firmly convinced that employer sanctions and legalization are necessarily intertwined, and that no bill can pass without a marriage of the two concepts.

Historically, the concept of employer sanctions has received the support of a number of administrations, has received favorable votes time and again in both Houses of Congress, and it is a view which was endorsed overwhelmingly by the diverse membership of the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy. In my opinion, it is the only effective option available to demagnetize the lure of jobs in the United States.

This legalization, finally, recognizes that substantial numbers of illegal aliens are here to stay and responds realistically and humanely to their plight. At the same time that we act with firmness to deter future illegal entry, we must display compassion in our treatment of those aliens who have become a part of our society. The conferral of legal status on undocumented aliens with years of U.S. residence will permit this population to come out of the shadows and contribute more to our country.

The select commission, by a 16-to-0 vote, favored a legalization program as part of its enforcement package. Precedents in U.S. law for legalizing the status of undocumented aliens can be found in the registry date—which serves as a statute of limitations on illegal entry—and the discretionary remedy of suspension of deportation.

In approaching legalization, we must attempt to strike an appropriate compromise between the views of those who would eliminate the legalization provisions entirely—and those who would provide lawful permanent resident status to those who only recently entered. A failure to provide a substantial legalization ignores the equities of persons who have lived in the United States for a number of years. A legalization that is excessively generous, on the other hand, may serve as too strong a magnet to further illegal flows.

Ultimately, without comprehensive immigration reform, we run the risk of losing political support for our historic humanitarian commitment to facilitating family reunification and offering haven to those fleeing persecution. When we bring family members together, and when we assist the victims of oppression to reconstruct shattered lives, we reaffirm our regard for basic human rights. This is the principle for which the United States has stood for many generations.

Chairman RODINO, along with Senator ALAN SIMPSON, Congressman MAZZOLI, Congressman LUNGREN and I, met with the President at the White House on the subject of immigration reform earlier this year. It was a very fruitful meeting and the President unequivocably lent his support to the adoption of immigration reform legislation. The Attorney General of the United States echoed this position when he appeared before the full Judiciary Committee in March.

Many of us who have worked long and hard to enact comprehensive immigration reform legislation, welcome the President's endorsement and applaud him and the Attorney General for assuming a leadership role.

Time is of the essence. Apprehensions along our southern borders have shot up dramatically in the first several months of 1986, as compared to 1985. As of September 30 of this year, the Immigration Service has apprehended 1.7 million undocumented aliens. This is almost double the amount apprehended in all of 1980, when the number of apprehensions was approximately 900,000 undocumented aliens. We are seeing aliens from many countries, not just from Mexico. In addition, as our maritime interdictions of drug trafficking continue to increase, more and more drugs are brought by land routes particularly across our southern border. Violence is also on the upswing. It is essential that we have immigration reform legislation enacted into law before it's too late—therefore, I am hopeful that we can give the President a bill to sign on immigration reform before the end of this year.

Mr. Chairman, I plan to offer an amendment to strike a provision in the bill which grants extended voluntary departure to Salvadorans and Nicaraguans.

This provision requires the General Accounting Office [GAO] to conduct an investigation, beginning within 60 days of enactment, concerning the number, conditions, and impact of displaced persons within El Salvador and Nicaragua, particularly those returned to these countries from the United States. In addition, this provision prohibits detention and deportation to El Salvador, Salvadoran and Nicaraguan nationals continuously present in the United States from the date of enactment until 270 days after GAO transmits its report.

I oppose this provision because I believe that granting such status is inappropriate for illegal aliens from El Salvador and Nicaragua. Repeated studies of the treatment and condition of deported Salvadorans have disclosed no persecution upon their return to El Salvador. The Intergovernmental Committee for Migration [ICM], meets every Salvadoran who has been sent home by the United States, and offers resettlement and counseling assistance. Since December 1983, ICM has assisted over 7,000 returnees and has not reported a single case of political persecution. In addition, we already have all the information requested by the GAO report.

Congress passed the Refugee Act of 1980, to supplant the piecemeal and nation-specific legislation for refugees, for example, legislation for Cubans, and so on. Prior to 1981, refugees were paroled into the United States following consultation with Congress. But, this provision that has now been added to the immigration reform bill circumvents this system by creating a special system for handling Salvadorans and Nicaraguans in the next 2 years while waiting for the GAO report. In addition, it raises the prospect that a stream of Salvadorans and Nicaraguans will illicitly enter the United States. Exactly what this immigration bill is trying to stop. I urge my colleagues to support me in striking this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of other controversial issues which must be resolved so as to achieve meaningful immigration reform. Any one of these issues could stall this important legislation. However, it is my hope that as we begin debate, Members will put the public interest above regional or special interests. This may be our last opportunity for comprehensive immigration reform before the problems at our borders preclude compassionate solutions rather than radical actions.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] yields back 1 minute.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, let me take note of the gentleman who is in the chair today, my distinguished colleague from Kentucky, who also presided 2 years ago and earlier than that on this bill.

I want to thank the gentleman for his willingness to take on this bill, this very difficult task, and to discharge it with the aplomb and skill I am sure he will discharge it with at this time.

Mr. Chairman, legislative action, in the form of H.R. 3810, the Immigration Reform and Control Act, must be taken for three very fundamental reasons:

First, to prevent the uncontrolled influx of undocumented aliens into the United States;

Second, to end the current exploitation of millions of aliens who live in a twilight subrosa society, afraid to come forward, because of their illegal status; and

Third, to preserve the humanitarian traditions and generous ideals of this country regarding the admission of legal immigrants and refugees.

Regarding the first objective, it should be noted that during the last 2 fiscal years over 1 million undocumented aliens were apprehended and expelled from this country—the highest number ever. During the current fiscal year, even that record level is being outstripped. In one night alone over 3,000 undocumented aliens were apprehended along the border in the Chula Vista area. No one knows how many passed through undetected.

The authority of Congress—indeed its responsibility—to regulate immigration derives from a source even higher than the Constitution. In fact, the Supreme Court has stated on numerous occasions that the control of immigration is an inherent power arising out of national sovereignty and existing without regard to any constitutional grant.

For Congress to ignore its responsibility in this area by failing to consider and enact immigration reform and control legislation is to ignore the very sovereignty upon which our Nation is based.

We cannot turn away from this monumental problem, simply because it is difficult to solve, simply because it is politically sensitive to deal with or simply because 1986 is an election year.

This Nation must exercise its sovereign right—and its sovereign responsibility—to control its borders and it must do so now.

If we fail to act, I am fearful that the continued existence in the statute books of our Nation's fair, humane, and generous programs for admitting legal migrants—immigrants and refugees—may be in jeopardy. The patience of a people—already strained—could end abruptly toward all entrants, not only those who enter illegally.

In addition to the uncontrolled influx of undocumented aliens nightly, millions are already in this country. These persons live in a subrosa, twilight society. They are vulnerable to exploitation because of their illegal status. Unscrupulous employers prey on their fear of discovery and use threats of deportation to quell complaints about treatment, working conditions, and pay.

That is why we need immigration reform. Now I will turn to why we need H.R. 3810.

H.R. 3810 seeks to solve our Nations' immigration problems through a package approach. I assert that enforcement and interdiction efforts alone cannot control U.S. borders. Employer sanction provisions alone cannot. Legalization alone cannot. The solution can only come through a combination of these elements. H.R. 3810 contains just such a combination which could—and I think will—bring order and control out of the present chaos.

The critical elements of H.R. 3810 are these:

First, the bill imposes penalties on employers who knowingly hire undocumented aliens. This provision will terminate the lure—money and jobs—which attracts undocumented aliens from across the border by the billions.

These people do not come to the United States for our spectacular vistas, our climate, or our clean air. They come to work and to improve their lot in life. As long as work is available, they will continue to come, and, as many have pointed out in hearings before my subcommittee, even an army along our border will not stop the flow if jobs await them in the United States.

Contrary to what opponents of the bill have suggested, employer sanctions in H.R. 3810 are not discriminatory. Employers must verify the employment eligibility of all applicants not just those who wear ethnic attire or who speak accented English or the like.

In addition, the bill contains a specific provision aimed at preventing any unintended discrimination and at remedying any which might occur.

Also contrary to what opponents of the bill have said, nothing in the bill establishes a national identification card.

To ensure that a person is authorized to work, the employer, under H.R. 3810, would simply ask the job applicant to present a commonly possessed identification document such as a Social Security card, driver's license or alien registration card. And, such identification can only be requested at the time of hiring and only by an employer—never by any other officials. Without a verification procedure, sanctions cannot be implemented nor will they be effective.

Another integral part of this immigration control package is a program to deal with the millions of undocumented aliens now living in the United States, some of whom have been here for many years. Devising such a program has been one of the most difficult challenges faced in crafting this bill.

It became clear to our subcommittee early in the development of a reform bill that the United States had neither the personnel nor the resources—nor probably the national will—to conduct a massive deportation of all persons here without proper papers.

For my part, even were there the personnel, resources and will, I do not feel a deportation of every undocumented person would be humane, generous or in keeping with the tradition and spirit of our land.

Well, if we don't deport them, what do we do with them? We establish—as H.R. 3810 does—a carefully controlled, case-by-case legalization program for those undocumented aliens who can prove they have been in the United States since January 1, 1982.

This is not a wave of the hand blanket amnesty, as some have suggested, but a case by case carefully controlled legalization program.

Each applicant for legalization will have to establish that he or she has been a positive contributor to society, and has not violated any major criminal laws. Each individual seeking to be legalized must meet the same standards and pass the general grounds for exclusion as those who today legally enter the United States.

It should be noted that individuals applying under this legalization section, if successful, will become temporary resident aliens only, not U.S. citizens. They can adjust their status to permanent residence only after living 1 year in the United States in good character and after demonstrating basic citizenship skills.

Even then, each permanent resident alien will have to wait at least 5 years before applying for citizenship, during which time the applicant must live a blameless life. Under H.R. 3810 the newly legalized resident aliens would be ineligible for welfare benefits for 5 years except in case of emergency medical care and aid to the blind, aged, or disabled.

Third, the bill contains provisions concerning agricultural labor. Despite all the hoopla and attention given these provisions of late, the Agricultural Labor Program is merely one aspect of the bill, a small aspect at that, in my opinion. It certainly is not a critical element in solving our illegal alien program.

I opposed the Schumer-Berman-Panetta compromise at the Judiciary Committee markup—we were urged to accept the compromise without so much as the change of a jot or title because to alter the compromise was to destroy it and the bill itself.

Once, however, the compromise left the committee and was subjected to public scrutiny and careful study, the multitudinous and serious flaws, which I tried to point out to the committee, came to light and produced a veritable firestorm of opposition and concern.

I am still uncomfortable with the dual premises of the compromise to grant temporary or permanent residence to agricultural workers, to benefit the workers, and to guarantee growers a ready supply of nondomestic replenishment agricultural workers, to benefit the growers.

However, the Rules Committee, pursuant to my request, and in response to the firestorm of concern over the agricultural labor compromise, folded into the bill five separate amendments I authored which cure—or at least open to fuller cure in conference—the most egregious flaws in the Schumer-Berman-Panetta compromise. These brought the compromise more into line with the underlying premises of our original bill.

In several discussions over the past few days the agricultural labor provisions have been even further modified and altered and made more realistic.

I still am not totally comfortable with this, but it is infinitely more workable and less preferential than what the Judiciary Committee reported.

Finally, H.R. 3810 strengthens INS enforcement and service to the public efforts by authorizing supplemental resources and makes several other changes to strengthen the existing Immigrant and Nationality Act.

These then, are the main provisions of H.R. 3810.

This bill did not originally spring full blown from the fevered brows of RON MAZZOLI and AL SIMPSON—it, from the start, has reflected the insight and recommendation of hundreds of experts and lay people.

It specially reflects the work and wisdom of Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, CSC, president of my alma mater Notre Dame University, who headed the Special Commission on Immigration Reform and whose 1981 magnum opus on the subject forms the outlines of the bill before this body today.

To its everlasting credit and its remarkable resiliency, the Simpson-Mazzoli bill today—6 years after its drafting—contains the exact same major components as it did at the start. They have been modified but they retain their original form. This is added reason to adopt this measure. It has stayed the course.

As I have said often and repeat in concluding my remarks today: The Simpson-Mazzoli bill may not be a perfect bill, but it is the least imperfect bill extant. It deserves to become law.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER].

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, it grieves me to rise in opposition to the bill that is presently before us because I have spent a considerable amount of time laboring in the vineyards of the Immigration Subcommittee to try to craft a bill that is true immigration reform. Unfortunately, this bill is not immigration reform. It is amnesty for literally millions of illegal aliens masked in the cloak of protecting the borders of the United States.

As I pointed out in my debate on the rule, there are three types of amnesty offered in this bill. There is the regular legalization program, which has been around since the bill was first introduced in 1981; there is the Moakley-DeConcini amnesty for Salvadorans and Nicaraguans. There is the Schumer amnesty for agricultural workers.

Now, this is a far cry from the original Hesburgh Commission report that tied employer sanctions with a tightly drawn legalization program, a two-tier program where people who have not been in the United States a long period of time received temporary residency status, and those who have been in for a much longer period of time received permanent status which led to citizenship. Furthermore, with the adoption of the Garcia amendment by the Rules Committee, the employer sanctions which I support and which I feel are a necessary ingredient to shutting off the magnet, are sunsetted. So what we have, when this bill passes and plays out in 5 years, are no employer sanctions left but millions of people who are on the road to citizenship and will be eligible for public assistance and free public education because they are here under color of law.

Now, that is going to be very costly not only to Federal Government taxpayers but also to State and local government taxpayers, and we really have not solved the problem once the employer sanctions disappear.

So contrast the bill that is before us with the original Hesburgh provision recommendations, the employer sanctions have been weakened and sunsetted, but the amnesty has become more generous by turning the two-tier amnesty into a one-tier amnesty and then adding the two additonal classes of illegal aliens that would be amnestied in under the Moakley-DeConcini provisions as well as under the Schumer agricultural labor provisions.

□ 1430

Honestly speaking, I think that we would far better serve the public by going back to the very beginning, by dealing with the bill that controls our borders and deals with legal as well as illegal immigration, rather than having this bill turned into an agricultural labor bill which is the way it has evolved in the last 2½ to 3 years.

I think that the bill is not going to close off our borders to illegal aliens. It is a very expensive ticking timebomb which will increase the hostility toward aliens among many parts of the public, which I believe would be unfortunate.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield, for purposes of debate only, 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply say that this is a very difficult bill. I would not support this direction that we are taking today except for one thing, and that is it is clear to me that the risk of discrimination acclaimed by the opponents of this bill pale against the existing and growing discrimination against Hispanic Americans resulting from unbridled, illegal immigration into this country. That will not stop unless we stop illegal immigration.

I only have time to mention two segments of the bill. An amendment will be offered to strike the very limited criminal penalties that are in the bill at the present time.

I want to make this point. This bill allows three bites at the apple for one who continues to hire people who are not citizens of this country, and penalizes them civilly only. Only a person who is convicted of a pattern of practice could be found criminally liable under this bill and sentenced to 6 months in jail, and that does not apply to paperwork. It should be made very clear that those provisions do not apply to paperwork. I urge the Members to reject any effort to eliminate the very limited criminal penalties that are in this bill.

Second, an amendment will be offered to exempt people from the employer sanctions who hire three or fewer employees. It is called the Beverly Hills amendment. I strongly urge the Members to reject that amendment as well.

The purpose of this bill is to announce a single and clear message to the world that you should not come here expecting to find a job because, when you get here, you will find that it is illegal to hire you. Do not come here expecting to find a job because, when you get here, you will find that it is illegal to hire you.

The Beverly Hills amendment says, "Come on in anyway. Come live in the shadows, and maybe you can get one of those very rare jobs in which the employer only hires three or fewer people." That is a cruel invitation that is wrong for the United States of America to offer. We should not invite people to come here and live illegally so we can have maids and so we can have servants. We ought to send a consistent message to the world, "We have established a policy that only those people who are here legally will be allowed to have a job in the United States."

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think that every one of us who have debated this issue realizes that the guts of this legislation, the critical point behind it all, is that in order to control our borders, we simply have to make it illegal for an employer to knowingly hire an illegal alien. We have got to end the magnet of coming to this country to get a job. The economies of other parts of the world, particularly some of our neighboring countries, are such that it is just too inviting to come over here and be able to get a job and work in the United States and stay here illegally, for us to be able to control our borders and to stop people coming in here illegally with the normal procedures for patrol and guarding, and so forth, that have been going on over the years. I strongly support that provision.

The only question, the only real issue to be debated, is one of whether we have to put other baggage on to that provision in order to get it passed and into law.

Some say we have to. But it particularly concerns me and grieves me that we would legalize millions of those here illegally, and I think quite unnecessarily, in the name of some kind of balance and necessity to get the law passed. It is called employer sanctions to make it illegal to hire people who are here illegally.

I am going to offer an amendment when the opportunity presents itself, as I have done in previous Congresses, to strike from this legislation the so-called amnesty or legalization provisions. It seems to me it is very unfair, unfair particularly to have legalization in this bill, unfair particularly to those who stand in line and have stood in line for years and years by the thousands to come into this country in a legal fashion, whatever country they are from, in Europe or any other part of the world. Therefore, the legalization that we are putting in this bill for the illegals is dead wrong on a fairness ground.

Second, it is wrong to have legalization and reward lawbreakers, and that is exactly what those illegals here today are. As much compassion as we may have for individual cases, they are breaking our laws, laws that say you have to go through certain particular procedures to come here.

Last, but I think the most important reason why we should not have legalization, why my amendment to strike it should be voted for, is that by passing a legalization provision, a date like January 1, 1982, where you grant the equivalent of blanket amnesty—we can fudge about the term, but that is basically what it is—to everybody who has been here for any time since that date, by doing that, we are in effect sending a signal to those across the border to come over here and try to get the fraudulent documents necessary to get to stay here. And to others who might not be willing to try the fraudulent route, we are saying we have done it once now, we will probably do it again. I think that is a horrible magnet message to be sending out.

We have in this country today—what?—20 million illegal immigrants? I do not know the number. A lot of people say it is less. But we have been talking about lesser figures for years, and we have been talking about 2 million coming in 1 year and, by my arithmetic, there are at least 20 million. If, as somebody has estimated, 64 percent of those who are here illegally come forward for legalization and there are seven relatives for every one who comes forward who will be legalized in the next 10 years after this program starts, we are talking about adding 90 million new Americans to the rolls of citizenship in this country in the next 10 years—90 million. That is too many for us to absorb and assimilate in the timeframe when we have a country of 240 million right now.

What happens if the people are denied this legalization and we put in employer sanctions? What happens to the illegals? Most of them are going to go back when they cannot get a job. Not everybody is cut off. If you have a job right now illegally, you get to stay in that job. But most of them will go back. Nothing is going to happen to them.

But for those who have been here since since January 1, 1976, even by adopting my amendment to strike legalization, they will be able to stay if the Attorney General says so under his discretion, because we have moved up the registry date from 1948 to 1976. I think that is appropriate.

For the rest of this bill, I am as concerned as anyone else about the Salvadoran question. I do not think we have any business granting extended voluntary departure. I hope that the Fish amendment is adopted. It is wrong to give that. The people who are here illegally now from El Salvador can return peacefully to that country. I think the debate will show it.

The Schumer amendment that we discussed at some length earlier, I think it is a very bad provision on agriculture in this bill, because it is a second amnesty. But I am not going to go into the details of why that is so bad.

Last, but not least, I am disappointed not to have the opportunity to strike from the bill—and I hope the other body will take care of it in conference—the provisions that grant for the first time the opportunity for Legal Service Corporation lawyers to get into the business of aiding H-2 temporary workers who really already have all the contract legal services that they need. It disappoints me that the Rules Committee and some of my colleagues did not permit this body to work its will on that issue to debate the question of what Legal Services' taxpayer-paid lawyers have, what business they have, in providing free legal assistance to those who are here under that H-2 temporary worker program, when we have so many of our own citizens today in this country who cannot afford the lawyer that they need.

I hope my colleagues deliberate seriously this legislation. We need the employer sanctions.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOUCHER].

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of immigration reform legislation, and I want to commend my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee, both on the majority and minority side, for bringing this compromise before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to spend the few minutes I have detailing one section of the bill which is noncontroversial—the reforms of the H-2 program.

I was pleased to work actively with the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] in crafting these provisions. In cooperation with the interested parties, we reached a useful agreement.

The H-2 compromise balances the competing interests of growers of nonperishable crops, domestic farmworkers and foreign H-2 workers.

The compromise protects the priority for domestic workers in temporary agricultural jobs.

It streamlines and codifies much of the existing H-2 program which has existed largely in regulation since its inception, thereby making it more workable for H-2 growers.

And, perhaps most importantly, I believe it helps move immigration law reform forward by removing what may have been a contentious issue and giving Members a reason to vote for the bill.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3810 as amended, and I am including in the RECORD with my remarks a brief summary of the H-2 compromise:

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE H-2 PROVISIONS OF THE IMMIGRATION BILL

A. Foreign workers will not be brought into the country unless U.S. workers are not available to take the jobs.

B. Workers who are hired through the program cannot depress the wages and working conditions of U.S. workers.

1. This means H-2 workers get certain benefits—reimbursement for transportation costs, a meal allowance, a guaranteed contract, protection under workers' compensation, and housing.

2. With specific respect to housing, the compromise requires employers either to provide their own housing or to rent housing for the workers on the open market.

C. The compromise requires that a notice be circulated throughout the country about availability of jobs, and that employers do additional recruitment when the Secretary of Labor finds there are able, willing, and qualified workers in a traditional area of labor supply.

D. The compromise makes clear that growers can join associations to use the program, and that there are penalties for abusing the program, including being barred from it. It also clarifies where liability lies for various forms of association.

E. The compromise sets a more reasonable time before the harvest when growers should apply—no more than 60 days before the date of need—and encourages the Secretary of Labor to act on all applications promptly so that recruitment can be carried out fully.

F. The compromise contains a modified form of the so-called 50-percent rule, which is currently in regulations, which requires employers to continue to hire domestic workers after the harvest is started and the H-2 employees have already entered the country. The amendment language provides that after 3½ years, Congress can either take appropriate action to continue, end, or modify the 50-percent rule, or else the Secretary of Labor shall promulgate regulations in this area balancing both the preference for domestic workers and the costs to employers of the 50-percent rule.

G. The amendment authorizes money for the Department of Labor to step up recruiting of domestic workers and to monitor compliance with the program.

H. The compromise contains the language agreed to in conference 2 years ago that gives overall regulatory approval to the Attorney General and supporting roles to the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, the House has an historic opportunity today to do something which really should have been done years ago. We did pass an immigration bill previously in 1984, unfortunately, the conference broke up over the administration's desire to impose a cap for reimbursement costs and for States like Florida, California, and others that would have been terrible, inappropriate thing to do.

We have now been granted an additional chance to do the right thing for this country. Let me take a slightly different tack in the short period of time that I have.

You have heard and will hear from all the other speakers what is right and what is wrong about this bill. But what is something that will very rarely be told is the truth about what it is costing America by having all these illegal aliens here not paying taxes, drawing Federal services, drawing State and local services which the taxpayers of America are paying for.

The program of legalization, and it is not amnesty; nobody gets blanket amnesty, nobody has a magic wand waved over them; they have to apply, they have to qualify, they cannot be automatically excludable under the laws that exist even now. They must affirmatively come forward. They are today taking the jobs of Americans and getting paid off the books.

They have no protection under the law. They do not get protection by the employers who are exploiting them. They do not pay taxes to the United States. They do not have payroll taxes paid for them. In the end, that is draining every year over $100 billion in revenue at the State, local, and Federal level from the tax money which could be used to do other things, including reducing the deficit.

By making these people come forward out of the shadows, out of that subrosa economy, we are going to help the United States.

The second thing this bill does is give us the ability to enforce our laws once and for all, to take them out of a melange of laws that are inappropriate, ineffectual and not being enforced correctly, the dedication to start doing the right thing for this country. To seal our borders and protect this country from illegal aliens.

We must pass this bill in this form.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BADHAM].

Mr. BADHAM. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, first I wish to commend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI], and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] for their tireless efforts in putting forth terribly, terribly necessary legislation for the furtherance of this country and its society.

Mr. Chairman, today, I rise in support of this bill only because it is at least one step toward the day when we as a Congress take seriously the problem of illegal immigration. However, I hasten to add that this piece of important legislation has been watered down and softened by the amendment process to the point that it is a bit crippled.

The situation along our border with Mexico at present is almost completely out of control. It must be dealt with aggressively, directly, and very soon before it is too late to reverse. Unfortunately, a majority of this body either does not share my views or refuses for political reasons to address it as a high priority.

My own position on this issue was stongly reinforced during a recent visit to the San Ysidro/San Diego border sector with Harold Ezell, regional commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, along with the Chief of the Border Patrol, Alan Eliason. I saw first hand thousands of illegal aliens crossing into the United States virtually unimpeded by the threat of arrest, or fear of the ruthless bandit gangs that roam the border areas to murder, rob, and assault them.

I watched from the ground and from a helicopter as scores of men, women, and children gathered in open fields on our side of the border to meet the guides who would take them north. I spoke with a large group of illegals and learned from them how easy it is to come into our country without documentation. As I looked through night vision binoculars, I saw dozens of people dart through our porous border fence, across a darkened riverbed into a suburban San Diego County residential area.

Senior Border Patrol officers readily concede that they do not have nearly enough manpower or enforcement technology to cope with the annual influx of more than 1 million illegal immigrants in the San Diego sector alone. For every one apprehended, another makes it safely into the United States. Most of those arrested and sent back to Mexico are back across the border within a matter of hours.

One guest on my recent border tour was a second generation Hispanic city councilman from Santa Ana whose parents entered this country illegally many years ago. He strongly supports quick and decisive action to control the present flood of illegals into this country because he and I know that eventually, our economic structure will not be able to support them. We already are dangerously close to the saturation point with regard to the types of nonagricultural employment generally sought by illegal immigrants.

Mr. Chairman, the real keys to worthwhile, effective immigration reform fall into two basic categories—economics and enforcement.

The economic issues are varied and complex. Most of those coming here illegally are merely seeking a better life for themselves and their families, fleeing the struggling economies south of the border. Ironically, many of those now entering illegally would have crossed the border routinely and legally only two decades ago to work during peak agricultural seasons under the now-defunct "bracero" program.

Solutions to such economic problems are not easy. We must redouble our efforts as a nation to help revitalize the economies of our southern neighbors to encourage their citizens to stay at home to earn their livings. To provide a disincentive for those who do continue to enter illegally to seek employment in the United States, any solution must at least involve stiff and prohibitive sanctions on those who knowingly hire illegals. At the same time, however, we must provide a stable work force to sustain our vital agricultural industry by instituting a new and carefully monitored guest-worker program.

In the area of enforcement, our Border Patrol needs new resources to perform its job more effectively and to eliminate the threat posed by those who bring drugs and other crime into our country. New law enforcement technologies must be applied and additional manpower must be provided, particularly if we institute new employer sanctions and a controlled guest-worker program. Any amnesty provision for illegals who already are in this country must be strictly limited, with eligibility based upon demonstration of a working knowledge or the English language and desire to become a productive contributor to the economy.

Each year for the past 5 years, I have cosponsored legislation to undertake a major reform of our present inadequate immigration system. Each year, my colleagues in the other body have acted quickly and decisively on reform bills but each year, this House has moved to block meaningful and effective reforms. Obstacles have been thrust in our path that have, unfortunately, annually prevented us from taking meaningful action to address this crisis.

This year, we have made another attempt but again, steps have been taken to soften the reforms by the introduction of amendments that will render some of the tougher provisions of the bill almost ineffectual. While I will support this bill as the only reform vehicle before us, I will continue to press hard for real reforms that address the kind of problems I have seen personally at our border with Mexico.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise, since I was not able to interject my remarks during the time the two immediate predecessor speakers spoke, I want to remind the gentleman and my colleagues that the President's Economic Report says that the presence of these aliens is beneficial economically to the United States. I think the Members ought to bother to read the President's Economic Report that he handed to us a few months ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the Members that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] has 16½ minutes remaining; the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] out of the time allotted to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. GARCIA. I thank both gentlemen for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, we are debating the Rasputin of legislation today. It will not die, no matter the circumstances or changes made, and while I, again, have reservations concerning this legislation, I cannot be anything but amazed by the continuing saga of immigration reform in this body.

I would be remiss, if I did not take a moment to commend the distinguished chairman of the Immigration Committee for his efforts to accommodate all of us who have concerns regarding the legislation before us.

What makes this particular bill so vital is not only its impact on the flow of immigrants to this country, but how we as a nation perceive that flow, whether or not we consider it to be beneficial to the building of the United States or whether or not we believe that the flow must be stopped—at all costs.

I have thought long and hard about this issue and about this bill. I want to emphasize from the start that I am in agreement with the framers of this legislation on one crucial point: We need immigration reform. Yet, that reform cannot come at the expense of any group, community, or branch of Government; whether or not it is Hispanics, blacks, or Asians; whether or not it is small or large businesses; whether or not it is State or local governments. Reform must be fair, as well as realistic.

I have several problems with this bill, but, again, my primary concern centers around employer sanctions—that provision in the bill which would fine employers for hiring an undocumented person. At face value, one might ask: What's wrong with sanctions? Shouldn't it be illegal to hire persons who are here without proper documents? In a word, No. I say no. Because in our zeal to slap the hands of those who would hire undocumented persons, we are also setting up a situation where employers would rather not hire a person of color because of the risk of a fine.

It's not the bigots that concern me; they will always find a way to discriminate. No; it's the ordinary small businessperson who isn't going to take any chances. They can't afford to. That is why we must, at all costs, maintain, the antidiscrimination provisions in this bill. We must fight back any attempt to eliminate or alter those provisions.

Another aspect of this bill troubles me. This legislation does not take into consideration foreign policy concerns. It attempts to deal with immigration reform, not at the border, or before the border, where the problem begins, but over the border, where enforcement is much more difficult and much less permanent.

There is a provision in this bill, however, which at least recognizes the effect that our foreign policy has on the flow of refugees to this country. It is that section that would extend extended voluntary departure status to Nicaraguan and Salvadoran refugees until such time as the turmoil in their nations has quieted. Again, any attempt to strike this provision from the bill would greatly weaken the overall legislation.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, as I and so many others before me have said, this is a nation of immigrants. There is not one of us in this Chamber who cannot trace their ancestry, at least part of it, to another part of the world.

We are the product of adventurers, reformers, castoffs, and slaves. Yet, we have beaten the odds and defied those who turned their backs on our ancestors by creating this, the greatest Nation in the world, a nation not built on royalty or aristocracy but on pride and heart. We have been able to create such a great Nation because our Nation, as symbolized by the Statue of Liberty, has been receptive to the flow of immigrants. We have not been afraid to open our doors.

We are not a homogenous nation, thank God. When I go back to New York City, my home, I can go around the world just by moving from neighborhood to neighborhood. I can hear the music of my heritage playing on the streets of the South Bronx—the Salsa beat makes me feel at home in my barrio, my neighborhood. I can go across the bridge and hear a different but just as energetic music, American jazz, and if I listen closely enough, I can feel the music's African roots. Or, I can go downtown and to Little Italy or Chinatown and have some of the best Chinese or Italian food to be found anywhere in the world.

I can get a corned beef sandwich at any of the thousands of Jewish delis in the city. I can also have a great conversation about the state of world affairs with a Russian, West Indian, or Israeli cabdriver—all immigrants to this land of promise. New York City has a Jewish mayor; the State has an Italian Governor. I personally think that's what makes the city and State so great, the fact that we are so culturally rich.

I don't want us to become smug or insular in our attitude toward the infinite variety of cultures and people who want nothing more than to come here to contribute the building of our great Nation.

We must remain in control of our borders, but I believe that in order for this Nation to continue to be dynamic and first among the world's democracies, we must not forget our humble roots. We must not fear the next generation of immigrants. We must, instead, embrace them. If we give in to our fears and pass a bill that is discriminatory or nativist. Then it's the Nation that will finally lose.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARCIA. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the gentleman that the recent orgy that we had over at the Statue of Liberty should emphasize that that Statue never looks south. We do not have that Statue of Liberty to greet the humble masses. It is over here, and I want to remind the gentleman that the issue has to do with that.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, in closing, I would like to again thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for getting the sunset provision into this legislation. I think this is important because there is no question in my mind that we are going to find that sanctions will prove to be discriminatory against people of color and of race.

That is why I want to thank all those concerned for putting the sunset provision in the bill because at least in 6½ years we can come back and review the amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARCIA. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I assure the gentleman that it will not be that long before we will have oversight of those very provisions, and I invite the gentleman to join with us.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes of the time alloted to the Committee on Education and Labor to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for a total of 5 minutes.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank very much both the chairman of my subcommittee and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] for yielding me the time to go through some of my reasons for changing my position from 2 years ago and supporting the bill that is before us now.

I say that with apprehensions and concern, for some of the criticisms of this legislation before us now must be given attention by this body. The fact is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is correct. A mythology has developed about the harm to our country's economy because of the presence of undocumented workers. The fact is, that with respect to taxation, work and productivity, many of these undocumented workers are contributing a great deal in a great many places to the strength of our economy, not to the detriment of it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I did not say that; the President's Economic Report says that.

Mr. BERMAN. Notwithstanding the loss of credibility in the source of the argument, I still think it has a great deal of merit.

Second, the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL] speak of the problems inherent in the employer-sanctions concept. The employer, sanctions concept is a good concept, if we want to regulate and rationalize illegal immigration. The present system has not done it. Perhaps, at least in concept, hopefully in reality, the existence of employer sanctions taking away the magnet will work to do that.

But we have to deal with two separate questions involved in employer sanctions, the effectiveness of those sanctions. We are, in some fashion, turning over the enforcement of our immigration laws to the hundreds of thousands, even millions, of employers in this country. Second, when an employer, particularly one who does not have elaborate personnel and legal departments, is faced with the potential of civil and criminal penalties, that employer, for totally nonracist reasons, may, when in doubt with respect to the legal status of an applicant, decide to protect himself by excluding that applicant.

But the bill attempts, hopefully very effectively, to deal with that in two ways: First, a meaningful and strong antidiscrimination remedy, which I suggest perhaps will be stronger and more effective than the ones that now exist under title VII for discrimination based on race, religious, and national origin; and second, by the inclusion of the sunset which forces us to look at the effectiveness of employer sanctions, and the questions of whether or not discrimination is a byproduct of employer sanctions and compels us to revisit that issue.

Those two provisions in the bill, I think, on balance, with all of the other provisions of this bill which make it such better legislation than it was 2 years ago, justify taking action that I think the American people do want.

Many feared that the legalization program was going to be an empty promise, that people would be drawn into applying for legalization and then an attorney general or an INS director who did not really want to go through that legalization process would exercise his discretion to deny legalization status.

The gentleman from Kentucky, through his own amendment in subcommittee, has dealt with that concern by taking away that discretion. If an individual meets the criteria set forth in the statute, that person would be legalized. The ability to entrap someone into revealing his or her identity in order to then be excluded because that discretion was abused and exercised arbitrarily has been vastly reduced by the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

On the agricultural issue, the fact is that if this Congress is going to accede to the very extraordinary and special request of western agriculture for treatment unlike any other employer or industry in this country, at the very least, let their workers have a legal status which allows them to bargain collectively, to grieve against abuses, to exercise the ultimate leverage in the marketplace, which is to leave that marketplace and that industry if the employer is violating his promises, his contract, providing conditions which are miserable.

Finally, the legislation includes something which I think is very important. It is a slightly tangential issue, but compelling nonetheless. By its inclusion of the Moakley-DeConcini language, we are keeping faith with this country's very sacred trust that when there is doubt, we will err on the side of making sure that people who are fleeing from political persecution will not be summarily deported to what they might face.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes out of the time allotted to the Committee on Education and Labor to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen from Michigan and California who just yielded the time to me.

It seems that this is the only opportunity we will have, at least in this debate, to tell the Members of the House just exactly where we stand with regard to what is now being passed as immigration reform.

We are in favor of immigration reform, but we know for a fact that this bill is not immigration reform. This bill is designed to provide a steady flow of cheap labor to the farmers and growers of the United States and, to boot, those farmers and growers are exempt from sanctions.

All other employers in the United States, however will be sanctioned or subject to sanctions provisions if they make some kind of a mistake and hire someone who may be here illegally. Then they can be fined and even suffer the consequences of a provision that will even send them to jail.

□ 1500

Now, if anyone can show me where I can find immigration reform in this bill I will have to reexamine the words immigration and reform.

To me immigration reform means that we must reform the present system, that we must do something about a Department that is the most discourteous Department in the Federal bureaucracy.

In this bill we find that we have a new appropriation of $400 million to reform what they consider to be a situation where we have lost control of the borders. Well, $400 million additional for the Department of Immigration is like spitting in the ocean. That will not remedy the situation, with spending the necessary amount to reform the Department. More personnel is needed so that they can again become a service department.

But we are against the bill for the reason that it does have sanctions for all employers except the farmers and grower and because among other things it provides for an amendment, the Beverly Hills amendment which will exempt an additional group, all those who have three or less employees.

We are fearfull that sanctions will definitely result in discrimination against the Hispanics and the Asians in this Nation. Those employers who would not want to get involved in any way will just not interview anyone who may appear to be Hispanic and quite obviously Asian. That will result in discrimination. Silent perhaps, but damaging just as well.

There are Members of this House who believe that we already have some protection against discrimination or that we are going to establish a group that will look into it. The truth of the matter is that we don't.

Well, we have the Civil Rights Commission but not too long ago that was defunded, because the Civil Rights Commission in the last 6 years has done absolutely nothing about discrimination.

The truth of the matter is that thousands and thousands of Hispanics in this country and Asians as well will suffer the consequences of discrimination simply because of sanctions.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 5665. I will focus my remarks on two principal concerns.

First, the heart of the bill remains employer sanctions, a fatally flawed concept which will put an onerous burden on every employer in America and raise the specter of discrimination against our own citizens. Yet, employer sanctions have proven ineffective wherever and whenever tried, whether in other countries or at the State and Federal level of our own.

For the most recent evidence of this failure, we can look to the 1985 GAO study on employer sanctions laws in foreign countries. As the study reports, from 1981 through September 1985, the estimated number of aliens working illegally increased in four of the surveyed countries, remained about the same in three countries, and only decreased in Hong Kong and one country.

The country most like ours, Canada, reported that its enactment of employer sanctions laws has had virtually no effect. And, despite an overall decline in the number of visitors to Canada, the number of illegal aliens working there has increased slightly since 1981.

In our own country, the Federal Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act of 1963 gives evidence that employer sanctions have been ineffective in the United States at the national level. In addition, employer sanctions have been proven ineffective at the State level in the many States with such laws on the books. The most these laws have produced was one $250 fine.

As Wayne Cornelius of the Center for United States-Mexican Studies at the University of California at San Diego said: "There is not a single documented case of successfully using employer-sanctions laws to reduce the population of illegal immigrants anywhere in the world."

My second principal concern is that the legislation does not deal with the root problem of illegal immigration. Instead of sending hundreds of millions of dollars to Central America to overturn governments, that money would surely be more wisely spent in being a better neighbor to Mexico and other sending countries.

Helping the sending countries in their development is part of the real answer to curbing illegal immigration. Working hand in hand with these countries will have more effect than this unilateral move before us today. Indeed, Mexican officials have said that a successful solution to perceived problems of migration between our two countries necessarily involves a bilateral search for answers.

And, here at home, providing the necessary resources to our agencies to enforce our immigration laws and our laws on fair labor standards and practices would be part of the solution as well.

For the reasons I've outlined, and others, I cannot support this legislation.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, we have witnessed two miracles in this 2d session of the 99th Congress. One was that we got a drug bill through this House with some teeth in it. I stood in this well and thanked both sides of the aisle, particularly the majority side, for passing this hard hitting antidrug legislation that was going to benefit my family and my five grandchildren.

Now the second miracle is that we have an immigration bill on the floor in a week when we were not even supposed to be here. We were supposed to be out by the 3d, tomorrow, and now it looks like we will be out Friday, the 17th. I won't bet on that.

We now have a chance to debate one of the most serious problems in America, although it is not of the level of the drug bill, in which we were talking about thousands of young kids and middle-aged kids and Yuppies and even some older citizens dying on drugs. This immigration problem though is ser'ous and painful.

The night before last, or rather, Monday night, I went down to the California-Mexico border. Two gentlemen from New York had already been down there, Mr. SCHUMER and Mr. SCHEUER. There have also been eight Californians down there, two Democrats, four of the five of us from Orange County, CA, both the San Diegans. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has been down there several times, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] is one of the people around here who has worked this miracle, and I honor the gentleman for it. Getting this bill before us is a miracle.

Now, down there at that border I saw American territory controlled by people who are not Americans, standing there, 1,000 of them. One of them turned around, he did not know there was a Congressman there, he probably would have laughed if he did. He just thought I was one of the border guards again. He turned around and dropped his pants and gave us the international—to use the western acronym, a B.A.

I knew you would love that, HENRY.

It kind of symbolized for me the whole situation there. They are controlling American territory.

Now, at night when I got into a helicopter with the pilot and controlled the spotlight down on these guys, you know we are all good with spotlights on cars in southern California—I was pretty good and in a few minutes I was able to track all these people running around, some of them like scared people, others just giving other international signs to the helicopter.

When you have 1,000 people against a handful of border guards, a lot of people are going to make it to my district, and they have.

My friends in this House know that I treat them with the dignity that human beings deserve, and you guys know that.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Well, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] is running a tight ship here. He is not going to give me any more time. I just want to make a point about illegal aliens—not Mexicans, our brothers to the south that we should embrace with the same love and respect that we embrace Canadians.

I want to talk about OTM's, another acronym.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield another one-half minute to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, OTM means other than Mexicans.

How about Chinese? Not from Hong Kong, I do not want to get into the yellow peril. I am talking about people on the mainland. How about Yugoslavians?

How about when I walk into one of those nice clean holding pens where they are eating Ritz crackers and tomato soup and I say, "Anybody here from Guatemala?" Ten hands go up.

"How about Nicaragua?" There are about eight hands go up.

"How about El Salvador?" And another five or six hands go up.

We are being inundated, and there has got to be a humane way to close this border and not to give instant amnesty to over 580,000 Central Americans.

Let us have a good debate today.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] would like a minute, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time. Really, I will need only a half a minute. I was just curious to inquire of the gentleman from California if after he was with this rather motley assortment of Congressmen if any immigration officer stopped the gentleman for looking suspiciously alien?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Suspiciously Norwegian.

Mr. GONZALEZ. That is the only point I wanted to make.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4½ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I speak here on behalf of the Agriculture Committee and the agricultural portions of the immigration and reform bill that is before the House. It involves a new agricultural program that recognizes those who currently work in agriculture. It provides for a revised H-2 program and it also provides a search warrant requirement that will be the subject of an amendment later on during this debate.

Immigration reform if it is to happen has to be comprehensive. I think that has been something that everyone has acknowledged. It has to include sanctions. It has to include legalization. It has to include strong enforcement and it has to include a provision that deals with the needs of agriculture.

If we are going to have immigration reform, it has to be comprehensive. Why agriculture as part of that? Because agriculture I think has established unique and special problems that relate to that area. The perishable crop industry in this country is an industry that ranges somewhere between $35 billion to $60 billion in terms of value. It is labor intensive. That is acknowledged by all.

Today the reality is that 85 percent of many of those who work in agriculture are undocumented aliens. These workers, also acknowledged, are often abused, live in fear, or exploited and have no rights. That is a bitter reality, but it is a reality.

The farmers, those who try to raise the crops, are subject to random raids that disrupt their operations. It is a reality. It is a bitter reality, but it is true.

All of this is not pleasant. It is not good and it surely ought not to be acceptable to the farmers, to the workers and to the American people.

So for that reason we have struggled to come up with a compromise in this area. It is not easy. It is emotional. It is confrontational. All of us understand that who have worked with this issue.

Two years ago the House adopted the Panetta-Morrison amendment. The Senate adopted the Wilson amendment establishing guest worker programs.

Although it was adopted by the House, it is clear that that confrontation could jeopardize this bill, and so to avoid that confrontation several of us gathered to try to negotiate compromise in the agricultural area. For ten months we sat and negotiated, working with farm groups, with worker groups, with civil rights groups, to try to develop a compromise that is part of this bill. The compromise developed, I think, responds to the needs that we tried to address. It protects rights by giving legal status to those who can establish that they have worked in agriculture. It meets the needs of agriculture, not only by providing rights to those who work in agriculture, but by providing for a replenishment program.

Third, it does provide for sanctions against farmers. The statement was made a few moments ago that the farm community is not subject to sanctions. That is wrong. They will be subject to sanctions involved in this bill.

So it is a compromise. It is not a perfect compromise. It has been tightened up significantly by the Lungren amendments.

We have established a cap on one portion of the bill of 350,000. We have extended the man-days from 60 to 90 days and we have put a sunset on the program itself of 7 years.

So today what is before you is an effort by a broad coalition to establish a compromise in this very important area.

□ 1515

What is before you today is supported not just by farm groups and the Farm Bureau and the various farm organizations, but it is supported by the farmworker groups, and by labor, and the AFL-CIO, and it is also supported by the civil rights groups and those groups that have fought to protect the rights of workers. So it is supported by a broad coalition that has worked on this effort. For that reason I urge support for this compromise, and I urge support for the bill.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I guess that you could almost say, "Here we go again," but there is going to be, I think, a big difference this time. I think this time we are going to be successful, and we are going to be successful because a lot of deals have been made.

The document here, as many of the speakers have said, is far from perfect, but what could we possibly have that is worse than what we have in place right now? The problem that we have is growing at a proportion that was absolutely unbelievable when we started this voyage many years ago, when these bills came to the floor many years ago.

We recently passed a drug bill in this Chamber, and the pace at which the Members were bringing tough new amendments down and trying to make it tougher and tougher was described as a "frenzy." That frenzy was caused by the fact that the American people were fed up, and Congress finally got the word.

That word is coming down again, and it is coming down that the American people are fed up with illegal immigration into this country.

I hope that this works. I pray that it will work, because if it does not, I would say that this body will be back in a few years with the same type of frenzy that it had on the drug situation, and we might find ourselves in a situation of overreacting. And the problem of overreacting in that instance is that we are dealing with the lives of people of the world.

This bill does not overreact to the situation. It is very human in its treatment. There are amendments that are going to be offered to take away the legalization provisions, and I will support that amendment to take away the legalization provision. But if that amendment fails, and legalization stays part of this bill, I will say, "So what?" because those people are here, and we are not doing anything about getting rid of them anyway, so I would say that we can still support the bill.

The problems along the Texas border and the California border are absolutely incredible, and absolutely dwarf the problems that we have always thought were so great in the State of Florida.

The votes have been put together. This bill is going to pass, and I commend the gentlemen on both sides of the aisle for the tremendous work that they have done in making this bill and bringing it this far along.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, let me just say that we will have time, I hope, to discuss the last amendment that has been made in order, which is the amendment or motion to strike the EVD—extended voluntary departure—for Salvadorans and Nicaraguans.

That is extremely important. I do not think that it belongs in this bill, I think that we ought to strike it, and the President has indicated that he will veto any EVD. In that sense I would suggest letting it remain in the bill as a killer amendment.

After we spend all our time dealing with this bill, when we come to that last question, let us hope that those of us in this House act to save the bill, and not to kill it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON] is recognized for 7½ minutes.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, Yogi Berra supposedly once said, "This seem like deja vu all over again." It certainly is true in the case of this immigration bill, except this time I am proud to have been part of the team that we believe has put together a package that will give us some clearance over the hurdles that have stopped us before during the past several years in dealing with this most significant issue.

On behalf of the Committee on Agriculture on the minority side of the aisle, I can report that we have worked with this bill, that we are pleased to recommend to the full House the agricultural provisions, and let me mention them in passing.

First of all, the agricultural workers program—Mr. PANETTA has mentioned this most eloquently. Our concern, of course, is for the production of the perishable commodities that are so important in many of our States across the United States, and making sure that there is an adequate number of people to work, since we have absolutely no idea how many illegal workers have infiltrated the supply of workers who follow the migrant path to harvest these various commodities.

In order to make sure that there is an adequate number of these workers available, the compromise which we have in front of us in this bill uses the measurement of those who have worked in the past few years. That, after all, has to be the most accurate indication of what it takes to do the job. A 90-day commitment per year in these last several years in the measurement, and we think that that can be worked quite effectively.

Also, the agricultural provisions have a relatively short life, for those Members that are concerned about them, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] and others on the floor of the House when we defeated the rule just a few days ago made the point that this was a rolling amnesty provision for agriculture. That is no longer true. While there is a potential of some replenishment, I think that we will have a good opportunity in this Congress in these Halls to measure the actual number of people who are involved, how many workers are here, how many are needed, where are they, and get back with the opportunity to rework this before it actually sunsets.

I think that the reliance on that Commission can be an important point, because, very frankly, we are working without adequate numbers: 31 States, as I recall, do not allow employers to ask the nationality of workers when they come to their doors, and we are just guessing as far as the numbers are concerned. So let us rely on a Commission which is given 5 years to prepare an accurate report as to the numbers that we actually need and what program can be most effective for protecting agriculture.

I also would just like to comment that it has been a delight to work again with the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], and this time, though, with an interesting combination of folks—some of whom admit that their closest ties to agriculture are when they put their cash out at the counter at the local grocery store. But together we have come up with a combination that I believe works for farmworkers—that is essential—and it also works for farm owners and operators, an unusual combination, and we are pleased to bring it to you today.

Also in the agricultural arena are the provisions related to H-2, a longstanding guestworker program reflected in this measure, the compromise worked out again with a number of people working together, and I am confident that we can work that on through conference and we can be proud of modifications that have been made, but modifications reflecting balance, again imparting the fact a number of people have been concerned about this.

From the Committee on Agriculture will come an amendment related to the requirement for warrants for field searches. We feel that it is absolutely essential that we have fair and equal treatment all the way across America's lands. This would ensure equal protection for unreasonable and warrantless searches for farmworkers and farmowners. The committee does present this amendment to you.

Farmers ask why their factories have no walls or perhaps only fences and they are treated differently from someone whose factories are enclosed in some other way. There are no constitutional protections for either workers or farmers on these lands.

Interestingly enough, the statistics show that only 15 percent of illegal workers employed in the United States work in agriculture, and yet 72 percent of the apprehensions of illegal workers are from the agricultural sector. So obviously the lack of the requirement in current law for a search warrant shifts the emphasis to those areas, and there is more enforcement, more apprehension from those areas, and I think that this should be straightened out, and that amendment will be forthcoming from the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] is recognized for 7½ minutes.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, the legislation we are considering today may have a profound affect on many of the economic, social, and service delivery institutions in this Nation. This fact is acknowledged in that section of the legislation which deals with State legalization assistance.

The State legalization assistance section authorizes Federal funds for the purpose of assisting States and localities in the provision of public assistance and education services to legalized aliens. However, as originally reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, H.R. 3810 did not provide any direction as to how these funds should be administered nor provide a cap on how much of the educational costs the Federal Government was responsible for.

When H.R. 3810 was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, I offered an amendment which provided a structure within which educational assistance could be provided to States and local agencies. First, my amendment placed a $500 cap on the Federal contribution for each child or adult eligible to receive educational services under the immigration bill. This is accomplished by applying the provisions of the Emergency Immigrant Education Act to the funds appropriated under H.R. 3810. In addition, the Emergency Immigrant Education Program would provide an already existing administrative structure through which the funds could flow.

My amendment has been included in the text of the bill which we are considering today, and I feel makes this legislation more educationally and fiscally responsible.

There are no good, hard figures on how many children and adults will come forward for educational services as a result of the legalization provisions in H.R. 3810. Certainly in some areas of the country it is likely to be significant. My amendment, which received unanimous support from the Education and Labor Committee, provides a reasonable level of Federal assistance for these services while avoiding the need for a new administrative structure to operate the program.

□ 1525

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield my 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield my 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield my 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank my three colleagues for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, an essential component of the immigration reform legislation is a positive economic relationship with Mexico, both nations working together to stem the flow of undocumented workers as well as to help our depressed border economies.

In the past, immigration reform bills have not contained any provisions to deal with this issue. For the first time, in my judgment, this immigration reform bill does contain positive economic partnership provisions with Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, the bill contains an amendment that I have offered that authorizes the President of the United States to negotiate with Mexico a free trade zone. The President is not obligated to do so by this amendment, but he simply has that option.

We have such an agreement with Israel, and are presently negotiating one with Canada.

Under this provision, products, not people, move duty free through this free trade zone, coproduction zone. The joint enterprises are formed and with the help of Members like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] it includes in this provision that I have authored the potential for creating a joint economic development bank with Mexico to jointly finance projects.

This is a very important and positive step. It has been endorsed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the first time that the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has endorsed anything that I have ever done, so it is a landmark for me.

In addition to that, it has been positively received by the Mexican Government. They feel strongly that they do need economic development along the border worked on jointly. But let's face it, in the past they have shield away from it. Why should they help us get off the hook with a safety valve problem that they have?

But I believe for the first time they are ready to negotiate, although they have not said this publicly; it has mostly been privately.

So I believe that this bill contains the potential for economic development in the border regions, the depressed border economies. It is up to the President and the State Department and the Commerce Department working with our labor unions, working with many border economies and mayors in border States to come up with a plan that possibly will help the border economies.

For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I think this economic tie with Mexico that we have neglected so many times, the bilateral relationship with Mexico, that the Mexicans will respond positively, that they will say to us that they appreciate this economic initiative that the House of Representatives has put forth.

So I applaud the members of the Committee on Rules for having accepted this amendment which simply says the President is authorized to negotiate a free trade zone with Mexico. He does not have to do it. I think it is up to the executive branch to develop a positive formula that will bring jobs to the border.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, October 7, 1986.

Members of the House of Representatives:

You soon will be considering H.R. 3810, the "Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1985." The U.S. Chamber of Commerce supports immigration reform and urges you to consider this bill immediately so that legislation can be enacted before adjournment.

Although the Chamber urges you to consider H.R. 3810, this bill is seriously flawed. The Chamber prefers the approach to immigration reform taken in S. 1200, the bill adopted by the Senate last September.

First, H.R. 3810 creates unnecessarily a new private right-of-action for discrimination based on "alienage" and establishes a new civil rights bureaucracy separate from the existing agencies charged with enforcement of civil rights laws. Ostensibly, this approach is intended to prevent the possibility of increased discrimination resulting from the proposed employer sanctions. Unfortunately, this new requirement subjects employers to duplicative and potentially conflicting enforcement actions, provides aliens with greater legal and procedural rights than those afforded citizens under current law and prohibits an employer from giving a preference to a U.S. citizen over a noncitizen.

The Chamber favors the Senate resolution of this alleged problem. S. 1200 contains a provision, offered by Senator Kennedy, to "sunset" employer sanctions if there is evidence of widespread discrimination following enactment. Such an approach would be far preferable to the business community than the extravagant new rights and bureaucracy contained in H.R. 3810.

Second, H.R. 3810 requires all employers to comply with overly burdensome recordkeeping and verification requirements, whereby fines of up to $1000 per paperwork violation may be imposed, even if an employer does not hire an illegal alien. The Small Business Administrations' Office of Advocacy has estimated conservatively that the cost of compliance with these requirements would be more than $650 million per year. In contrast, S. 1200 penalizes an employer for hiring illegal aliens—not for mere paperwork violations—and grants employers an affirmative defense if they choose voluntarily to keep the paperwork on each employee.

The Chamber urges you to resolve these two issues and pass this important legislation.

Immigration reform is not just a domestic issue; it must be viewed in a broader context. For this reason, the Chamber supports the amendment to be offered by Representative Richardson. This amendment would authorize the President to negotiate with the government of Mexico, on a reciprocal and mutually beneficial basis, the establishment of a free trade and coproduction zone that would include our respective borderlands. Such a zone should serve as a first step toward achieving a free trade area between the U.S. and Mexico over the long run. Trade liberalization, as envisioned under the Richardson amendment, also should serve to increase economic growth and development in the borderland and, thereby, help to alleviate the social tensions associated with ongoing immigration problems.

Thank you for your consideration of the Chamber's views.

Sincerely,

ALBERT D. BOURLAND,
Vice President, Congressional Relations.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 1, 1985]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a new positive approach to immigration, one that combines economic opportunity and jobs.

The issue of immigration has been considered as a domestic matter for too long. Last year's debate over the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill focused on the need for the United States to regain control of its borders by instituting employer sanctions or by increasing border enforcement.

What is evident to me is that immigration is a multilateral issue between the United States and other recipient nations and all nations whose lesser developed economies and/or internal political turmoil contribute to the flow of emigrants.

This view was confirmed by what members of the congressional Hispanic caucus saw and heard on their trip to Latin America last December. During out stop in Mexico, we found a willingness among Mexican officials to discuss important bilateral issues—including the problem of undocumented migration. The bill I am introducing today is in part a response to those talks.

The United States-Mexico Border Revitalization Act of 1985 would create a free trade land coproduction zone along the United States-Mexican border; establish a United States-Mexican Bilateral Commission; initiate a joint United States-Mexico Development Bank; and develop a Multilateral Commission on Immigration. I am pleased to announce that as of today four members of the congressional Hispanic caucus are original cosponsors of the bill Congressman HENRY B. GONZALEZ of Texas, Congressman ROBERT GARCIA of New York, Congressman ALBERT BUSTAMANTE, and Congressman SOLOMON ORTIZ of Texas.

I want to make this opportunity to outline the four major initiatives in the bill:

FREE TRADE ZONE

The recent peso devaluation in Mexico has created an economic crisis in the border region between our two countries. Most of the border region is economically depressed—it has one of the highest rates of unemployment; the lowest levels of income; health care services; educational attainment; and industrial development in the United States. Under my bill, the President is directed to enter into negotiations of the Government of Mexico a United States-Mexican free trade and coproduction zone within approximately 200 miles of each border.

The zone would provide for the duty-free treatment of products grown, produced or manufactured within the zone. United States and Mexican businesses located in the zone would be eligible to tax incentives, similar to those offered in enterprise zone legislation now pending before the Congress. Businesses that are at least 35 percent Mexican-owned or 35 percent United States-owned will be considered eligible ventures under this act.

UNITED STATES-MEXICAN BILATERAL COMMISSION

Under the act, the President would be directed to appoint a bilateral commission, composed of 15 members of the public and private sectors in the United States and an equal number of representatives from Mexico. It will meet quarterly with the goal of strengthening the political and economic ties between our two countries. Areas of discussion are, but not limited to: Immigration; the free trade and coproduction zone; tariff and trade issues; transportation; energy and pollution.

UNITED STATES-MEXICO JOINT DEVELOPMENT BANK

My bill will provide for the establishment of a United States-Mexico Joint Development Bank with the authority to make economic development loans in Mexico and in the border regions of the United States. Assistance provided by the bank would be directed at improving employment opportunities. The Government of the United States and Mexico would contribute equally to the capital of the bank with provisions for an initial U.S. contribution of $4 billion.

MULTILATERAL COMMISSION ON IMMIGRATION

Immigration is a multilateral issue. My bill recognizes that fact and creates a forum in the establishment of a commission where the United States and prime sending countries can discuss such immigration issues as: The economic, political, and social factors that encourage legal and illegal immigration, the problem of border enforcement; the protection of rights of legal immigrants; and refugee relocation and refugee rights. The purpose of the commission will be to work out international agreements on immigration issues.

CONCLUSION

All of the problems of illegal immigration will not be solved with the initiatives proposed in my bill. But, it is time we in the Congress recognize that economic strife, the opportunity for a better life and freedom from religious or political persecution are the underlying reasons for the flow of illegal immigrants into the United States. My bill sets forth some new ideas for discussion in the immigration debate.

Crisis on the United States—Mexico Border: A Plan for Action

(By Abelardo L. Valdez)

Mexico's ongoing economic crisis and its impact on the United States confirm that bold initiatives are vital to the economic future of both nations. Instead of the limited vision exemplified by the Simpson immigration bill and protectionist measures against Mexican imports, the United States should be finding ways to look beyond current problems to developing future economic opportunities through a spirit of partnership with Mexico.

The current crisis, while affecting adversely the economies of both nations in general, has had an especially devastating effect on the region bordering the United States and Mexico. The borderlands contain some of the hardest-hit sectors of both the U.S. and Mexican economies. It is an area of very high unemployment and exceedingly low-income levels which badly needs the infusion of investment and industrial development.

Four years ago, I recommended through the U.S. Trade Advisory Committee, which was preparing President Reagan's Report to Congress on North American Trade Agreements, that the United States and Mexico establish a Free-Trade and Co-Production Zone along the 2,000-mile border they share. Now, Representative William Richardson (D-NM), Chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, and several members of Congress have taken the initiative to incorporate my proposed plan in a legislative package which was introduced this week in the House of Representatives as the "U.S.-Mexico Border Revitalization Act." The proposed Zone would serve as the foundation of a new partnership that could combine the best human, financial, technological, and marketing resources of both countries. It would increase investment opportunities, generate millions of new jobs, and increase exports for both countries through co-production by U.S.-Mexico joint ventures located within the Zone. Co-production would enable both countries to combine their comparative advantages in manufacturing and thereby increase the competitiveness of their exports in the international marketplace.

The unique commonalities in language, culture, geography, and entrepreneurial spirit shared by Mexico and the United States at the borderlands make this area the most advantageous location for this initial phase of this free-trade and co-production initiative. The proposed Zone would include the entirety of the borderlands extending 200 miles into each country's territory, and running parallel to the border from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean.

The favorable tariff and tax incentives provided by the proposed legislation would be made available only to eligible joint ventures located and operating within the Zone, and producing for export to third countries and to the United States and Mexico. The proposal also requires that such joint ventures must have a minimum U.S. and Mexican equity participation on both sides of the Zone. The bill provides that, after a trial period of ten years, the President may enter further negotiations with the Mexican Government for the purpose of expanding the Zone concept throughout the United States and Mexico on a mutually advantageous and reciprocal basis.

A fundamental purpose for establishing the proposed Zone along the U.S.-Mexico border is to support and accelerate, through reciprocal trade and tax incentives, the economic growth of a geographical area that is plagued, on both sides of the border, with chronic unemployment, underemployment, and a dearth of industrial development. The reduction of tariff barriers and concurrent increase in tax and financial incentives would encourage economic development and employment generation in the area.

The increase in employment on both sides of the border would, in turn, help to alleviate the undocumented immigration problem. The problem can be resolved only through mutual cooperation between the United States and Mexico to create new jobs and thereby address the root cause of immigration. This plan would achieve that goal, as well as create a true economic partnership between the two nations.

The feasibility and potential benefits of the proposed Zone are evidenced by the success of a more limited cooperative effort initiated in 1968. The Border-Industries, or "twin-plant," Program permits U.S. firms to locate along the border and to export unfinished products to the Mexican side, duty-free, for assembly and finishing work. Upon their return to the United States for marketing, these products are charged duty only on the value-added portion resulting from the work done in Mexico. The proposed Zone would build on the success of this program and vastly expand the opportunities for co-production and for a full economic partnership between the United States and Mexico.

Unlike past North American "common-market" proposals, which have been perceived in Mexico as being "one-way streets" with all of the benefits accruing to the United States, this proposal is designed to emphasize the potential mutual benefits that could accrue to both countries. Congress and the Administration should move promptly to consider and approve Representative Richardson's bill. The current economic crisis in Mexico and the U.S. stake in Mexico's future call for immediate action.

Statement of Representative Henry B. Gonzalez, Press Conference, August 1, 1985

I enthusiastically support Bill Richardson's proposal to deal with the causes of the illegal immigration problem.

The flow of immigration—legal or illegal—is a sure index of desperation. Just as the Irish potato famine set off a wave of immigration, just as the Viet Nam debacle threw the boat people to the sea, we have today a wave of immigrants fleeing from misery and desperation. The people we know as illegal immigrants do not want to become lawbreakers, but neither will they let mere laws stand between them and what may be their only chance to survive or attain some semblance of human dignity.

Immigration reform is needed, but that will not stop illegal entry or even discourage it very much. The only way to solve the problem is to start alleviating the misery that creates it. Only when people see hope at home, can they affort to stop looking for a chance somewhere else, like the United States. Addressing the human desperation behind illegal immigration is precisely what we are proposing to do.

I have long believed that a bilateral United States-Mexico development Bank would go far to create new opportunities in Mexico and thus reduce the overwhelming economic desperation that causes so many Mexicans to flee northward. My bill H.R. 593 would create such a bank, and it has attracted 15 cosponsors. I am honored that Bill Richardson agrees with this idea. It is a practical, realistic, effective way to address the cause of illegal immigration.

I also believe that a free trade zone would create enormous new opportunities on both sides of the U.S.-Mexico border. Such a zone can work, especially in light of recent moves by the Mexican government to encourage freer trade.

Both the development bank and trade zone offer badly needed opportunities on the United States side of the border. With unemployment in the Texas border region running at better than 20 percent, and similar problems all across the border, a joint program is the ony way to make progress on either side of the border.

We must face the fact that the flow of illegal immigration from Mexico each year is roughly equivalent to the number of new entrants into the Mexican labor force who cannot find work. Each year, the Mexican labor force expands by about a half million workers more than the economy can absorb. This is the basic cause of illegal immigration. Our immigration lawbooks won't change that; what will change it is a program of economic development, and that is what we are proposing today.

Illegal immigrants have no choice: they can come here and have a chance, or they can stay home and starve. Our proposal will provide a chance and a choice. Unless a program like ours is adopted, there is no way to stem the tide of illegal immigration. It will rise, as long as misery and desperation rise; it will fall only when misery and desperation are alleviated.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield my remaining 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SCHUMER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the good chairman of the subcommittee and the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] for their gracious allocation of time.

Mr. Chairman, 2 years ago I sat on the floor and listened to the same debate on immigration reform. At that point, immigration reform to me was a hazy and fuzzy concept, as I imagine it is to so many people today. There are all sorts of words like EZD and green card and two-tiered legislation that I had not cracked through, and the whole debate seemed rather strange, particularly given the fact that in my district this was not one of the most burning issues facing my constituents.

But as I sat and listened to the debate, I saw and became convinced, was unsure parenthetically, about how I would vote on the bill as I sat and listened to that debate, and that is the reason I did it, but I became convinced that what the Senator from Wyoming and the gentleman from Kentucky had put together in Simpson-Mazzoli was vital to America's interests, because we have lost control of our borders.

We had had at that point maybe a million people a year coming across and with no system for dealing with them, ways of absorbing them and integrating them into American life. And I also saw that there were millions of those people who came here and lived unprotected, in limbo, exploited, and unable to advance and climb up the ladder as part of the American dream as millions of others before them had done through legal immigration.

As I studied the issue further and listened to my good colleagues debate. I became convinced that indeed immigration reform was a test of governance, in a way it is a metaphor for governance, if you will, that this Congress, this good Congress whose members I respect, the institution I love, could really rise and overcome all of the various special interest groups of all types, many of whom I agreed with—I support a lot of special interest groups—who were picking at the bill for one reason or another. And the bill failed in conference. I played something of a role there, but it struck me as strange that it should fail over the issue of agriculture. After all, agriculture only accounted for 8 to 15 percent of our immigration into America. And no matter what one felt about the agricultural issue, if one basically believed in the humane and dual concept of Simpson-Mazzoli, one would not let agriculture bring the bill down.

So 2 years ago I, along with my courageous, and I cannot underscore how courageous they have been, my courageous colleagues, the gentlemen from California [Mr. PANETTA and Mr. BERMAN] embarked on an idea that we could bring labor and agriculture together. I must tell my colleagues, frankly, that if someone came to me 2 years ago and said, or came to the three of us and said, you fellows are going to fashion a compromise that both growers and labor, farm labor, will enthusiastically support, I would have said go away, you are crazy. And if that same person would have said to me, after you fashion the compromise, you will create as many problems for the bill as you have solved, I would say you are equally crazy.

But immigration is strange, and that is indeed what has happened. We arrive here today with that compromise as modified by the Lungren proposals on the floor before us. I would say to my colleagues that they should look at it carefuly.

What is it not? It is not millions of people cascading across the borders. The best independent analysis we have, the Congresional Budget Office, estimated that even before it was tightened up, that it would mean maybe 250,000 people across the borders.

□ 1535

It is not welfare benefits for those folks immediately. In fact, it is in the bill right now that they cannot get AFDC benefits even though I might believe they should.

It is not, as was said before, immediately—the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] stated immediately—wives, husbands, children would come across. Not the case.

Yes, there is a preference, but there is a long waiting list on the preference lists; a Mexican as part of this program would have to wait 8 years before his spouse or her spouse or his or her children would be allowed into this country.

What is it? It is a humane way to deal with the problem of farm labor, recognizing first that the growers need agricultural labor. They have had it all along; whether it be legal or illegal to take it away from them now would do untold damage, not just to the Central Valley in California, but to the balance of trade of America and to my constituents who depend on them for food.

So it gives the growers their supply of labor, but what it also does is, it says: "Laborer, if that grower decides not to give you a toilet, not to give you running water, to pay you 90 cents an hour, you are no longer stuck. You no longer have to continue working on that farm or in that country or in agriculture."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I would yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is now recognized for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the gentleman for their gracious offer of time.

Mr. Chairman, it would say that "You can, in a sense, vote with your feet. You can go look for a job somewhere else or return without fear of being turned in, without fear of being exploited." Only history will tell if this bill becomes law, whether that program will work. I do not know and you do not know, but it is certainly worth a shot, a fair and decent shot.

What I would say to my colleagues who it seems to them, agriculture; it is far away and it is a politically burdensome issue in this bill, again, agriculture is 8 to 15 percent of immigration reform. Whatever your feelings, it is not worth bringing down a bill over that.

We have 1.8 million people coming across the borders, as the good gentleman from California has outlined. We have millions more people living in limbo, unprotected, in our cities, in our towns, in the country; and if we do not do immigration reform, we are not going to solve either of those problems, both of which dwarf any problems that some might feel would be created by this proposal.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are back where we were almost 2 years ago. Are we going to let the problems of agriculture, which again are smaller than the problems of immigration reform, sink this bill? I would hope not.

We have made a sincere effort, my colleagues, it may not be the best effort, but it is clearly worth a shot; and certainly this House agrees we need immigration reform.

I want to conclude by thanking all of my colleagues who have put up with me, who have put up with the vicissitudes of the bill, who have put up with the difficulties that a tough bill in the legislative process creates for us.

We in a sense are the shock absorbers of American politics. The car gets beaten up on all sides, but to make it ride smooth, we go up and down. We take the hits; but I am proud we take those hits, and we do it well and we do it with style and we do it with courage and we do it with concern; and whatever happens on this bill, I want to say once again that I think the saga of immigration reform in this House is one that this House can be proud of.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, immigration reform is long overdue. Even though my own State is relatively unaffected by immigration compared to the States on the southern border, Vermonters know that we must act to control our borders. The drugs that have long been brought across our southern border are now entering from the north. The strain on national resources affects every one of us. And as we all know, the only way we are realistically going to be able to reduce the flow of illegal immigrants is by making it illegal to hire undocumented workers.

This bill is not perfect, and the procedure by which it comes before us is unfortunate. I have serious reservations about many provisions of this bill. But on balance, I have to put aside my personal preferences to move this bill to conference with the Senate and on to the President's desk.

The core of this bill, of course, is employer sanctions for the hiring of undocumented workers and the legalization program for illegal aliens who have established some roots in this country. I do not like legalization. I have constituents with relatives who are trying to enter this country legally who are still waiting. But I think it is a necessary component to this bill.

I am pleased that this bill addressed the continuing problem of Salvadoran and Nicaraguan refugees who are coming to this country in order to escape persecution. Our laws provide extended voluntary departure [EVD] status for just such situations. This status currently applies to Afghans, Poles, Ugandans, and Ethiopians. However, the Attorney General has refused to extend EVD status to Central Americans, forcing them to return to their countries. Contrary to INS assertions, the majority of these refugees are not coming here for economic reasons; they are coming here out of fear for their lives, and they hope to return to their homes as soon as political conditions permit. EVD is the appropriate status for such refugees, as it would allow them to remain in this country temporarily, but would not grant them permanent asylum. In addition, EVD would reduce the number of people forced to enter the country illegally.

H.R. 3810 prohibits two forms of employment discrimination: Discrimination on the basis of citizenship status and discrimination on the basis of national origin. Discrimination on the basis of national origin by employers of 15 or more is already proscribed by title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; enforcement of this law is entrusted to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. No Federal law now prohibits employment discrimination on the basis of citizenship status. Under EEOC guidelines, however, citizenship requirements for job applicants are deemed violative of title VII when they have the purpose or effect of discriminating against persons on the basis of national origin.

This bill increases the scope of the protection of victims of national origin discrimination to workers in businesses with 4 to 14 employees. Enforcement of national origin discrimination claims by victims of these small employers would be entrusted to a new Special Counsel's Office in the Department of Justice. All citizenship discrimination claims would also be enforced by the Special Counsel.

It is difficult to see any practical distinction between citizenship discrimination and national origin discrimination. The facts needed to prove discrimination on the basis of citizenship would stem from the same source as those relied upon with respect to national origin discrimination claims. It is difficult, therefore, to understand why a new bureaucracy is needed to enforce these new provisions. Nor does it make any sense to have the enforcement of national origin discrimination claims split between two agencies, depending on the size of the employer. With the EEOC, we already have an agency with the expertise and personnel for enforcement of such claims. Citizenship discrimination claims are so similar to national origin claims that they, too, should be enforced by the EEOC. The new Office of Special Counsel is unnecessarily duplicative and expensive.

Another provision in the bill before us is one which creates a class of agricultural workers known as special agricultural workers [SAW's] and Replenishment Agricultural Workers [RAWS].

Much has been said by my colleagues on this provision, and I don't want to belabor the point, but we need to understand exactly what this provision contains.

As I understand this provision, and I have not had an opportunity to study the bill language, there is a two-tiered system for special agricultural workers with a 2-year application period. One tier of workers must have worked 90 man-days for the last 3 years in agriculture, with adjustment to permanent residence status 1 year after adjudication of their temporary status. The second tier of workers must have worked in agriculture for 90 man-days between May 1985 and May 1986, with adjustment to permanent resident status 2 years after adjudication of their temporary status. The significant difference among these two tiers is not the length of time they have worked in agriculture, but the fact that tier one is capped at 350,000 workers and the second tier has no cap.

Then there is provision for replenishment workers who are granted temporary status for 3 years with the same 90 man-day agricultural employment test.

I testified before the Rules Committee, asking that I be allowed to offer an amendment to the Schumer proposal which would have capped the number of workers at 350,000. The Rules Committee did not, however, make my amendment in order. I had hoped that during the negotiations with the Senate and Judiciary Committee members that a cap would be placed on the number of workers allowed in as special agricultural workers. To place a cap on only one half of the group does only one half of the job.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bad provision. I believe that we should have an opportunity to have a separate vote on it; however, I am also sensitive to the fact that the clock is running down and this country needs its immigration laws reformed.

I would urge my colleagues to set aside their political prejudices and support the efforts of the Judiciary Committee members who have worked so long and hard to bring us a compromise bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 5 minutes.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON] has 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my 30 seconds.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, can the Chair tell us how much time remains totally on general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] has 4 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] has 30 seconds remaining, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] has 7½ minutes, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] has 7½ minutes, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 7½ minutes, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] has 7½ minutes, and that is the balance of the time.

The Chair would like to state to the gentleman from Texas, a total of 34 minutes remain.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the distinguished Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for 7½ minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

□ 1545

Mr. Chairman, with one exception, the bill before the House reflects those amendments made by the Committee on Ways and Means to the bill H.R. 3810.

The committee was very careful to act only on those portions of the bill within its jurisdiction. After careful review, the committee adopted the following amendments:

The committee struck the provision in the bill that requires the Attorney General to establish a system to verify the social security numbers of all applicants for employment in the United States. The committee amendment instead requires the Social Security Administration, in conjunction with the Attorney General and the Department of Labor, to conduct a study of the feasibility, costs, and privacy implications of establishing a social security number validation system to help carry out the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The committee strongly feels that this issue should be carefully studied before any system is put in place. The original provision would cost $130 million per year, and there is no evidence that the system would serve any useful purpose. After the Social Security Administration makes its report to the Congress on the feasibility and costs of a verification system, we will be in a much better position to judge the merits of the issue.

The committee made clarifying and technical changes to the provision in the bill that disqualifies certain newly legalized aliens from public assistance programs. For the purposes of Ways and Means programs, the changes make clear that the disqualification applies only to Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] and not to other public assistance programs within the Committee's jurisdiction.

The committee amended the SAVE provision to allow the respective Secretaries with administrative responsibilities over Public Assistance Programs to waive the verification requirement if the Secretary finds that such a program would not be cost effective or that an alternative system is in place which is as timely and effective. In addition, the Supplemental Security Income Program [SSI] would not be subject to the SAVE requirement. The committee's SAVE amendment is almost identical to the one adopted by the other committees to which the bill was referred.

Finally, the committee amended that provision of the bill that would have made permanent the current temporary exclusion from Federal Unemployment Tax [FUTA] of wages paid to certain foreign agricultural workers. Under the committee's amendment, the exclusion, which is due to expire on December 31, 1987, would be extended for 5 years. Such an extension will allow the committee to review the impact of the exclusion on the domestic work force under the expanded H-2 Program.

All of the committee amendments, with one exception, are now part of the original text of the bill. In addition, the text of the bill now accomplishes what the Daub amendment would have accomplished had it been adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means. That is, the special agricultural workers are disqualified from AFDC for 5 years.

The one change to what the comittee adopted concerns the exclusion from Federal unemployment tax of wages paid to H-2 workers. The Committee on Ways and Means extended the exclusion for 5 years. Because H.R. 5665 will be made an amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 1200, I requested that the unemployment tax provision be stricken from the bill. Instead, I will call up a House bill immediately after the consideration of H.R. 5665, which will extend the exclusion for 5 years. This procedure is mandated by the constitutional requirement that revenue measures originate in the House. I appreciate the cooperation of both the Rules Committee and the Judiciary Committee with regard to this provision. This will allow us to deal with the tax aspects of this bill on a House originated vehicle and avoid an unnecessary procedural impediment of the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has consumed 5 minutes.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] is recognized for 7½ minutes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot support the Ways and Means Committee amendment to H.R. 3810, the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1986.

The earlier version of this legislation gave unfair preferential treatment to a special group of aliens: special agricultural workers. One aspect of this unfair preferential treatment was that agricultural workers were not subject to any waiting period for AFDC eligibility, whereas nonagricultural aliens were subject to a 5-year disqualification period. It now appears that the sponsors of the bill are changing this provision so that both agricultural and nonagricultural aliens will be subject to a 5-year disqualification period for AFDC.

This change is a step in the right direction. But I believe it may be a case of "too little, too late." This change was made only begrudgingly and leaves a lot more which should have been addressed.

For example, the new version of the bill only restricts the eligibility of newly legalized aliens for AFDC. There are other welfare-assistance programs in our jurisdiction which the committee amendment does not address. The result is that both the amnesty group and special agricultural workers are eligible for these benefits without any disqualification period. The other welfare-assistance programs include SSI, foster care and adoption assistance, and child support enforcement. These programs should have been evaluated more closely to determine whether or not some disqualification period should have been imposed.

To its credit the committee amendment does simplify some of the enforcement and verification procedures in the original bill. The committee amendment allows more flexibility to the States in developing their own programs to verify the resident status of aliens applying for assistance programs. It also replaces an ambitious nationwide, Social Security Number Verification Program with a 2-year feasibility study of the issue.

Nevertheless, these programmatic improvements are overshadowed by the unfair special treatment of special agricultural workers and the failure to extend the disqualification period to other welfare programs beside AFDC. For this reason, I cannot support the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERMAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the gentleman for yielding at this point for the purpose of engaging in a colloquy with the gentleman which we had discussed earlier.

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman.

I would like to ask the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] a question: Sections 302 and 303 of H.R. 3810 provide that except as otherwise provided, an alien who acquires the status of an alien lawfully admitted for temporary residence, such status not having changed, is considered to be an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as described in section 101(a)(20), "other than under any provision of the immigration laws."

My understanding of this last clause in both subsections is that it refers to the limitation on the petitioning rights of persons lawfully admitted for temporary residence under sections 302 and 303 of the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. MAZZOLI. If the gentleman would yield, yes, it is my understanding. I further understand there are other disabilities and disqualifications in other sections of this bill, but the sections to which the gentleman just referred specifically deal with limitation of petitioning rights under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Mr. BERMAN. That is my understanding as well, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 2 minutes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] is recognized for 4½ minutes.

Mr. DAUB. I thank my distinguished leader, Mr. DUNCAN, for yielding me the balance of the time allocated to the Committee on Ways and Means.

I only want to dwell very briefly on that section of the bill that would be within our jurisdiction to indicate that the AFDC amendment which Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI spoke about, an amendment I authored, passed by the Committee on Ways and Means, is substantially incorporated.

I have to admit that is a slight improvement to the Schumer-Berman amendment. But the Schumer-Berman amendment has been one of my biggest obstacles to being able to support the bill.

I think it has gotten us all into the attitude of "it is a bad bill but" or "it is that time of the legislative season and I have to hold my nose in order to vote for it."

The fact of the matter is we have an opportunity on the McCollum amendment to strike general amnesty and under the Fish amendment we have the opportunity to strike extended voluntary departure. But we have no opportunity in this particular vote, when you vote for this bill, to strike the Schumer-Berman emphasis, the thrust of it, the heart of it, which is to give citizenship ultimately, permanent residence to legalized people who come here after 1981 and carve out a very special area of preference for the growers of California.

Now, we would not be here on the floor today even, I say to my colleagues, if a deal had not been cut. That deal was not just among Republicans and Democrats in the House, that deal was with the Senate to accept in the conference the Schumer-Berman compromise. There will not be any doubt about it. That part of the bill in conference is done. So if you vote for this bill, you are going to vote for the conference agreeing to bring back the Schumer-Berman language for agricultural workers. So that part of what will happen in conference is beyond dispute, I say to my colleagues. So if you vote for the bill, you will be voting for sure for that kind of amnesty for people who have not been in this country but for 2 or 3 years already, let alone those who will be able to come in and become permanent residents because they work temporarily in agriculture. I do not think that is fair.

There are five reasons why I think amnesty, generally, is wrong. You have an opportunity to take care of that by voting for the McCollum amendment which strikes general amnesty provisions and in its place leaves a provision that is in the bill called registry. Registry is a provision that allows case-by-case amnesty. It allows anybody here prior to 1976 to come forward to indicate they are married, that they have kids, that they go to school, they work, they are law abiding, they have not been in trouble, and they can become permanent residents and then become citizens. That is fair, and I think that is compassionate. So there is an amnesty section in the bill that survives if McCollum is successful. If Fish is successful in striking extended voluntary departure for Salvadorans and others in Central America, then indeed this bill just might be one that I, too, could hold my nose on and vote for the final passage and send it to conference.

If you look at the issue of population control, if you look at the fact, and everyone is in agreement that you are going to have between 10 and 20 million people legalized and if only half of those people come forward and take advantage of general amnesty and you multiply that times the chain of seven relatives who will be eligible for entry into this country, then you are looking at between 50 and 100 million new faces that will be added to the population flood to this country.

Amnesty is wrong because it sends the wrong signal to other nations. It tells people in other countries that if the United States grants amnesty once, it will do it again. Second, it is wrong because it will put severe strains on State and local governments which will find their costs for education and welfare and other benefits soaring as a result of this new load on the flood because of amnesty and the chain result that occurs from that.

Third, it is wrong, as I said before, because the U.S. economy is moving toward a high technology base. It requires greater amounts of education and training. Absorbing large numbers of unskilled workers from abroad will require a different kind of economy than the one that is emerging in the United States today.

Fourth, amnesty tells the world that the way to get into America is to break the law, cheat and come here because you can get permanent residence and then you become a citizen. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion what amnesty does is it cheapens the value of American citizenship. I do not think this House wants to do that in the way that is proposed by the bill that is in front of us today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] has expired.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 30 seconds, which is the balance of my time.

Mr. DAUB. I appreciate the remaining 30 seconds from the agricultural portion of this debate.

So I would urge my colleagues to think carefully about the dynamic of chain migration, the dynamic of this echo effect that causes so many more to come, legally, based on the chain of someone who came here illegally. I do not think this House wants to do that. We have a chance by voting for the McCollum amendment and for the Fish amendment to send this bill to conference in much better shape for the kind of result that will do us proud in immigration reform.

May I say in conclusion how much affection I have for the intellect and persistence of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] who I think ought to be given credit for all the work that has been done in immigration reform.

□ 1600

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the contribution of the Energy and Commerce Committee to this proposition that is before us is quite modest in scope.

We had the question of what Medicaid benefits would be extended to those in the category of legalized aliens who would be denied any welfare benefits, and thus Medicaid benefits. We carved some exceptions out, particularly in the area of emergencies in public health, which we considered the most appropriate. Those matters were not of controversy as we considered our portion of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] to clarify some other matters on the debate on this legislation.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, initially I might say in response to the comments of the gentleman from Nebraska earlier, that in all fairness to the extent we characterized a proposal by the names of its authors, it is only fair to point out that this was a Schumer, Berman, and Panetta proposal, as altered by the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. MAZZOLI, as further modified by the gentleman from California, Mr. LUNGREN, and as finally amended, informally but very specifically in this bill, by the gentlemen in the other body, Mr. SIMPSON and Mr. WILSON.

Second, I wanted to take a couple of minutes to discuss one aspect of that proposal, the replenishment part, because there are concerns that I am hearing about and I think they should be addressed.

Many people, this individual included, have great concerns about the replenishment feature of this program. And, of course, as Mr. PANETTA eloquently stated earlier, the replenishment feature is part of a total package. There were compromises made in that replenishment program which apply only after this law has been in effect for 3 years. Individuals who are not at this time authorized to work and who have not come under the other legalization features may, under certain very specific and limited conditions, be given work authority in this country to perform agricultural services.

Now there are features of that replenishment program that I do not like. But I want to ask anyone who had concerns about it to read the language of the bill. I truly believe that if this law is implemented fairly, the replenishment program that would trigger the additional granting of work authority to individuals in agriculture will never come about, because it is made possible only if there is a shortage of available workers in this country.

What we are doing with this proposal is to require the Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture first, to determine if there are any U.S. workers available and willing to perform agricultural services. Even as we speak, the Department of Labor indicates that there are at least 100,000 to 125,000 unemployed domestic farm workers in this country.

Second, we have a proposal that would provide in a rather elaborate fashion legal status to the many thousands of agricultural workers who are now undocumented workers working in agricultural services based on the test of whether or not they have in fact worked in agriculture in this country in a fashion which has been spelled out by earlier speakers.

Third, there is a program that I do not like, but it exists, and we have made some technical and substantive changes in that program, namely the H-2 program.

In each of these sources of labor, the Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture will have to determine that the growers in this country, before they are entitled to any additional sources, have exhausted those sources of labor and have taken meaningful and serious steps to recruit, to offer reasonable wages and adequate working conditions to the workers in this country, before they can find that any further work authority is provided.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] 1 additional minute.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask my friend, the gentleman from California, with whom I very violently disagreed in the early stages of this bill and whose patient help and cooperation has moved it to a posture I can support, please address for the purpose of the House and the gentleman from Nebraska the petitioning rights. There may be some misunderstanding about how quickly these special workers and the replenishment workers can really petition. Maybe the gentleman can address the question of this new wave and echo effect, and so forth, the gentleman talked about.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will be happy to deal with that question as I understand it.

Contrary to my wishes, the bill before us limits the petitioning rights of the agricultural workers who will be legalized under this program to exclude the whole series of preferences by which other lawful permanent residents of this country are allowed to petition for relatives. With the exception of spouses and minor children, there are no other petitioning rights for these individuals.

As to those particular rights, the gentleman from Kentucky far more than I can indicate the long backlog that now exists before even those petitions could bring anyone in.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition today to H.R. 3810, the Immigration Reform Act of 1986. My opposition to H.R. 3810 does not mean I am opposed categorically to immigration reform, for I am not, Nor does it mean I oppose legal immigration, for I do not. However, I am opposed to several of the provisions affecting illegal immigrants contained in the immigration reform bill we are considering today.

I am a native of and represent a southern border State—Texas, I am well aware of the problems associated with illegal immigration: The costs to public education, the costs to public hospitals, the costs for public health services, the increase in criminal activity and job displacement.

I do not believe that State and local governments in my home State of Texas or in any other State should be burdened by these increased social costs associated with the failure to control our border. I feel the solution is to provide more resources to patrol and control the border and to enforce our laws. The solution is not to grant amnesty, or legalization, thereby legitimizing previous illegal actions by an unknown number of aliens. How many illegal aliens qualify for amnesty? No one knows. There could be over 1 million illegal aliens in Texas alone who will be granted amnesty under this bill.

I oppose legalization. However, should this bill becomne law, thereby legalizing an unknown number of illegal aliens, I believe it is only right that the Federal Government be reponsible for the accompanying social costs. Therefore, I support the amemdments to the health provisions approved by the Committee on Energy and Commerce which were incorporated as original text with the adoption of the rule.

Mr. Chairman, these health provisions are critical for States like Texas that likely would have substantial numbers of illegal aliens applying for permanent resident status should this bill become law. I would urge the House to insist on retaining these provisions should the House find itself in conference with the other body on this bill.

In addition to amnesty, I oppose the agricultural worker provisions. Again, I feel that these provisions allow an unknown number of aliens to gain permanent resident status because of their ability to move out of agricultural work and the allowability of their repalcement by new aliens.

I also am concerned with the employer sanctions provisions, the workability of the verification system to determine alien status for employment and the antidiscrimination provision. I recognize that the antidiscrimination provision was included to prevent the possibility of increased discrimination due to employer sanctions, a real concern.

However, the provision gives aliens greater legal and procedural rights than currently affored to U.S. citizens, civil rights law already prohibits discrimination based on national origin. The antidiscrimination provision prohibits an employer from preferring a U.S. citizen over a noncitizen. I sumit that as written, the provision discriminates against U.S. citizens.

I also believe that if employer sanctions ultimately are going to be included in an immigration bill, they should be predicated on the hiring of an illegal alien, not on paperwork violations. As written, employers who do not even hire illegal aliens could be fined for noncompliance with recordkeeping and paperwork requirements that would serve no purpose. This is inefficient policy.

Mr. Chairman, for the previously stated major reasons, I oppose H.R. 3810 and urge its defeat. I recognize the need for immigration legislation, but cannot agree with the methods proposed. I do, however, endorse the provisions of the bill that recognize Federal responsibility for social services provided to aliens. I also support increasing our enforcement efforts.

□ 1610

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consumr.

Mr. Chairman, almost no issue has aroused public passions in southern California in recent years more than that of immigration. The district I represent in Orange County is but a few hours away from the porous United States-Mexico border south of San Diego.

While Congress has continued to struggle with the issue of immigration reform, the problem has escalated unchecked. In 1980, the Census Bureau estimated that the undocumented alien population ranged between 3.5 million and 6 million. Some economists now offer estimates that exceed 10 to 12 million illegal aliens. While we may never be able to determine the exact number of illegals who reside in the country, we are now certain of the 1.3 million illegal aliens that were apprehended by the INS in 1985. For every alien apprehended by the INS, it is estimated that twice that number enter this country undetected.

The surge of illegal immigrants entering the United States through our southern border has risen to such a level that the U.S. Border Patrol, responsible for protecting 66 miles of our southern border, has admitted defeat. They now acknowledge that they cannot begin to apprehend all illegals entering this country because their numbers and their determination far exceed manageable dimensions. The INS has arrested 270,000 illegal aliens in the past 6 months. This represents a 48-percent increase in the number of aliens arrested over the same period a year ago. Since May 1986 the Border Patrol has arrested an average of 70,000 aliens per month and has encountered an average of one illegal alien every 35 seconds.

Though San Diego County has endured countless hardships in the course of the struggle with illegal immigration, Los Angeles County has not escaped its share of economic and social devastation. According to the 1980 U.S. census, 49.8 percent of all undocumented aliens in this country were in California, 64.3 percent of those settled in Los Angeles County. Additional statistics point up the unjust burden thrust on Los Angles County by the mere chance of geography:

Los Angeles County is home to an estimated 1 million undocumented aliens;

Los Angeles County has more undocumented aliens than all other States combined with the exception of New York, Texas, and the entire State of California;

It costs local taxpayers more than $200 million each year to provide health, justice, and social services for this population. Out of that $200 million, the county department of health services spent approximately $115 million in 1985 on health care for the more than 600 undocumented aliens who daily occupy beds in the five county hospitals—none of which are currently reimbursed by the State or Federal Government;

Approximately 70 percent, or 18,000, of the babies born in country hospitals are to undocumented alien women. These babies are automatically American citizens, and are therefore eligible for all the welfare benefits available to any U.S. citizen;

And 48,000 children, whose mothers are undocumented aliens receive benefits costing county taxpayers $8 million per month;

As a result, to say that immigration reform is "must" legislation does not begin to capture the compelling need for enactment of a bill before the 99th Congress adjourns in a matter of days. While far from perfect, we have an historic opportunity to pass such legislation in the form of H.R. 3810, the Immigration Reform Act of 1986, now before us. As a member of the Judiciary Committee which crafted this bill, I rise to support it, warts and all, and urge my colleagues to do the same.

There are four key elements to immigration reform: Employer sanctions against those who knowingly hire illegal aliens; amnesty for those illegal aliens who are already here and have become part of our social and economic systems; increased enforcement at the border; and a viable guestworker program to meet the labor needs of agriculture in California and elsewhere.

The controversy over the substance of these issues has been made all the more difficult to resolve because of the nature of the rule for considering this bill as crafted by the House Rules Committee. The limitations in the rule on what amendments can and cannot be offered make our choices harder. For example, the bill as it comes to the floor provides certain social welfare benefits to illegal aliens. While they are not eligible for basic welfare programs, they are for some health and education programs. Despite the humanitarian motivations for such eligibility, these provisions are unreasonable given the enormous size of projected budget deficits. Despite these legitimate arguments against it, the rule does not permit an amendment to strike these provisions from the bill.

Nonetheless, the fundamental question to be addressed in evaluating this less than perfect package is simply this: Is it an improvement over the chaos which characterizes our current immigration control system? Since I believe it is an improvement, I intend to support the legislation.

As to the four key elements of immigration reform noted earlier, my thoughts are as follows. First, employer sanctions are justified by the fact that the magnet which draws illegal aliens to our country is not only personal freedom we enjoy but the economic opportunities which abound in California and in the United States generally compared to conditions in Mexico and other foreign countries. The bill puts stiff sanctions in effect for those who knowlingly hire illegal aliens.

Second, if we are going to have employer sanctions, then the other side of that coin is to provide some carefully drawn amnesty for illegal aliens that are already in the country. Many people in and out of Congress are unhappy about any form of amnesty, and I appreciate the concerns which prompt some to feel this way. However, we must confront the dilemma we are in whether we like it or not, namely, that illegal aliens who have been here a number of years are integral members of our society and economy. It is simply unrealistic to think that it is fair or workable to expect these people to go away. We need to wipe the slate clean, in terms of legal status, in order to hold employers accountable for future actions in hiring illegal aliens since this will be a new form of liability.

Third, additional resources for the border patrol are absolutely necessary.

Fourth, the substantial agricultural operations in our State, which bring food to our tables and employ many of our citizens, depends upon a reliable supply of temporary labor. A major flaw of the bill and the procedures under which it is being considered is the lack of a guestworker program along the lines of the original Senate bill and the lack of an opportunity to add one in the House. However, the provisions in H.R. 3810 as it stands today are in fact an improvement over the H-2 Program in current law.

We cannot be blind to the fact that illegal aliens are living in a jungle today. They are being preyed upon by ruthless people and cannot pursue the customary channels for legal redress since to do so would expose their illegal status. By providing for a more viable H-2 Program, this legislation advances basic human rights.

Last, I am pleased that an amendment which I introduced several years ago has been made in order under the rule. The amendment requires the Immigration and Naturalization Service to obtain either the consent of the owner or a search warrant before entering a farm or other agriculture operation in search of illegal aliens. House Members will have the opportunity to vote to reject or accept this provision. If adopted, this provision will reduce unnecessary crop damage resulting from indiscriminate INS "sweeps" and provide farmers and farmworkers the same degree of constitutional protection that their counterparts in other aspects of manufacture already enjoy.

In conclusion, I urge support for this legislation since action on immigration reform, even with the problems I have cited with this version, is a much better outcome than again adjourning for the session without enactment of comprehensive legislation. Major improvements are necessary to make the bill acceptable before enactment. At present, our much hailed U.S. melting pot is in danger of overflowing. The immigration reform effort now underway is crucial to the future of this Nation. It is not perfect, it is not what I would have drafted if given a free hand. It is however, better than nothing. Make no mistake, that is the choice. This, or nothing. In light of the severity of the immigration crisis and the social and economic implications for our Nation if the problem continues unchecked, the choice is easy. This, is better than nothing. I remain hopeful that some of its defects will be corrected before it is sent to the President.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman for Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I have once again listened with very much interest to the gentleman as I did back in 1984, and the gentleman would probably remember that I cited the gentleman's discussion he had in the well in 1984, 2 years ago, as one of the most important statements that I have heard on this floor in all my years here.

It reflected the gentleman's insight and hard work and thoughtful process. I have heard the gentleman's statement today, and I applaud the gentleman on again reaching the real truth, the kernel of wisdom in all of this.

There is a responsibility to have employer sanctions and with it comes a further responsibility to the employers and to the employees who have made America what it is who add to our gross national product. I want to thank the gentleman for having reached that posture.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that we support Mr. MOAKLEY's provisions changing the definition of political refugees in Salvadoran and Nicaraguan refugees.

I am particularly sensitive to this issue because the Governor of my State, the Honorable Toney Anaya, declared New Mexico a sanctuary State. While I strongly opposed this action, I do feel we must address the issue of political refugees in Central America through the legislative process.

The facts supporting Mr. MOAKLEY's provision are compelling.

Mr. Chairman, the human rights situations in both El Salvador and Nicaragua continue to be of great concern. According to the Human Rights Office of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of San Salvador, nearly 2,000 civilian noncombatants disappeared or were killed in 1985 alone. This figure does not include the number of combatants that were killed. The New York Times, in a recent story, reports that the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador has documented over 100 Salvadoran civilians have been killed by guerrilla land mines since January of this year—and the number is on the rise. In Nicaragua, according to a recent U.S. State Department report—"Crackdown on Freedom in Nicaragua and profiles of Internal Opposition Leaders," August 1986—"the Sandinista Government has intensified repression" in that country. Additionally, various human rights groups have documented human rights abuses by the Contra forces—and there are significant civilian casualties as a result of the fighting between the Sandinistas and Contras.

In the past, various administrations have granted refugees, in similar situations as the Salvadorans and Nicaraguans, a temporary stay of deportation known as extended voluntary departure [EVD]. EVD has been granted to 15 different national groups during the past 25 years. It currently protects from deportation Poles, Afghans, Ugandans, and Ethiopians. This administration, however, has failed to extend this protection to Salvadorans and Nicaraguans.

It is important to clarify that EVD does not require either a body count of massacred returnees or that potential returnees prove that they will be singled out for persecution if they are sent home. Such a criteria is appropriate only to the higher asylum status. EVD has always been conferred upon nationalities due to unstable or unsettled conditions in potential deportees' homeland.

For example, the December 2, 1980, INS directive announcing the currently effective grant of EVD for Afghans stated explicitly that it was for Afghans who resist returning to Afghanistan because of the turmoil prevailing in that country rather than because of fear of persecution.

The issue you will be asked to vote on during consideration of the immigration bill, is whether Salvadorans and Nicaraguans will be granted an EVD-like status—and, therefore, be treated in the same manner as refugees in similarly situated circumstances. The proposal advocated would suspend deportations for approximately 2 years, pending a General Accounting Office study on the conditions in El Salvador and Nicaragua.

It is important to remember that this is not—and should not become—a foreign policy issue. This is not a debate on the performance of President Duarte—and it is not a debate on whether or not you support aid to the Contras. The issue is the protection of lives.

It is my hope that the House will support protection for Salvadorans and Nicaraguans.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MAZZOLI Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we are about to enter the second phase of the bill, of the bill's progress, which is the amendment phase. We have now before us 14 amendments which are listed in the rule. They will be taken as listed. Each has a time limit to it. There are 14 amendments, as I have said, 4 of which are limited to 10 minutes debate; 5 minutes, equally divided.

The other 10 are 20-minute amendments; 10 minutes on each side. Doing a rough calculation of minutes, that is a total, if we could go through it without recorded votes, of 240 minutes or basically 4 hours. Obviously, there will be some recorded votes but I guess my thought would be that the decision that the Committee reaches or the House reaches is one it will reach in its wisdom. But it is the hope of the gentleman from Kentucky, and in this I am stating the sentiments of the gentleman from New Jersey, our distinguished chairman, who is in the other body at the time on the impeachment question, that we try to finish the bill tonight. We have a very limited amount of time in this legislative session; we have many other activities which have to be discharged. As I said, I would hope that after we have our debate that we might have a spirited debate in the limited time, have a vote, and then hopefully move on to the next amendment.

□ 1620

Mr. ZSCHAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ZSCHAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this immigration reform legislation. Illegal immigration is a critical problem which we must address with a sense of urgency and with a responsible plan of action.

Mr. Chairman, if this is a typical month, over 100,000 people will illegally cross the U.S. border into California during October. This ever-growing number of illegal aliens in the United States—as high as 12 million—is causing the United States to withdraw the warm welcome Americans have traditionally given to immigrants from Europe, Mexico, Central and South America, and Asia. These statistics confirm that we have lost control of our borders.

It's essential that we regain control of our borders not only as a deterrent to illegal immigration, but also to preserve our ability to honor treaties, to collect tariffs, and to effectively interdict illegal drugs.

I support a two-pronged approach to this problem:

The first is to beef up our border patrol. For the past 4 years, over 1 million illegal aliens have been apprehended each year crossing the U.S. border. This year apprehensions are expected to be 2 million. At the same time the number of apprehensions have doubled, there has been only a slight increase in the number of agents to patrol the border.

Our second goal must be to reduce the incentive for aliens to come here illegally. A key provision in this bill imposes sanctions on employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens. This is based on the belief that if employers of illegal aliens are fined, they will no longer provide such jobs, and the lack of jobs will discourage foreign nationals from entering the country illegally. However, while eliminating most jobs for illegal aliens, it's important also to establish a workable mechanism to help California agriculture meet its labor needs while eliminating the factors which have permitted exploitation of foreign laborers in the past.

H.R. 3810 satisfies all of these needs. It represents a significant improvement over the 1984 immigration reform bill. It is less costly, sunsets employer sanctions if they don't work, and defers the deportation of Salvadoran and Nicaraguan refugees while the risks to them in their own countries are studied.

Today, we are faced with a crisis situation. The Immigration and Naturalization Service reports that its apprehensions of illegal aliens have increased by 50 percent over last year, and that one-third of those they apprehend have illegal drugs in their possession. Just this week we passed a comprehensive drug reform bill, but more needs to be done. With this bill, we have the opportunity to do more to fight the war against drugs and also to regain control of our border.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3810.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3810 and to the rule under which it is being considered. For the second straight Congress we are being forced to consider the important and complex issue of immigration reform at the 11th hour under unreasonable and unfair truncated legislative procedures. This year's bill contains some provisions that serve both practical and humanitarian ends. However, ultimately the bill will not serve its stated purpose of gaining control of our national borders, because it ignores the historical and economic reality of our sourthern border and does not address the causes of current immigration waves. Moreover, the bill will inevitably result in discriminatory treatment of foreign-looking people and incredibly, inexcusably resurrect and legitimize the practice of indentured servitude.

Historically, our borders have been open to immigration from the Western Hemisphere. Until our last major effort at immigration "reform" in 1965, there were no quotas or limitations on immigrants from this hemisphere; in essence, a visa applicant had only to show that a job was available and that he or she was not otherwise disqualified. With the advent of the quota system, legal immigration has become virtually impossible from those countries where historical ties, geography, poverty, and civil strife combine to make large waves of immigration inevitable. This bill will not work, because it totally ignores historical patterns. Today's so-called illegal immigration crisis exists not so much because the numbers seeking to live and work in this country are greater, but because the 1965 reform makes legal entry all but impossible.

The flow of immigration—legal or illegal—is a sure index of desperation. Just as the Irish potato famine set off a wave of immigration, just as the Vietnam debacle threw the boat people to the sea, we have today a wave of immigrants fleeing from misery and desperation. The people we know as illegal immigrants do not want to become lawbreakers, but they cannot and will not let laws stand between them and what may be their only chance to survive or attain some semblance of human dignity. Ultimately, the only way to curb illegal entry is to address the human desperation behind illegal immigration. For this reason I have long supported the creation of a bilateral United States-Mexico Development Bank and a free trade zone. I believe that such actions would go far to create new opportunities and reduce desperation on both sides of the border. This bill, however, will not work because it fails to address the forces pushing immigration.

What the bill surely will do is to create a pervasive system of discrimination against citizens and legal residents who have foreign appearance and, for all practical purposes, to revive the cruel practice of indentured servitude. Employer sanctions are the heart of this bill, but without a uniform Federal identification document, employer sanctions simply cannot be enforced without discriminatory effect. Notwithstanding provisions prohibiting discrimination, it is too much to ask of employers that they fairly and accurately determine who may be hired and who may not, when the threat of sanctions hangs over an incorrect decision. Perhaps correctly, the bill explicitly states that it does not authorize creation of a national identification card. But in doing so it replaces the invasion of everyone's privacy with pervasive and invidious discrimination against substantial minority populations.

While the employer sanctions provisions are purportedly designed to reduce the flow of immigration, the so-called Schumer agricultural worker section directly undercuts that goal through its replenishment program. That giant concession to farming interests invites additional aliens to this country with the promise of legalization, so long as they are willing to be indentured to agriculture. The risk of exploitation in such a program is endemic. Whatever else it may be, such a program is not immigration reform.

I support some provisions of H.R. 3810 independently, such as those granting extended voluntary departure status to Salvadorans and Nicaraguans. However, I cannot support a package that will privatize law enforcement, that will result in widespread discrimination, that will recreate scandalous foreign worker programs, and that ultimately will not solve the problems it seeks to address.

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my great dissatisfaction with the immigration reform legislation under consideration by the House today. This bill represents the third attempt in as many years to address the severe immigration problem in this Nation. Once again, a solution to the immediate problem of uncontrollable borders has been lost in an onslaught of provisions that would ultimately complicate and exacerbate rather than alleviate the immigration problem.

As a Representative from one of the border States, I am especially concerned about the loss of border control that resulted in the presence of an estimated 3.5 million to 6 million illegal aliens in the United States in 1985. Last year, the Immigration and Naturalization Service [INS] deported approximately 1.3 million aliens, but there simply is not sufficient enforcement personnel to curb the steady flow of illegals. At present, the INS has only one agent for every 9.8 miles along the expansive southwest border. It is my view, and that of an overwhelming number of my west Texas constituents, that the first step in controlling illegal immigration is greater enforcement of our existing immigration laws. This enforcement cannot possibly by achieved while the number of enforcement personnel remains deficient.

So, instead of devising a means for more effective border control, the House has assembled a so-called immigration reform package with a multitude of controversial provisions. Amnesty for illegal aliens is one of the provisions that I consider to be most objectionable. In effect, those individuals who have broken the law in crossing U.S. borders are being rewarded by granting them citizenship. Besides discouraging respect for our Nation's laws, amnesty cheapens the meaning and value of citizenship for those persons who have patiently waited through our standard citizenship process.

The House immigration package would also encourage discrimination against individuas of Hispanic origin who are legal citizens of the United States. By requiring employers to verify the citizenship of each employee, those individuals with Hispanic surnames, like many of my 19th District constituents, might be subjected to discriminatory hiring practices. Small businesses would be especially disadvantaged by the employer sanction provisions since burdensome recordkeeping would be mandatory for jobs ranging from temporary yard work to running errands.

Of course, one of the greatest impacts that the immigration reform package would have on west Texas would be in the agricultural sector. While growers depend on a readily available supply of workers, it is my view that the provisions of this immigration bill granting temporary resident status to agricultural workers would serve as a vehicle for increased legalization. Most of the farmworkers legalized under the greencard provisions would be likely to move out of agriculture. It would not solve the problem of available farmworkers, but it would create a secondary legalization program instead. Individuals crossing the border claiming that they are agriculture workers will be given a presumption of eligibility, thus interfering with the already deficient apprehension of aliens.

Another example of the widespread scope of this legislation is the authority granted in the H-2 provisions to legal services attorneys that would allow them to represent temporary foreign agricultural workers. The situation that exists in my congressional district clearly illustrates the adverse effect that the LSC has already had on agriculture. Hereford, TX, is the location of an LSC grantee that has repeatedly brought costly class action suits against numerous farmers. Several have switched to crops that can be harvested mechanically to avoid having to hire migrant workers. The result has not only damaged the agricultural balance of Hereford, but has also inhibited employment opportunities for migrant workers.

In addition, I can hardly see the logic in extending LSC services to H-2 workers who are not U.S. citizens or U.S. taxpayers. American citizens would be forced to compete with foreigners for services financed by taxpayer dollars. Considering our critical budget deficit, this is most inappropriate, unwise and costly.

Mr. Chairman, there can be little doubt that the flood of illegal immigrants into the United States must be curtailed. The financial and ethical effects of illegal immigration are immense. It is my view, however, that this package represents an ineffective attempt to solve the immediate problem. Providing noncitizens with free legal assistance or requiring employers to verify the citizenship of each individual they consider hiring will not curb the flow of individuals that are crossing the borders of our country each day.

It is important to remember that the root of the immigration problem lies in the economic situation of Mexico. Poverty and debt in Mexico makes the United States a powerful and very attractive magnet. A true solution to illegal immigration can be achieved only when Mexico finds a means to alleviate its internal problems. In the interim, we must protect our borders by fortifying and enforcing immigration laws, and we must ensure that those guarding our borders have the resources necessary to do this job.

I intend to channel my support and efforts toward effective and responsible legislative actions which address the true problem of illegal immigration. I strongly oppose, and I urge my colleagues to oppose, this misguided, burdensome and costly attempt to preserve the sanctity of the U.S. borders.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, everyone knows we have to so something about our immigration problem. U.S. immigration agents expect approximately 4 million illegals to cross our borders this year. Let's stop for a moment to put this figure in perspective.

Four million people breaks down to about 333,000 people per month—that's 183,000 more people than live in Arlington, VA, moving to the United States every month. Four million people per year amounts to the population of Lebanon, or Norway, or Israel. This figure is higher than the combined populations of Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island. Although the scenario is unlikely, at the present rate it would only take 17 years to empty the entire country of Mexico.

Of those 4 million, the Border Patrol will apprehend about 1.8 million. I've been to the border; I've seen what takes place. After an illegal is caught, he or she is processed and taken back to Mexico in a matter of hours. When asked what those people typically do next, the agent repled, "Return to the U.S. within the hour."

In my district made up of San Diego County and Orange County we have had a tragic increase in drugs, crime, prostitution, and social problems. Now I read in the San Diego Union that the aliens are preying on our schoolchildren by stealing their lunch money.

How long can we wait? It is imperative that Congress pass immigration reform legislation now.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that in this complicated and controversial bill there is one provision which all reasonable legislators should be able to support. That provision has to do with colonial quotas and would raise the quota for Hong Kong from 600 to 5,000 a year.

It would have been a clear injustice to address the problems of illegals in this vast immigration reform bill and leave out this class of people who are trying to enter the United States legally under very unfavorable odds.

Let me just review for my colleagues some of the odds which exist for American citizens who wish to legally bring their close relatives in Hong Kong to this country. According to the State Department Bulletin on Immigration, as of October 1986, visas are currently being issued to the brothers and sisters of American citizens (fifth preference) who applied prior to February 22, 1974. For second preference—spouses and unmarried sons and daughters of permanent residents—visa applications are backed up to June 29, 1979. And even the most promising classification, first preference—unmarried sons and daughters of citizens—is backed up to April 1981.

As the Representative of the 15th Congressional District of New York, which includes Chinatown, I am especially interested in increasing the Hong Kong quota because of the hardships which my constituents have suffered as a result of families long kept apart. But obviously my colleagues on the House and Senate Judiciary Committees are also sensitive to this issue since the colonial quota increase was included in both the House and Senate versions. On behalf of my constituents who have new hope for family reunification, I thank them and commend them for their insight.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to describe an amendment I offered to H.R. 3810, the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1986, which has been incroporated as original text in the substitute. I am the ranking Republican on the Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee of the Education and Labor Committee, and my amendment relates to a labor-management issue. The amendment will protect certain American workers from competition by aliens during a period when the American workers are on strike.

The purpose of my amendment is to provide consistency in the law for all categories of temporary alien workers. But before I describe my amendment, I will first share with you some background on the need for the amendment and the current state of the law.

As you know, earlier this year flight attendants went on strike against TWA. Many of my constituents who worked for TWA brought to my attention allegations that the company employed aliens to work on Trans-Atlantic flights while American employees were striking the airline. During an investigation of these allegations, I discovered that it is perfectly legal for a company to do this.

The Immigration and Nationality Act permits the issuance of temporary visas for certain foreign persons who plan to work as crewmembers on an American vessel or aircraft which either departs from or arrives at a foreign country; that is, one of the landings is in the United States and other must be in a foreign country. These are called nonimmigrant crew visas.

The act also allows the issuance of temporary visas for other types of nonimmigrant aliens for purposes of performing temporary labor in this country—for example, temporary farmworkers. However, regulations prohibit the issuance of these visas during strikes to all other temporary workers—those nonimmigrant aliens who come temporarily to the United States to perform temporary services or labor other than as crewmembers.

There is no such prohibition against the issuance of nonimmigrant alien crewmember visas during strikes of American crewmembers. This a a gap in the law, and in my opinion an unintentional one, permitting unfair competition against American workers which must be closed. I feel very strongly that aliens should not be allowed into this country to hurt American employees by working as strikebreakers. The Government should certainly not help them do so by issuing special visas.

My amendment will close this gap in the law. The amendment, which is entitled "Denial of Crew Member Nonimmigrant Visas in Cases of Strikes," simply states that an alien may not be admitted to the United States as an alien crewman "for the purpose of performing service on board a vessel or aircraft at a time when there is a strike in the bargaining unit of the employer in which the alien intends to perform such service." To repeat, this will make the law regarding the issuance of temporary nonimmigrant visas to alien crewmembers consistent with the prohibition against issuing visas to other categories of temporary alien workers. It is an important and necessary amendment to the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Chairman, I've been in Congress for 6 years now, and have listened to, and participated in, efforts to reform our immigration laws since the first day I arrived.

As the Representative of an urban area, and one that has a very large population of first- and second-generation immigrants, I am especially mindful of the serious nature of our immigration policies, and their impact on the peoples of the world.

During the past 6 years, we've examined immigration policies and practices; we've looked at the constitutional and statutory guidelines for allowing others to come to our shores; we've examined the social and economic factors involved in the guestworker programs and other variances to immigration law; and we've tried to broaden our outlook to take into consideration the legitimate political and human rights concerns that lead men and women to want to come to the United States.

Today, we see the fruits of those labors in the bill before us.

And, as much as I think this bill has merit, and as much as I would like to support it, I have a serious problem that will cause me to oppose it in its present form.

Mr. Chairman, my opposition to this immigration bill arises because of its dependence on the use of foreign agricultural workers, imported into this country at a time when unemployment among domestic farmworkers and others involved in the agriculture industry is particularly acute.

Just last month, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that some 235,000 agricultural workers were unemployed and actively seeking work.

These figures don't include the statistics on those agriculture workers who have dropped out of the "seeking work" category, or the number of farmers who own their land but are unable to work because of economic or other factors.

The Department of Agriculture has reported that there are roughly one million seasonal farmworkers in the United States. The argument that this so-called immigration reform would cause crippling labor shortages for the growers ignores the extremely high levels of unemployment among the domestic workers.

In 1985, farmworker unemployment rates stood at 14.3 percent—twice the total national average unemployment rate.

In areas where undocumented farm labor is allegedly used the most by growers, the unemployment rates among domestic workers is particularly high—exceeding 30 percent, for instance, in California's Imperial County and above 40 percent in Texas' Starr County.

There are two issues here—first, if the growers and other employers would just pay workers decent wages, they could attract enough workers in the ranks of the millions of unemployed legal residents of this country to meet all of their employment needs.

Second, this Nation's policy should, I think, be more attuned to help our own unemployed workers to get where the work is and find jobs than attuned to help devise elaborate formulas to allow growers to continue using illegal aliens as underpaid farmworkers.

The paradox of using significant numbers of undocumented farmworkers during a time of intolerably high domestic unemployment in the agriculture industry only sustains the unjust system of low wages, substandard working conditions, and high profit margins that have produced such misery on our farms in the past.

I can't support such a system. I can't vote to continue the injustices under these programs, or to strengthen the economic bondage of those who work in our fields.

For these reasons, I intend to vote "no" on this bill.

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Chairman, it is said that the "third time's a charm." Well, it appears as if the House will adhere to this saying when we agree today to H.R. 3810, the Immigration Reform Act of 1986.

I rise in support of this bill for several reasons. First and foremost, my constituents are demanding action by Congress to control the influx of illegal aliens. Although H.R. 3810 is not without flaw, it does represent the best hope for immigration reform now, by this Congress. And action now is what the citizens in the 41st District of California want.

Second, the bill before us is more restrictive in its treatment of foreign workers than was the original House proposal which was voted down earlier by this House on a procedural vote. The requirement for 90 working days over a 3-year period is more in line with the basic legalization provisions in title II of H.R. 3810. While not enthusiastic about any two-tier legalization system, I will support this provision as necessary for enactment of major immigration legislation.

H.R. 3810 imposes employer sanctions on those who knowingly hire undocumented aliens and provides additional resources for enforcement agencies. The primary reason for the influx of aliens is the prospect for gainful employment. Until and unless employers are threatened with civil and criminal penalties, there is little hope that the United States will be able to stem the flow of illegals pouring into the United States. Moreover, unless our Federal agents—the INS and Border Patrol—are given the resources necessary to control the border and efficiently process legalization petitions, the lure of successful illegal entry will drive aliens across our border. H.R. 3810 acts responsibly in these two important areas.

Having outlined my support for immigration reform and this bill in particular, I would like to discuss one issue which will not be addressed during today's debate. It involves an amendment I intended to offer, and would have been able to offer, had the rule governing today's debate been similar to the two rules previously considered by the House. Unfortunately, in an understandable attempt to expedite enactment of immigration reform legislation, my amendment—and some others—were denied a hearing on the floor.

My amendment would have provided Federal reimbursement to localities for costs of emergency hospital services furnished to illegal aliens for fiscal years 1987–88.

Counties and cities throughout the Nation, particularly in our border communities, face a dilemma. As providers-of-last-resort, county run hospitals are forced to treat patients who have emergencies regardless of their ability to pay for services rendered. This is the case for legal residents of this country as well as illegal aliens. In the latter case, local jurisdictions are being forced to bear emergency health care costs resulting from a Federal failure to control its borders. The obvious consequences are that localities must divert funds reserved for a host of other needed services to pay for emergency health care for undocumented aliens.

This is not a new issue. It has, however, grown more acute as the number of illegal aliens has skyrocketed the past couple years. In San Diego alone, the county has borne $16.5 million over 5 years for providing emergency treatment to illegal aliens. Is it fair to ask taxpayers in this community to shoulder this cost because the Federal Government is unable to control the national border? I don't believe so and am sure that a majority of my colleagues would agree.

Although this matter will not be decided upon today by this House, I plan to pursue hearings and legislative remedies in the 100th Congress. Moreover, I call on my colleagues who have shown leadership on this issue—Mr. COELHO, Mr. COLEMAN, and Mr. ROYBAL—to combine our efforts in seeking a solution to this problem.

Mr. Chairman, despite the omission of my amendment, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3810 and urge Members to adopt this vital piece of legislation. With this action today, there is still a possibility that a House-Senate conference can report a bill back to both Houses for final approval. The Nation has waited 8 long years for immigration reform. The time to act is now.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the provision of H.R. 3810 that would suspend the deportation of Salvadoran and Nicaraguan nationals from the United States that is contained in this bill. This provision would establish an appropriate and humanitarian U.S. response to conditions of violence in these two countries. It would not give these individuals the legal right to remain here permanently, but would ensure that they will not be deported to areas where the general level of violence creates a potential risk to every individual's safety.

The violence in Central America has many causes. The extended voluntary departure provision of H.R. 3810 does not try to blame the violence on any particular force, faction, or government. This provision would simply establish a U.S. policy toward individuals who are now in the United States. It would say that we should not return these individuals into areas where they may become the victims of violence.

One common misconception is that our existing asylum procedure offers an adequate solution to this problem. Political asylum is appropriate for people who can demonstrate a direct threat to themselves as individuals. Many Salvadorans and Nicaraguans may be unable to demonstrate that they face a specific threat to their safety if deported. Yet they will be at risk if they are sent back to countries which are torn by violence. Extended voluntary departure is a more appropriate status for many of these individuals.

Our Nation's treatment of Central American refugees has aroused deep concern in the congressional district that I represent. Many churches, organizations, and individuals have been involved in efforts to assist refugees. The Seattle City Council has declared Seattle a "City of Sanctuary."

The people of Washington's Seventh District want our Nation to live up to its historic commitment to refugees. They know that extended voluntary departure status has been granted to people from Afghanistan, Cambodia, Cuba, Chile, Ethiopia, Iran, Poland, Uganda, Vietnam, and other countries. They are proud that our country was willing to help these people, and they want us to uphold our humanitarian traditions by helping Central Americans today. I urge my colleagues to support this provision of H.R. 3810.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, some objections have been raised about employment sanctions and the verification of job applicants by employers. Arguments have been made that these provisions would be difficult or too burdensome for employers to follow, or would be discriminatory to some individuals. The immigration reform measure contains a provision I offered as an amendment which would help ease the burden of employer sanctions. Specifically, my amendment would require the Department of Justice, in cooperation with the Departments of Labor and Health and Human Services, to study the feasibility of developing a telephone system for purposes of verifying the status of job applicants. This study is to be conducted within 12 months of the enactment of this bill.

This provision is fair both to the alien applying for employment in the United States and the employer who may fear reprisal for hiring any foreign worker regardless of legal status. The use of a telephone verification system for employment purposes has four advantages:

First, it would be less burdensome to employers in proving the legal status of applicants since they would need only to pick up the telephone to verify their immigration status. No extra paperwork would be involved and they would be assured of their compliance with the provisions of the alien employment law.

Second, it would be a more effective tool in determining the authenticity of alien status since many documents proving status can be easily forged.

Third, the alien could be assured after status has been verified that no undue pressure or threat of employment termination would be placed upon him or her.

Fourth, it would show American citizens and legal residents that action is being taken to ensure that their prospective jobs are not being taken away because of the hiring of illegal aliens.

I believe there is almost unanimous agreement that the principal reasons aliens migrate to the United States are available employment and the belief that it is not illegal for employers to hire illegal aliens. One way of solving this problem is to make it illegal for employers to hire illegal aliens and by imposing penalties on those employers who do.

However, it would be unfair to impose a cumbersome procedure upon employers to prove their compliance with the law. In addition, if the procedure is too burdensome, many legal aliens may be denied jobs because they may look illegal by nature of their skin color or accent.

That is why my amendment on studying the use of a telephone employment verification system for applicants and implementing its findings is needed. It is an easy and effective way to prove one's status without denying a person a job to which they may be entitled. For the employer, a job applicant may be offered employment in accordance with the law without fear of undue punishment.

I strongly favor immigration reform. An immigration policy that realistically allows us to resume control of our borders and at the same time promotes an orderly system of justice for the migration of aliens into our country is urgently needed. The imposition of employer sanctions, prohibitions against employment discrimination, and the strengthening of our border patrol are elements of reform that the majority of the American people support. I urge my colleagues to enact this legislation before this Congress adjourns.

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Chairman, the influx of illegal immigrants in our country has aroused great anger and debate among some sections of our country. Depending on whom you speak to, claims made that illegal immigrants displace American workers or drain Federal, State, and local resources by abusing assistance programs can either be verified or contradicted. Consequently, there have been demands on Congress to stem the tide of illegal immigration; to do something.

Defining "something" is a problem Congress has unsuccessfully attempted to resolve during the past 5 years. As Members of Congress we have an obligation to enact fair and decent legislation. In order for immigration reform legislation to truly be fair and decent it must address the root causes of illegal immigration—the economic and political instability in home countries. If we, as the American people's elected representatives, fail to address these root causes, any legislation we enact will simply be of cosmetic value, a hollow demonstration that something was done.

If H.R. 3810 is enacted, our Nation will wind up with a law that merely serves to placate some while inflicting suffering on others. H.R. 3810 is clearly a flawed bill, as evidenced by the difficulty it had reaching the House floor. I strongly oppose this ill-conceived piece of legislation and I will oppose its final passage.

The cornerstone of this legislation is the incorporation of employer sanctions. I am unalterably opposed to employer sanctions because of the resulting discrimination against people who are perceived to be "foreign-looking" or who have "foreign-sounding" names. My voting record while I served in the Texas Legislature and my voting record in this body demonstrates my long-standing opposition to employer sanctions and my grave concern over consequent discrimination. During all those years, there has been insufficient evidence that would rationally lead us to conclude that implementing employer sanctions would halt illegal immigration without massive discrimination resulting.

My opposition to the enactment of guest-worker programs, reminiscent of the abusive bracero program that wreaked physical, mental, and economic havoc on countless people, is also well established. I will not tolerate a return to such a misguided program. After clamors to bring an immigration bill to the floor which included a guest-worker program, a compromise was reached in the guest-worker provision of the legislation before us. Unfortunately, this compromise is just that, a compromise filled with flaws.

Today I will support those amendments which seek to protect both the legal and illegal population from abuse and discrimination. But on final passage, I will oppose H.R. 3810. Legislation enacted by the U.S. Congress must be premised on our great Nation's commitment to fairness, compassion, and decency. Tragically, H.R. 3810 fails to demonstrate this commitment. It is a deceptive bill as well, claiming to be immigration reform, yet failing to address the political and economic causes of illegal immigration. H.R. 3810, if enacted, will prove to create more ills than it purports to remedy. I urge my collegues to oppose this flawed legislation.

Mr. DIOGUARDI. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my strong support for an important provision that was included in the Immigration Reform Act of 1986. The provision is designed to reform the antiquated preference system. This was, and will continue to be, an area of great concern to myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DONNELLY. The inclusion of preference system reform was the result of a strong bipartisan effort.

On July 4 of this year, we saw a great outpouring of emotion and the bolstering of pride as we celebrated the 100th birthday of that glorious lady—the Statue of Liberty. Unfortunately, had the present preference system been in effect for all of those 100 years, those individuals most deeply moved by the July 4 celebration would not be here today. In fact, my father, who looked up at Lady Liberty with awe and admiration when he came through Ellis Island in 1929 would not have been allowed to enter the United States had the current preference system been in place.

Earlier this year, I sponsored legislation addressing this gross inequity. In a joint bipartisan effort, similar language was incorporated into the Immigration Reform Act of 1986. Under this provision, the inequities contained in the current preference system that discriminated against several countries were eliminated.

Ireland provided close to 5,000 immigrants per year in the 1950's or 2 percent of the total number of immigrants. Last year, the number of Irish immigrants had dwindled to just over 500 visas or 0.2 percent of the total. Similarly, Italian immigrants in the 1950's accounted for 7 percent of the immigrants entering the United States. In 1985, Italian immigrants accounted for only 0.5 percent of new arrivals. The same case could be made on behalf of several other countries.

The intent of this provision, as designed by Representative DONNELLY and myself, is to promote fairness in the current preference system. This provision's inclusion results in an additional 4,500 visas for Ireland, 7,500 visas for Italy and 3,500 visas for Poland. The same victory can be claimed for several other countries currently being discriminated against by the current preference system.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank Mr. DONNELLY for his efforts which were instrumental as I worked to have this provision incorporated into the bill, and to my colleagues for their efforts in righting this inequity.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3810, the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act. There exists an urgent need to enact meaningful immigration reform legislation. This is an important economic, environmental and humanitarian issue. This bill represents the culmination of months of careful negotiation and deliberation. It contains major provisions which address the difficult and troubling issues involved in immigration reform.

First and foremost, this bill improves security along our borders, providing the funding necessary to increase border patrol personnel by 50 percent. This is necessary both to halt illegal immigration and also to end drug trafficking across our southern border. In 1985 the INS located over 1.3 million illegal aliens, more than double the total number of immigrants legally admitted last year. This is the highest apprehension figure in INS history, indicating that illegal immigration is increasing. Further, a substantial number of these aliens are repeat offenders. These figures show that our borders are out of control, and that apprehending and returning illegal immigrants to their homelands is not enough. Our border patrol must be strengthened if we are to meaningfully attack illegal immigration. I have consistently supported strengthening our borders, and I am pleased that the House has made this important provision.

H.R. 3810 also provides a legalization program for agricultural workers who have lived in the United States and been employed harvesting perishable crops for at least 90 days during each of the last 3 years. These workers may apply for temporary resident status, with adjustment to permanent resident status after 1 year. Additionally, workers who have been employed in agriculture for 90 days during the past year may apply for temporary resident status, with adjustment to permanent resident status in 2 years. Before being granted permanent resident status, undocumented workers must show basic citizenship skills. This provision meets the needs of agriculture for a stable workforce while ensuring the rights of those who harvest our produce and contribute to our economy.

This legislation requires that, in order to qualify for citizenship, applicants must demonstrate an understanding of English, and a knowlege and understanding of U.S. history and Government or a pursuit of a course of study to achieve such skills. If applicable, applicants must register for the military selective service. Additionally, any individual who has been convicted of any felony or three or more misdemeanors committed in the United States will be ineligible for permanent residence status.

Most undocumented workers legalized under this legislation will not be eligible for Federal financial assistance, including Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC], Medicaid, and food stamps. Exceptions would be provided, under regulations established by the Justice Department, in cases involving old age, blindness, and disability.

H.R 3810 also provides sanctions for employers who hire illegal aliens. Jobs are the magnet that attracts illegal immigration. As long as there are jobs available, there will be tremendous incentive for illegal immigration. H.R. 3810 phases in a graduated penalty structure for individuals who employ, recruit, or refer undocumented aliens. The first offense would result in a citation explaining the prohibitions on employing undocumented workers. Future offenses would carry increasing civil fines. And individuals who engage in a pattern or practice of hiring illegal aliens would be subject to criminal fines and imprisonment.

Also included in H.R. 3810 are provisions to prevent discrimination in employment caused by employer sanctions. Employers, faced with the possibility of civil and criminal penalties for hiring illegal aliens could be reluctant to hire minority workers. Every effort must be made to prevent any act of discrimination. H.R. 3810 provides for the appointment of a special counsel within the Justice Department to enforce the antidiscrimination measures in this bill. The special counsel is authorized to initiate investigations of unfair employment practices. Employers who practice discrimination could be fined and required to hire the injured party and provide back pay.

H.R. 3810 provides a comprehensive package of immigration reforms. This legislation alone will not resolve all the issues involved in illegal immigration. But it does take an important first step in redirecting our immigration policy.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, no bill has undergone more intense debate, amendment, controversy, reversals and miraculous recoveries than this bill on the floor today. It still, in my view, has some serious problems because I do not think that employer sanctions can help but result in some discrimination. I do not know how to weigh this probability against the merely probable contribution this bill would make to genuine immigration reform.

There may be no satisfactory solution to these problems. We will have to watch the performance of this balance of mechanisms in the years ahead, and when we next have the fortitude to tackle this issue, make the corrections dictated by experience.

Several things are clear now, however, for anyone familiar with agriculture. The bill must deal with its unique requirements for workers, especially for perishable commodities. The recompromised Schumer-Berman-Panetta provision is as good an attempt to structure the complex equities in this situation as I can conceive of. I congratulate the principal authors of that amendment, and I congratulate the farm groups whose persistence, flexibility, imagination, and good faith were essential to the success of the compromise.

It is also clear now that we need to support the amendment to be offered this afternoon by our colleague, KIKA DE LA GARZA, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, which would require search warrants for INS agents to enter fields in their attempts to apprehend illegal aliens.

This amendment reflects legislation first introduced at the beginning of the immigration debate 4 years ago by myself, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. LUNGREN, and Mr. DANNEMEYER. Though the Supreme Court has found there is a technical difference between a field and an enclosed room in the application of search and seizure protections, there is no real reason why the same requirements for a search warrant should not be in effect in both places.

My colleagues should be aware of the disruption and damages caused innocent people by the current INS practice of outdoor sweeps through entire sections of acreage. In a number of cases panicked workers have been driven to their deaths out of fear that they would be caught and deported whether or not they were in the country legally.

In some cases, the situation faced by farmworkers in this country has been reminiscent of the 19th century labor history. This has not always been the situation, but too often it has been. Both the protections for farm workers in the Schumer-Berman-Panetta compromise and the search warrant requirements should go a long way toward mitigating these problems.

Congratulations to the sponsors of these provisions and to the authors of this massive bill who have persevered through extraordinary complexities and setbacks.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 8 of title II is amended by inserting after section 274 (8 U.S.C. 1324) the following new section:

"UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS

"SEC. 274A. (a) MAKING EMPLOYMENT OF UNAUTHORIZED ALIENS UNLAWFUL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—It is unlawful for a person or other entity after the date of the enactment of this section to hire, or to recruit or refer for a fee, for employment in the United States—

"(A) an alien knowing the alien is an unauthorized alien (as defined in subsection (g)) with respect to such employment, or

"(B) an individual without complying with the requirements of subsection (b).

"(2) CONTINUING EMPLOYMENT.—It is unlawful for a person or other entity, after hiring an alien for employment subsequent to the date of the enactment of this section and in accordance with paragraph (1), to continue to employ the alien in the United States knowing the alien is (or has become) an unauthorized alien with respect to such employment.

"(3) DEFENSE.—A person or entity that establishes that it has complied in good faith with the requirements of subsection (b) with respect to the hiring, recruiting, or referral for employment of an alien in the United States has established an affirmative defense that the person or entity has not violated paragraph (1)(A) with respect to such hiring, recruiting, or referral.

"(4) USE OF LABOR THROUGH CONTRACT.—For purposes of this section, a person or other entity who uses a contract, subcontract, or exchange, entered into, renegotiated, or extended after the date of the enactment of this section, to obtain the labor of an alien in the United States knowing that the alien is an unauthorized alien (as defined in subsection (g)) with respect to performing such labor, shall be considered to have hired the alien for employment in the United States in violation of paragraph (1)(A).

"(5) USE OF STATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCY DOCUMENTATION.—For purposes of paragraphs (1)(B) and (3), a person or entity shall be deemed to have complied with the requirements of subsection (b) with respect to the hiring of an individual who was referred for such employment by a State employment agency (as defined by the Attorney General), if the person or entity has and retains (for the period and in the manner described in subsection (b)(3)) appropriate documentation of such referral by that agency, which documentation certifies that the agency has complied with the procedures specified in subsection (b) with respect to the individual's referral.

"(b) EMPLOYMENT VERIFICATION SYSTEM.—The requirements referred to in paragraphs (1)(B) and (3) of subsection (a) are, in the case of a person or other entity hiring, recruiting, or referring an individual for employment in the United States, the requirements specified in the following three paragraphs:

"(1) ATTESTATION AFTER EXAMINATION OF DOCUMENTATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The person or entity must attest, under penalty of perjury and on a form established or designated by the Attorney General by regulation, that he has verified that the individual is eligible to be employed (or recruited or referred for employment) in the United States by examining—

"(i) the individual's United States passport, or the individual's unexpired foreign passport if the foreign passport has an appropriate, unexpired endorsement of the Attorney General authorizing the individual's employment in the United States, or

"(ii) a document described in subparagraph (B) and a document described in subparagraph (C).

A person or entity has complied with the requirement of the preceding sentence with respect to examination of a document if the document reasonably appears on its face to be genuine. If an individual provides a document or combination of documents that reasonably appears on its face to be genuine and that is sufficient to meet the requirements of such sentence, nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as requiring the person or entity to solicit the production of any other document or as requiring the individual to produce such a document.

"(B) DOCUMENTS EVIDENCING EMPLOYMENT AUTHORIZATION.—A document described in this subparagraph is the individual's—

"(i) social security account number card issued by the Social Security Administration,

"(ii) certificate of birth in the United States or United States consular report of birth, or

"(iii) in the case of an individual without a social security card or a certificate of birth in the United States or a United States consular report of birth, any other identification acceptable to the Attorney General.

"(C) DOCUMENTS ESTABLISHING IDENTITY OF INDIVIDUAL.—A document described in this subparagraph is the individual's—

"(i) alien documentation, identification, and telecommunication card, or similar fraud-resistant card issued by the Attorney General to aliens, or other identification issued by the Attorney General to aliens who establish eligibility for employment,

"(ii) driver's license or similar document issued for the purpose of identification by a State, if it contains a photograph of the individual or such other personal identifying information relating to the individual as the Attorney General finds, by regulation, sufficient for purposes of this section, or

"(iii) in the case of individuals under 16 years of age or in a State which does not provide for issuance of an identification document (other than a driver's license) referred to in clause (ii), documentation of personal identity of such other type as the Attorney General finds, by regulation, provides a reliable means of identification.

"(2) INDIVIDUAL ATTESTATION OF EMPLOYMENT AUTHORIZATION.—The individual must attest, under penalty of perjury and on the form designated or established by the Attorney General for purposes of paragraph (1), that the individual is a citizen or national of the United States, an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, or an alien who is authorized under this Act or by the Attorney General to be hired, recruited, or referred for such employment.

"(3) RETENTION OF VERIFICATION FORM.—After completion of such form in accordance with paragraphs (1) and (2), the person or entity must retain the form and make it available for inspection by officers of the Service or of the Department of Labor during such period as the Attorney General shall specify in regulations.

"(4) COPYING OF DOCUMENTATION PERMITTED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the person or entity may copy a document presented by an individual pursuant to this subsection and may retain the copy, but only (except as otherwise permitted under law) for the purpose of complying with the requirements of this subsection.

"(5) TIME FOR COMPLIANCE.—A person or entity has complied with the requirements of this subsection, with respect to the hiring of an individual, if the requirements of this subsection are first met not later than noon of the day following the day on which the individual is first employed by that person or entity.

"(6) LIMITATION ON USE OF ATTESTATION FORM.—A form designated or established by the Attorney General under this subsection and any information contained in or appended to such form, may not be used for purposes other than for enforcement of this section or section 1546 of title 18, United States Code.

"(c) NO AUTHORIZATION OF NATIONAL IDENTIFICATION CARDS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize, directly or indirectly, the issuance or use of national identification cards or the establishment of a national identification card.

"(d) PENALTIES.—

"(1) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY FOR UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT, RECRUITING, OR REFERRAL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a person or entity which is determined (after notice and opportunity for an administrative hearing under paragraph (4)(A)) to have violated paragraph (1)(A) or (2) of subsection (a) and which—

"(i) has not previously been determined (after opportunity for a hearing under paragraph (4)(A)) to have violated either such paragraph, the person or entity shall be subject to a civil penalty of not less than $1,000, and not more than $2,000, for each unauthorized alien with respect to whom the violation occurred, or

"(ii) has previously been determined (after opportunity for a hearing under paragraph (4)(A)) to have violated either such paragraph, the person or entity shall be subject to a civil penalty of not less than $2,000, and not more than $5,000, for each unauthorized alien with respect to whom the violation occurred.

In determining the level of civil penalty that is applicable under this subparagraph for violations of paragraph (1)(A) or (2) of subsection (a), determinations of more than one violation in the course of a single proceeding or adjudication shall be counted as a single determination.

"(B) CRIMINAL PENALTY FOR PATTERN OR PRACTICE VIOLATIONS.—In the case of a person or entity which has engaged in a pattern or practice of employment, recruitment, or referral in violation of paragraph (1)(A) or (2) of subsection (a), the person or entity shall be fined not more than $1,000, imprisoned not more than six months, or both, for each violation.

"(2) ENJOINING OF PATTERN OR PRACTICE VIOLATIONS.—Whenever the Attorney General has reasonable cause to believe that a person or entity is engaged in a pattern or practice of employment, recruitment, or referral in violation of paragraph (1)(A) or (2) of subsection (a), the Attorney General may bring a civil action in the appropriate district court of the United States requesting such relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order against the person or entity, as the Attorney General deems necessary.

"(3) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY FOR PAPERWORK VIOLATIONS.—A person or entity which is determined (after notice and opportunity for an administrative hearing under paragraph (4)(A)) to have violated subsection (a)(1)(B) shall be subject to a civil penalty of not less than $250 and not more than $1,000 for each individual with respect to whom such violation occurred. In determining the amount of the penalty, due consideration shall be given to the size of the business of the employer being charged, the good faith of the employer, the seriousness of the violation, and the history of previous violations.

"(4) ADMINISTRATIVE PROCESS.—

"(A) HEARING.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Before assessing a civil penalty against a person or entity under this subsection for a violation of subsection (a), the Attorney General shall provide the person or entity with notice and, upon request made within a reasonable time (of not less than 30 days, as established by the Attorney General) of the date of the notice, a hearing respecting the violation.

"(ii) CONDUCT OF HEARING.—Any hearing so requested shall be conducted before an administrative law judge. The hearing shall be conducted in accordance with the requirements of section 554 of title 5, United States Code. The hearing shall be held at the nearest practicable place to the place where the person or entity resides or of the place where the alleged violation occurred. If no hearing is so requested, the assessment shall constitute a final and unappealable order.

"(iii) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—A person or entity (including the Attorney General) adversely affected by a final order respecting an assessment may, within 60 days after the date the final order is issued, file a petition in the Court of Appeals for the appropriate circuit for review of the order.

"(B) COLLECTION OF CIVIL PENALTIES.—If the person or entity against whom a civil penalty is assessed fails to pay the penalty within the time prescribed in such order, the Attorney General shall file a suit to collect the amount in the appropriate district court of the United States.

"(5) TREATMENT OF DISTINCT ENTITIES.—In applying this subsection in the case of a person or entity composed of distinct, physically separate subdivisions each of which provides separately for the hiring, recruiting, or referral for employment, without reference to the practices of, and not under the control of or common control with, another subdivision, each such subdivision shall be considered a separate person or entity.

"(e) PROHIBITION OF INDEMNITY BONDS.—

"(1) PROHIBITION.—It is unlawful for a person or other entity, in the hiring, recruiting, or referring for employment of any individual, to require the individual to post a bond or security, to pay or agree to pay an amount, or otherwise to provide a financial guarantee or indemnity, against any potential liability arising under this section relating to such hiring, recruiting, or referring of the individual.

"(2) CIVIL PENALTY.—Any person or entity which is determined, after notice and opportunity for an administrative hearing, to have violated paragraph (1) shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000 for each violation and to an administrative order requiring the return of any amounts received in violation of such paragraph to the employee or, if the employee cannot be located, to the general fund of the Treasury.

"(f) MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.—

"(1) DOCUMENTATION.—In providing documentation or endorsement of authorization of aliens (other than aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence) authorized to be employed in the United States, the Attorney General shall provide that any limitations with respect to the period or type of employment or employer shall be conspicuously stated on the documentation or endorsement.

"(2) PREEMPTION.—The provisions of this section preempt any State or local law imposing civil or criminal sanctions (other than through licensing and similar laws) upon those who employ, or recruit or refer for a fee for employment, unauthorized aliens.

"(g) DEFINITION OF UNAUTHORIZED ALIEN.—As used in this section, the term 'unauthorized alien' means, with respect to the employment of an alien at a particular time, that the alien is not at that time either (1) an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, or (2) authorized to be so employed by this Act or by the Attorney General.".

(2) Except as provided in paragraphs (3), (4), and (5), the amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, but shall not apply to the hiring, recruiting, or referring of individuals occurring after the end of the 6-year period beginning on the first day of the seventh month that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) During the six-month period beginning on the first day of the first month after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(A) the Attorney General, in cooperation with the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, Health and Human Services, Labor, and the Treasury and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, shall disseminate forms and information to employers, employment agencies, and organizations representing employees and provide for public education respecting the requirements of section 274A of the Immigration and Nationality Act, and

(B) the Attorney General shall not conduct any proceeding, nor impose any penalty, under such section on the basis of any violation alleged to have occurred during the period.

(4) In the case of a person or entity, in the first instance in which the Attorney General has reason to believe that the person or entity may have violated subsection (a) of section 274A of the Immigration and Nationality Act during the subsequent 12-month period, the Attorney General shall provide a citation to the person or entity indicating that such a violation or violations may have occurred and shall not conduct any proceeding, nor impose any penalty, under such section on the basis of such alleged violation or violations.

(5)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), before the end of the application period (as defined in subparagraph (C)(i)), the Attorney General shall not conduct any proceeding, nor impose any penalty, under section 274A of the Immigration and Nationality Act on the basis of any violation alleged to have occurred with respect to employment of an individual in seasonal agricultural services.

(B)(i) During the application period, it is unlawful for a person or entity (including a farm labor contractor) or an agent of such a person or entity, to recruit an unauthorized alien (other than an alien described in clause (ii)) who is outside the United States to enter the United States to perform seasonal agricultural services.

(ii) Clause (i) shall not apply to an alien who the person or entity reasonably believes meets the requirements of section 210(a)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (relating to performance of seasonal agricultural services).

(iii) A person, entity, or agent that violates clause (i) shall be deemed to be subject to a penalty under section 274A(d) of the Immigration and Nationality Act in the same manner as if it had violated section 274A(a)(1)(A) of such Act, without regard to paragraph (4) of this subsection.

(C) In this paragraph:

(i) The term "application period" means the period described in section 210(a)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (as added by section 302(a) of this Act).

(ii) The term "seasonal agricultural services" has the meaning given such term in section 210(g) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (as added by section 302(a) of this Act).

(iii) The term "unauthorized alien" has the meaning given such term in section 274A(g) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(6) The Attorney General shall, not later than the first day of the seventh month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act, first issue, on an interim or other basis, such regulations as may be necessary in order to implement section 274A of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(b) UNFAIR IMMIGRATION-RELATED EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES.—(1) Chapter 8 of title II is further amended by inserting after section 274A, as inserted by subsection (a)(1), the following new section:

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to—

"(A) a person or other entity that employs three or fewer employees,

"(b) CHARGES OF VIOLATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), any person alleging that the person is adversely affected directly by an unfair immigration-related employment practice (or a person on that person's behalf) or an officer of the Service alleging that an unfair immigration-related employment practice has occurred or is occurring may file a charge respecting such practice or violation with the Special Counsel (appointed under subsection (c)). Charges shall be in writing under oath or affirmation and shall contain such information as the Attorney General requires. No charge respecting an employment practice may be filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission under such title if a charge with respect to such practice based on the same set of facts has been filed under this subsection, unless the charge is dismissed under this section as being outside the scope of this section.

"(c) SPECIAL COUNSEL.—

"(1) APPOINTMENT.—The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Special Counsel for Immigration-Related Unfair Employment Practices (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Special Counsel') within the Department of Justice to serve for a term of four years. In the case of a vacancy in the office of the Special Counsel the President may designate the officer or employee who shall act as Special Counsel during such vacancy.

"(2) DUTIES.—The Special Counsel shall be responsible for investigation of charges and issuance of complaints under this section and in respect of the prosecution of all such complaints before administrative law judges and the exercise of certain functions under subsection (i)(1).

"(3) COMPENSATION.—The Special Counsel is entitled to receive compensation at a rate not to exceed the rate now or hereafter provided for grade GS-17 of the General Schedule, under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(4) REGIONAL OFFICES.—The Special Counsel, in accordance with regulations of the Attorney General, shall establish such regional offices as may be necessary to carry out his duties.

"(d) INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES.—

"(1) BY SPECIAL COUNSEL.—The Special Counsel shall investigate each charge received and, within 120 days of the date of the receipt of the charge, determine whether or not there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true and whether or not to bring a complaint with respect to the charge before an administrative law judge. The Special Counsel may, on his own initiative, conduct investigations respecting unfair immigration-related employment practices and, based on such an investigation and subject to paragraph (3), file a complaint before such a judge.

"(2) PRIVATE ACTIONS.—If the Special Counsel, after receiving such a charge respecting an unfair immigration-related employment practice which alleges knowing and intentional discriminatory activity or a pattern or practice of discriminatory activity, has not filed a complaint before an administrative law judge with respect to such charge within such 120-day period, the person making the charge may (subject to paragraph (3)) file a complaint directly before such a judge.

"(3) TIME LIMITATIONS ON COMPLAINTS.—No complaint may be filed respecting any unfair immigration-related employment practice occurring more than 180 days prior to the date of the filing of the charge with the Special Counsel. This subparagraph shall not prevent the subsequent amending of a charge or complaint under subsection (e)(1).

"(e) HEARINGS.—

"(1) NOTICE.—Whenever a complaint is made that a person or entity has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair immigration-related employment practice, an administrative law judge shall have power to issue and cause to be served upon such person or entity a copy of the complaint and a notice of hearing before the judge at a place therein fixed, not less than five days after the serving of the complaint. Any such complaint may be amended by the judge conducting the hearing, upon the motion of the party filing the complaint, in the judge's discretion at any time prior to the issuance of an order based thereon. The person or entity so complained of shall have the right to file an answer to the original or amended complaint and to appear in person or otherwise and give testimony at the place and time fixed in the complaint.

"(2) JUDGES HEARING CASES.—Hearings on complaints under this subsection shall be considered before administrative law judges who are specially designated by the Attorney General as having special training respecting employment discrimination and, to the extent practicable, before such judges who only consider cases under this section.

"(3) COMPLAINANT AS PARTY.—Any person filing a charge with the Special Counsel respecting an unfair immigration-related employment practice shall be considered a party to any complaint before an administrative law judge respecting such practice and any subsequent appeal respecting that complaint. In the discretion of the judge conducting the hearing, any other person may be allowed to intervene in the said proceeding and to present testimony.

"(f) TESTIMONY AND AUTHORITY OF HEARING OFFICERS.—

"(1) TESTIMONY.—The testimony taken by the administrative law judge shall be reduced to writing. Thereafter, the judge, in his discretion, upon notice may provide for the taking of further testimony or hear argument.

"(2) AUTHORITY OF ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES.—In conducting investigations and hearings under this subsection and in accordance with regulations of the Attorney General, the Special Counsel and administrative law judges shall have reasonable access to examine evidence of any person or entity being investigated. The administrative law judges by subpoena may compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence at any designated place or hearing. In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena lawfully issued under this paragraph and upon application of the administrative law judge, an appropriate district court of the United States may issue an order requiring compliance with such subpoena and any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(g) DETERMINATIONS.—

"(1) ORDER.—The administrative law judge shall issue and cause to be served on the parties to the proceeding an order, which shall be final unless appealed as provided under subsection (i).

"(2) ORDERS FINDING VIOLATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If, upon the preponderance of the evidence, an administrative law judge determines that any person or entity named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair immigration-related employment practice, then the judge shall state his findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such person or entity an order which requires such person or entity to cease and desist from such unfair immigration-related employment practice.

"(B) CONTENTS OF ORDER.—Such an order also may require the person or entity—

"(i) to comply with the requirements of section 274A(b) with respect to individuals hired (or recruited or referred for employment for a fee) during a period of up to three years;

"(ii) to retain for the period referred to in clause (i) and only for purposes consistent with section 274A(b)(6), the name and address of each individual who applies, in person or in writing, for hiring for an existing position, or for recruiting or referring for a fee, for employment in the United States;

"(iii) to hire individuals directly and adversely affected, with or without back pay; and

"(iv)(I) except as provided in subclause (II), to pay a civil penalty of not more than $1,000 for each individual discriminated against, and

"(II) in the case of a person or entity previously subject to such an order, to pay a civil penalty of not more than $2,000 for each individual discriminated against.

"(C) LIMITATION ON BACK PAY REMEDY.—In providing a remedy under subparagraph (B)(iii), back pay liability shall not accrue from a date more than two years prior to the date of the filing of a charge with an administrative law judge. Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the individual or individuals discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable under such paragraph. No order shall require the hiring of an individual as an employee or the payment to an individual of any back pay, if the individual was refused employment for any reason other than discrimination on account of national origin or citizenship status.

"(D) TREATMENT OF DISTINCT ENTITIES.—In applying this subsection in the case of a person or entity composed of distinct, physically separate subdivisions each of which provides separately for the hiring, recruiting, or referring for employment, without reference to the practices of, and not under the control of or common control with, another subdivision, each such subdivision shall be considered a separate person or entity.

"(3) ORDERS NOT FINDING VIOLATIONS.—If upon the preponderance of the evidence an administrative law judge determines that the person or entity named in the complaint has not engaged or is not engaging in any such unfair immigration-related employment practice, then the judge shall state his findings of fact and shall issue an order dismissing the complaint.

"(h) AWARDING OF ATTORNEYS' FEES.—In any complaint respecting an unfair immigration-related employment practice, an administrative law judge, in the judge's discretion, may allow a prevailing party, other than the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee.

"(i) REVIEW OF FINAL ORDERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after the entry of such final order, any person aggrieved by such final order may seek a review of such order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the violation is alleged to have occurred or in which the employer resides or transacts business.

"(2) FURTHER REVIEW.—Upon the filing of the record with the court, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(j) COURT ENFORCEMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE ORDERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If an order of the agency is not appealed under subsection (i)(1), the Special Counsel (or, if the Special Counsel fails to act, the person filing the charge) may petition the United States district court for the district in which a violation of the order is alleged to have occurred, or in which the respondent resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of the order of the administrative law judge, by filing in such court a written petition praying that such order be enforced.

"(2) COURT ENFORCEMENT ORDER.—Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction to make and enter a decree enforcing the order of the administrative law judge. In such a proceeding, the order of the administrative law judge shall not be subject to review.

"(3) ENFORCEMENT DECREE IN ORIGINAL REVIEW.—If, upon appeal of an order under subsection (i)(1), the United States court of appeals does not reverse such order, such court shall have the jurisdiction to make and enter a decree enforcing the order of the administrative law judge.

"(4) AWARDING OF ATTORNEY'S FEES.—In any judicial proceeding under subsection (i) or this subsection, the court, in its discretion, may allow a prevailing party, other than the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee as part of costs.".

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall not apply to discrimination in hiring, recruiting, or referring of individuals occurring after the end of the 6-year period beginning on the first day of the seventh month that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO MIGRANT AND SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL WORKER PROTECTION ACT.—(1) The Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act (Public Law 97-470) is amended—

(A) by striking out "101(a)(15)(H)(ii)" in paragraphs (8)(B) and (10)(B) of section 3

(29 U.S.C. 1802) and inserting in lieu thereof "101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a)";

(B) in section 103(a) (29 U.S.C. 1813(a))—

(1) IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE ESTABLISHING VERIFICATION SYSTEM BY OCTOBER 1, 1987.—The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization shall implement a system for the verification of immigration status under paragraphs (3) and (4)(B)(i) of section 1137(d) of the Social Security Act (as amended by this section) so that the system is available to all the States by not later than October 1, 1987. Such system shall not be used by the Immigration and Naturalization Service for administrative (non-criminal) immigration enforcement purposes and shall be implemented in a manner that provides for verification of immigration status without regard to the sex, color, race, religion, or nationality of the individual involved.

(2) HIGHER MATCHING EFFECTIVE IN FISCAL YEAR 1988.—The amendments made by subsection (b) take effect on October 1, 1987.

(3) USE OF VERIFICATION SYSTEM REQUIRED IN FISCAL YEAR 1989.—Except as provided in paragraph (4), the amendments made by subsection (a) take effect on October 1, 1988. States have until that date to begin

(B) WAIVER IN CERTAIN CASES.—If, with respect to a covered program, the appropriate Secretary determines, on the Secretary's own initiative or upon an application by an administering entity and based on such information as the Secretary deems persuasive (which may include the results of the report required under subsection (d)(1) and information contained in such an application), that—

(I) is as effective and timely as the system otherwise required under the amendments made by subsection (a) with respect to the program, and

(II) provides for at least the hearing and appeals rights for beneficiaries that would be provided under the amendments made by subsection (a), or

(ii) the costs of administration of the system otherwise required under such amendments exceed the estimated savings, such Secretary may waive the application of such amendments to the covered program to the extent (by State or other geographic area or otherwise) that such determinations apply.

(C) BASIS FOR DETERMINATION.—A determination under subparagraph (B)(ii) shall be based upon the appropriate Secretary's estimate of—

(i) the number of aliens claiming benefits under the covered program in relation to the total number of claimants seeking benefits under the program,

(ii) any savings in benefit expenditures reasonably expected to result from implementation of the verification program, and

(iii) the labor and nonlabor costs of administration of the verification system,

(2) Amounts appropriated under this subsection for a fiscal year which are not obligated by the end of such year shall remain available for obligation during the next fiscal year.

(3) If the amounts appropriated under this subsection for a fiscal year are insufficient to provide fully for reimbursement and payments under subsections (b) and (c) for the fiscal year—

(A) amounts shall first be obligated for purposes of making payments to States and State educational agencies under such subsections, and

(B) in obligating such amounts, amounts shall be allocated among the States and State educational agencies on an equal pro rata basis based on their costs under such subsections in providing public assistance and educational services, except as provided in paragraph (4).

(4)(A) If the amounts appropriated under this subsection for a fiscal year exceed 40 percent, but are less than 100 percent, of the amounts necessary to provide fully for reimbursement and payments under subsections (b) and (c) for the fiscal year, the subsection (b) percentage (as defined in subparagraph (B)) may exceed the subsection (c) percentage, so long as the subsection (c) percentage is not less than 40 percent.

No such reimbursement shall be available to any such program of public health assistance to the extent that the costs of services provided to such eligible legalized aliens have been financed through Federal funds.

(2) For purposes of this subsection:

(A) The term "State" has the meaning given such term in section 101(a)(36) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(36)).

(2) The definitions and provisions of the Emergency Immigrant Education Act of 1984 (title VI of Public Law 98-511; 20 U.S.C. 4101 et seq.) shall apply to payments under this subsection in the same manner as they apply to payments under that Act, except that, in applying this paragraph—

(A) any reference in such Act to "immigrant children" shall be deemed to be a reference to "eligible legalized aliens" (including such aliens who are over 16 years of age) during the 60-month period beginning with the first month in which such an alien is granted temporary lawful residence under section 245A(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act;

(B) in determining the amount of payment with respect to eligible legalized aliens who are over 16 years of age, the phrase "described under paragraph (2)" shall be deemed to be stricken from section 606(b)(1)(A) of such Act (20 U.S.C. 4105(b)(1)(A));

(C) the State educational agency may provide such educational services to adult eligible legalized aliens through local educational agencies and other public and private nonprofit organizations, including community-based organizations of demonstrated effectiveness; and

TITLE III—REFORM OF LEGAL IMMIGRATION

PART A—TEMPORARY AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

SEC. 301. H-2A AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.

(a) PROVIDING NEW "H-2A" NONIMMIGRANT CLASSIFICATION FOR TEMPORARY AGRICULTURAL LABOR.—Paragraph (15)(H) of section 101(a) (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)) is amended by striking out "to perform temporary services or labor," in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) to perform agricultural labor or services, as defined by the Secretary of Labor in regulations and including agricultural labor defined in section 3121(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and agriculture as defined in section 3(f) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(f)), of a temporary or seasonal nature, or (b) to perform other temporary service or labor".

(b) INVOLVEMENT OF DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR AND AGRICULTURE IN H-2A PROGRAM.—Section 214(c) (8 U.S.C. 1184(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "For purposes of this subsection with respect to nonimmigrants described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a), the term 'appropriate agencies of Government' means the Department of Labor and includes the Department of Agriculture. The provisions of section 216 shall apply to the question of importing any alien as a nonimmigrant under section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a).".

(c) ADMISSION OF H-2A WORKERS.—(1) Chapter 2 of title II is amended by adding after section 215 the following new section:

"ADMISSION OF TEMPORARY H-2A WORKERS

"SEC. 216. (a) CONDITIONS FOR APPROVAL OF H-2A PETITIONS.—(1) A petition to import an alien as an H-2A worker (as defined in subsection (i)(2)) may not be approved by the Attorney General unless the petitioner has applied to the Secretary of Labor for a certification that—

"(A) there are not sufficient workers who are able, willing, and qualified, and who will be available at the time and place needed, to perform the labor or services involved in the petition, and

"(B) the employment of the alien in such labor or services will not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of workers in the United States similarly employed.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor may require by regulation, as a condition of issuing the certification, the payment of a fee to recover the reasonable costs of processing applications for certification.

"(b) CONDITIONS FOR DENIAL OF LABOR CERTIFICATION.—The Secretary of Labor may not issue a certification under subsection (a) with respect to an employer if the conditions described in that subsection are not met or if any of the following conditions are met:

"(1) There is a strike or lockout in the course of a labor dispute which, under the regulations, precludes such certification.

"(2)(A) The employer during the previous two-year period employed H-2A workers and the Secretary of Labor has determined, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, that the employer at any time during that period substantially violated a material term or condition of the labor certification with respect to the employment of domestic or nonimmigrant workers.

"(B) No employer may be denied certification under subparagraph (A) for more than three years for any violation described in such subparagraph.

"(3) The employer has not provided the Secretary with satisfactory assurances that if the employment for which the certification is sought is not covered by State workers' compensation law, the employer will provide, at no cost to the worker, insurance covering injury and disease arising out of and in the course of the worker's employment which will provide benefits at least equal to those provided under the State workers' compensation law for comparable employment.

"(4) The Secretary determines that the employer has not made positive recruitment efforts within a multi-state region of traditional or expected labor supply where the Secretary finds that there are a significant number of qualified United States workers who, if recruited, would be willing to make themselves available for work at the time and place needed. Positive recruitment under this paragraph is in addition to, and shall be conducted within the same time period as, the circulation through the interstate employment service system of the employer's job offer. The obligation to engage in positive recruitment under this paragraph shall terminate on the date the H-2A workers depart for the employer's place of employment.

"(c) SPECIAL RULES FOR CONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS.—The following rules shall apply in the case of the filing and consideration of an application for a labor certification under this section:

"(1) DEADLINE FOR FILING APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary of Labor may not require that the application be filed more than 60 days before the first date the employer requires the labor or services of the H-2A worker.

"(2) NOTICE WITHIN SEVEN DAYS OF DEFICIENCIES.—(A) The employer shall be notified in writing within seven days of the date of filing if the application does not meet the standards (other than that described in subsection (a)(1)(A)) for approval.

"(B) If the application does not meet such standards, the notice shall include the reasons therefor and the Secretary shall provide an opportunity for the prompt resubmission of a modified application.

"(3) ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATION.—(A) The Secretary of Labor shall make, not later than 20 days before the date such labor or services are first required to be performed, the certification described in subsection (a)(1) if—

"(i) the employer has complied with the criteria for certification (including criteria for the recruitment of eligible individuals as prescribed by the Secretary), and

"(ii) the employer does not actually have, or has not been provided with referrals of, qualified eligible individuals who have indicated their availability to perform such labor or services on the terms and conditions of a job offer which meets the requirements of the Secretary.

In considering the question of whether a specific qualification is appropriate in a job offer, the Secretary shall apply the normal and accepted qualifications required by non-H-2A-employers in the same or comparable occupations and crops.

"(B)(i) For a period of 3 years subsequent to the effective date of this section, labor certifications shall remain effective only if, from the time the foreign worker departs for the employer's place of employment, the employer will provide employment to any qualified United States worker who applies to the employer until 50 percent of the period of the work contract, under which the foreign worker who is in the job was hired, has elapsed. In addition, the employer will offer to provide benefits, wages and working conditions required pursuant to this section and regulations.

"(ii) The requirement of clause (i) shall not apply to any employer who—

"(I) did not, during any calendar quarter during the preceding calendar year, use more than 500 man-days of agricultural labor, as defined in section 3(u) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(u)),

"(II) is not a member of an association which has petitioned for certification under this section for its members, and

"(III) has not otherwise associated with other employers who are petitioning for temporary foreign workers under this section.

"(iii) Six months before the end of the 3-year period described in clause (i), the Secretary of Labor shall consider the findings of the report mandated by section 403(a)(4)(D) of the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1986 as well as other relevant materials, including evidence of benefits to United States workers and costs to employers, addressing the advisability of continuing a policy which requires an employer, as a condition for certification under this section, to continue to accept qualified, eligible United States workers for employment after the date the H-2A workers depart for work with the employer. The Secretary's review of such findings and materials shall lead to the issuance of findings in furtherance of the Congressional policy that aliens not be admitted under this section unless there are not sufficient workers in the United States who are able, willing, and qualified to perform the labor or service needed and that the employment of the aliens in such labor or services will not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of workers in the United States similarly employed. In the absence of the enactment of Federal legislation prior to three months before the end of the 3-year period described in clause (i) which addresses the subject matter of this subparagraph, the Secretary shall immediately publish the findings required by this clause, and shall promulgate, on an interim or final basis, regulations based on his findings which shall be effective no later than three years from the effective date of this section.

"(iv) In complying with clause (i) of this subparagraph, an association shall be allowed to refer or transfer workers among its members: Provided, That for purposes of this section an association acting as an agent for its members shall not be considered a joint employer merely because of such referral or transfer.

"(v) United States workers referred or transferred pursuant to clause (iv) of this subparagraph shall not be treated disparately.

"(vi) An employer shall not be liable for payments under section 655.202(b)(6) of title 20, Code of Federal Regulations (or any successor regulation) with respect to an H-2A worker who is displaced due to compliance with the requirement of this subparagraph, if the Secretary of Labor certifies that the H-2A worker was displaced because of the employer's compliance with clause (i) of this subparagraph.

"(vii)(I) No person or entity shall willfully and knowingly withhold domestic workers prior to the arrival of H-2A workers in order to force the hiring of domestic workers under clause (i).

"(II) Upon the receipt of a complaint by an employer that a violation of subclause (I) has occurred the Secretary shall immediately investigate. He shall within 36 hours of the receipt of the complaint issue findings concerning the alleged violation. Where the Secretary finds that a violation has occurred, he shall immediately suspend the application of clause (i) of this subparagraph with respect to that certification for that date of need.

"(4) HOUSING.—Employers shall furnish housing in accordance with regulations. The employer shall be permitted at the employer's option to provide housing meeting applicable Federal standards for temporary labor camps or to secure housing which meets the local standards for rental and/or public accommodations or other substantially similar class of habitation: Provided, That in the absence of applicable local standards, State standards for rental and/or public accommodations or other substantially similar class of habitation shall be met: Provided further, That in the absence of applicable local or State standards, Federal temporary labor camp standards shall apply: Provided further, That the Secretary of Labor shall issue regulations which address the specific requirements of housing for employees principally engaged in the range production of livestock: Provided further, That when it is the prevailing practice in the area and occupation of intended employment to provide family housing, family housing shall be provided to workers with families who request it: And provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall require an employer to provide or secure housing for workers who are not entitled to it under the temporary labor certification regulations in effect on June 1, 1986.

"(d) ROLES OF AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(1) PERMITTING FILING BY AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.—A petition to import an alien as a temporary agricultural worker, and an application for a labor certification with respect to such a worker, may be filed by an association of agricultural producers which use agricultural services.

"(2) TREATMENT OF ASSOCIATIONS ACTING AS EMPLOYERS.—If an association is a joint or sole employer of temporary agricultural workers, the certifications granted under this section to the association may be used for the certified job opportunities of any of its producer members and such workers may be transferred among its producer members to perform agricultural services of a temporary or seasonal nature for which the certifications were granted.

"(3) TREATMENT OF VIOLATIONS.—

"(A) MEMBER'S VIOLATION DOES NOT NECESSARILY DISQUALIFY ASSOCIATION OR OTHER MEMBERS.—If an individual producer member of a joint employer association is determined to have committed an act that under subsection (b)(2) results in the denial of certification with respect to the member, the denial shall apply only to that member of the association unless the Secretary determines that the association or other member participated in, had knowledge of, or reason to know of, the violation.

"(B) ASSOCIATION'S VIOLATION DOES NOT NECESSARILY DISQUALIFY MEMBERS.—(i) If an association representing agricultural producers as a joint employer is determined to have committed an act that under subsection (b)(2) results in the denial of certification with respect to the association, the denial shall apply only to the association and does not apply to any individual producer member of the association unless the Secretary determines that the member participated in, had knowledge of, or reason to know of, the violation.

"(ii) If an association of agricultural producers certified as a sole employer is determined to have committed an act that under subsection (b)(2) results in the denial of certification with respect to the association, no individual producer member of such association may be the beneficiary of the services of temporary alien agricultural workers admitted under this section in the commodity and occupation in which such aliens were employed by the association which was denied certification during the period such denial is in force, unless such producer member employs such aliens in the commodity and occupation in question directly or through an association which is a joint employer of such workers with the producer member.

"(e) EXPEDITED ADMINISTRATIVE APPEALS OF CERTAIN DETERMINATIONS.—(1) Regulations shall provide for an expedited procedure for the review of a denial of certification under subsection (a)(1) or a revocation of such a certification or, at the applicant's request, for a de novo administrative hearing respecting the denial or revocation.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor shall expeditiously, but in no case later than 72 hours after the time a new determination is requested, make a new determination on the request for certification in the case of an H-2A worker if able, willing, and qualified eligible individuals are not actually available at the time such labor or services are required and a certification was denied in whole or in part because of the availability of qualified workers. If the employer asserts that any eligible individual who has been referred is not able, willing, or qualified, the burden of proof is on the employer to establish that the individual referred is not able, willing, or qualified because of employment-related reasons.

"(f) VIOLATORS DISQUALIFIED FOR 5 YEARS.—An alien may not be admitted to the United States as a temporary agricultural worker if the alien was admitted to the United States as such a worker within the previous five-year period and the alien during that period violated a term or condition of such previous admission.

"(g) AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1987, $10,000,000 for the purposes—

"(A) of recruiting domestic workers for temporary labor and services which might otherwise be performed by nonimmigrants described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a), and

"(B) of monitoring terms and conditions under which such nonimmigrants (and domestic workers employed by the same employers) are employed in the United States.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor is authorized to take such actions, including imposing appropriate penalties and seeking appropriate injunctive relief and specific performance of contractual obligations, as may be necessary to assure employer compliance with terms and conditions of employment under this section.

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1987, such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of Labor to make determinations and certifications under this section and under section 212(a)(14).

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1987, such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the Secretary's duties and responsibilities under this section.

"(h) MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.—(1) The Attorney General shall provide for such endorsement of entry and exit documents of nonimmigrants described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii) as may be necessary to carry out this section and to provide notice for purposes of section 274A.

"(2) The provisions of subsections (a) and (c) of section 214 and the provisions of this section preempt any State or local law regulating admissibility of nonimmigrant workers.

"(i) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'eligible individual' means, with respect to employment, an individual who is not an unauthorized alien (as defined in section 274A(g)) with respect to that employment.

"(2) The term 'H-2A worker' means a nonimmigrant described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a).".

(2) Section 3306(c)(1)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out "before January 1, 1988," and inserting in lieu thereof "before January 1, 1993,".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section apply to petitions and applications filed under sections 214(c) and 216 of the Immigration and Nationality Act on or after the first day of the seventh month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "effective date").

(e) REGULATIONS.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Agriculture, shall approve all regulations to be issued implementing sections 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a) and 216 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, final regulations to implement such sections shall first be issued, on an interim or other basis, not later than the effective date.

(f) SENSE OF CONGRESS RESPECTING CONSULTATION WITH MEXICO.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should establish an advisory commission which shall consult with the Governments of Mexico and of other appropriate countries and advise the Attorney General regarding the operation of the alien temporary worker program established under section 216 of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(g) CONFORMING AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 215 the following new item:

"Sec. 216. Admission of temporary H-2A workers.".

SEC. 302. LAWFUL RESIDENCE FOR CERTAIN SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 1 of title II is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

"SEC. 210. (a) LAWFUL RESIDENCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General shall adjust the status of an alien to that of an alien lawfully admitted for temporary residence if the Attorney General determines that the alien meets the following requirements:

"(A) APPLICATION PERIOD.—The alien must apply for such adjustment during the 18-month period beginning on the first day of the seventh month that begins after the date of enactment of this section.

"(B) PERFORMANCE OF SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL SERVICES AND RESIDENCE IN THE UNITED STATES.—The alien must establish that he has—

"(i) resided in the United States, and

"(ii) performed seasonal agricultural services in the United States for at least 90 mandays, during the 12-month period ending on May 1, 1986. For purposes of the previous sentence, performance of seasonal agricultural services in the United States for more than one employer on any one day shall be counted as performance of services for only 1 man-day.

"(C) ADMISSIBLE AS IMMIGRANT.—The alien must establish that he is admissible to the United States as an immigrant, except as otherwise provided under subsection (c)(2).

"(2) ADJUSTMENT TO PERMANENT RESIDENCE.—The Attorney General shall adjust the status of any alien provided lawful temporary resident status under paragraph (1) to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence on the following date:

"(A) GROUP 1.—Subject to the numerical limitation established under subparagraph (C), in the case of an alien who has established, at the time of application for temporary residence under paragraph (1), that the alien performed seasonal agricultural services in the United States for at least 90 mandays during each of the 12-months periods ending on May 1, 1984, 1985, and 1986, the adjustment shall occur on the first day after the end of the one-year period that begins on the later of (I) the date the alien was granted such temporary resident status, or (II) the day after the last day of the application period described in paragraph (1)(A).

"(B) GROUP 2.—In the case of aliens to which subparagraph (A) does not apply, the adjustment shall occur on the day after the last day of the two-year period that begins on the later of (I) the date the alien was granted such temporary resident status, or (II) the day after the last day of the application period described in paragraph (1)(A).

"(C) NUMERICAL LIMITATION.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to more than 350,000 aliens. If more than 350,000 aliens meet the requirements of such subparagraph, such subparagraph shall apply to the 350,000 aliens whose applications for adjustment were first filed under paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) shall apply to the remaining aliens.

"(3) TERMINATION OF TEMPORARY RESIDENCE.—During the period of temporary resident status granted an alien under paragraph (1), the Attorney General may terminate such status only upon a determination under this Act that the alien is deportable.

"(4) AUTHORIZED TRAVEL AND EMPLOYMENT DURING TEMPORARY RESIDENCE.—During the period an alien is in lawful temporary resident status granted under this subsection, the alien has the right to travel abroad (including commutation from a residence abroad) and shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and shall be provided an 'employment authorized' endorsement or other appropriate work permit, in the same manner as for aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

"(5) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, an alien who acquires the status of an alien lawfully admitted for temporary residence under paragraph (1), such status not having changed, is considered to be an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence (as described in section 101(a)(20)), other than under any provision of the immigration laws.

"(b) APPLICATIONS FOR ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS.—

"(1) TO WHOM MAY BE MADE.—

"(A) WITHIN THE UNITED STATES.—The Attorney General shall provide that applications for adjustment of status under subsection (a) may be filed—

"(i) with the Attorney General, or

"(ii) with a designated entity (designated under paragraph (2)), but only if the applicant consents to the forwarding of the application to the Attorney General.

"(B) OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES.—The Attorney General, in cooperation with the Secretary of State, shall provide a procedure whereby an alien may apply for adjustment of status under subsection (a)(1) at an appropriate consular office outside the United States. If the alien otherwise qualifies for such adjustment, the Attorney General shall provide such documentation of authorization to enter the United States and to have the alien's status adjusted upon entry as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(2) DESIGNATION OF ENTITIES TO RECEIVE APPLICATIONS.—For purposes of receiving applications under this section, the Attorney General—

"(A) shall designate qualified voluntary organizations and other qualified State, local, community, farm labor organizations, and associations of agricultural employers, and

"(B) may designate such other persons as the Attorney General determines are qualified and have substantial experience, demonstrated competence, and traditional long-term involvement in the preparation and submittal of applications for adjustment of status under section 209 or 245, Public Law 89-732, or Public Law 95-145.

"(3) PROOF OF ELIGIBILITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An alien may establish that he meets the requirement of subsection (a)(1)(B)(ii) through government employment records, records supplied by employers or collective bargaining organizations, and such other reliable documentation as the alien may provide. The Attorney General shall establish special procedures to credit properly work in cases in which an alien was employed under an assumed name.

"(B) DOCUMENTATION OF WORK HISTORY.—(i) An alien applying for adjustment of status under subsection (a)(1) has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the alien has worked the requisite number of man-days (as required under subsection (a)(1)(B)(ii)).

"(ii) If an employer or farm labor contractor employing such an alien has kept proper and adequate records respecting such employment, the alien's burden of proof under clause (i) may be met by securing timely production of those records under regulations to be promulgated by the Attorney General.

"(iii) An alien can meet such burden of proof if the alien establishes that the alien has in fact performed the work described in subsection (a)(1)(B)(ii) by producing sufficient evidence to show the extent of that employment as a matter of just and reasonable inference. In such a case, the burden then shifts to the Attorney General to disprove the alien's evidence with a showing which negates the reasonableness of the inference to be drawn from the evidence.

"(4) TREATMENT OF APPLICATIONS BY DESIGNATED ENTITIES.—Each designated entity must agree to forward to the Attorney General applications filed with it in accordance with paragraph (1)(A)(ii) but not to forward to the Attorney General applications filed with it unless the applicant has consented to such forwarding. No such entity may make a determination required by this section to be made by the Attorney General.

"(5) LIMITATION ON ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—Files and records prepared for purposes of this section by designated entities operating under this section are confidential and the Attorney General and the Service shall not have access to such files or records relating to an alien without the consent of the alien.

"(6) CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.—Neither the Attorney General, nor any other official or employee of the Department of Justice, or bureau or agency thereof, may—

"(A) use the information furnished pursuant to an application filed under this section for any purpose other than to make a determination on the application or for enforcement of paragraph (7),

"(B) make any publication whereby the information furnished by any particular individual can be identified, or

"(C) permit anyone other than the sworn officers and employees of the Department or bureau or agency or, with respect to applications filed with a designated entity, that designated entity, to examine individual applications.

Anyone who uses, publishes, or permits information to be examined in violation of this paragraph shall be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(7) PENALTIES FOR FALSE STATEMENTS IN APPLICATIONS.—

"(A) CRIMINAL PENALTY.—Whoever—

"(i) files an application for adjustment of status under this section and knowingly and willfully falsifies, conceals, or covers up a material fact or makes any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statements or representations, or makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or entry, or

"(ii) creates or supplies a false writing or document for use in making such an application, shall be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(B) EXCLUSION.—An alien who is convicted of a crime under subparagraph (A) shall be considered to be inadmissible to the United States on the ground described in section 212(a)(19).

"(c) WAIVER OF NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS AND CERTAIN GROUNDS FOR EXCLUSION.—

"(1) NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS DO NOT APPLY.—The numerical limitations of sections 201 and 202 shall not apply to the adjustment of aliens to lawful permanent resident status under this section.

"(2) WAIVER OF GROUNDS FOR EXCLUSION.—In the determination of an alien's admissibility under subsection (a)(1)(C)—

"(A) GROUNDS OF EXCLUSION NOT APPLICABLE.—The provisions of paragraphs (14), (20), (21), (25), and (32) of section 212(a) shall not apply.

"(B) WAIVER OF OTHER GROUNDS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the Attorney General may waive any other provision of section 212(a) in the case of individual aliens for humanitarian purposes, to assure family unity, or when it is otherwise in the public interest.

"(ii) GROUNDS THAT MAY NOT BE WAIVED.—The following provisions of section 212(a) may not be waived by the Attorney General under clause (i):

"(I) Paragraph (9) and (10) (relating to criminals).

"(II) Paragraph (15) (relating to aliens likely to become public charges).

"(III) Paragraph (23) (relating to drug offenses), except for so much of such paragraph as relates to a single offense of simple possession of 30 grams or less of marihuana.

"(V) Paragraph (33) (relating to those who assisted in the Nazi persecutions).

"(C) SPECIAL RULE FOR DETERMINATION OF PUBLIC CHARGE.—An alien is not ineligible for adjustment of status under this section due to being inadmissible under section 212(a)(15) if the alien demonstrates a history of employment in the United States evidencing self-support without reliance on public cash assistance.

"(d) TEMPORARY STAY OF EXCLUSION OR DEPORTATION AND WORK AUTHORIZATION FOR CERTAIN APPLICANTS.—

"(1) BEFORE APPLICATION PERIOD.—The Attorney General shall provide that in the case of an alien who is apprehended before the beginning of the application period described in subsection (a)(1) and who can establish a nonfrivolous case of eligibility to have his status adjusted under subsection (a) (but for the fact that he may not apply for such adjustment until the beginning of such period), until the alien has had the opportunity during the first 30 days of the application period to complete the filing of an application for adjustment, the alien—

SEC. 303. DETERMINATIONS OF AGRICULTURAL LABOR SHORTAGES AND ADMISSION OF ADDITIONAL SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 1 of title II is amended by adding after section 210 (added by section 302 of this title) the following new section:

"DETERMINATION OF AGRICULTURAL LABOR SHORTAGES AND ADMISSION OF ADDITIONAL SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

"SEC. 210A. (a) DETERMINATION OF NEED TO ADMIT ADDITIONAL SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Before the beginning of each fiscal year (beginning with fiscal year 1990 and ending with fiscal year 1993), the Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture (in this section referred to as the 'Secretaries') shall jointly determine the number (if any) of additional aliens who should be admitted to the United States or who should otherwise acquire the status of aliens lawfully admitted for temporary residence under this section during the fiscal year to meet a shortage of workers to perform seasonal agricultural services in the United States during the year. Such number is, in this section, referred to as the 'shortage number'.

"(2) OVERALL DETERMINATION.—The shortage number is—

"(A) the anticipated need for special agricultural workers (as determined under paragraph (4)) for the fiscal year, minus

"(B) the supply of such workers (as determined under paragraph (5)) for that year, divided by the factor (determined under paragraph (6)) for man-days per worker.

"(3) NO REPLENISHMENT IF NO SHORTAGE.—In determining the shortage number, the Secretaries may not determine that there is a shortage unless, after considering all of the criteria set forth in paragraphs (4) and (5), the Secretaries determine that there will not be sufficient able, willing, and qualified workers available to perform seasonal agricultural services required in the fiscal year involved.

"(4) DETERMINATION OF NEED.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(A), the anticipated need for special agricultural workers for a fiscal year is determined as follows:

"(A) BASE.—The Secretaries shall jointly estimate, using statistically valid methods, the number of man-days of labor performed in seasonal agricultural services in the United States in the previous fiscal year.

"(B) ADJUSTMENT FOR CROP LOSSES AND CHANGES IN INDUSTRY.—The Secretaries shall jointly—

"(i) increase such number by the number of man-days of labor in seasonal agricultural services in the United States that would have been needed in the previous fiscal year to avoid any crop damage or other loss that resulted from the unavailability of labor, and

"(ii) adjust such number to take into account the projected growth or contraction in the requirements for seasonal agricultural services as a result of—

"(I) growth or contraction in the seasonal agriculture industry, and

"(II) the use of technologies and personnel practices that affect the need for, and retention of, workers to perform such services.

"(5) DETERMINATION OF SUPPLY.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(B), the anticipated supply of special agricultural workers for a fiscal year is determined as follows:

"(A) BASE.—The Secretaries shall use the number estimated under paragraph (4)(A).

"(B) ADJUSTMENT FOR RETIREMENTS AND INCREASED RECRUITMENT.—The Secretaries shall jointly—

"(i) decrease such number by the number of man-days of labor in seasonal agricultural services in the United States that will be lost due to retirement and movement of workers out of performance of seasonal agricultural services, and

"(ii) increase such number by the number of additional man-days of labor in seasonal agricultural services in the United States that can reasonably be expected to result from the availability of able, willing, qualified, and unemployed special agricultural workers, rural low skill, or manual, laborers, and domestic agricultural workers.

"(C) BASES FOR INCREASED NUMBER.—In making the adjustment under subparagraph (B)(ii), the Secretaries shall consider—

"(i) the effect, if any, that improvements in wages and working conditions offered by employers will have on the availability of workers to perform seasonal agricultural services, taking into account the adverse effect, if any, of such improvements in wages and working conditions on the economic competitiveness of the perishable agricultural industry,

"(ii) the effect, if any, of enhanced recruitment efforts by the employers of such workers and government employment services in the traditional and expected areas of supply of such workers, and

"(iii) the number of able, willing and qualified individuals who apply for employment opportunities in seasonal agricultural services listed with offices of government employment services.

"(D) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to require any individual employer to pay any specified level of wages, to provide any specified working conditions, or to provide for any specified recruitment of workers.

"(6) DETERMINATION OF MAN-DAY PER WORKER FACTOR.—

"(A) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—For fiscal year 1990—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), for purposes of paragraph (2) the factor under this paragraph is the average number, as estimated by the Director of the Bureau of the Census under subsection (b)(3)(A)(ii), of man-days of seasonal agricultural services performed in the United States in fiscal year 1989 by special agricultural workers whose status is adjusted under section 210 and who performed seasonal agricultural services in the United States at any time during the fiscal year.

"(ii) LACK OF ADEQUATE INFORMATION.—If the Director determines that—

"(I) the information reported under subsection (b)(2)(A) is not adequate to make a reasonable estimate of the average number described in clause (i), but

"(II) the inadequacy of the information is not due to the refusal or failure of employers to report the information required under subsection (b)(2)(A), the factor under this paragraph is 90.

"(B) FISCAL YEAR 1991.—For purposes of paragraph (2) for fiscal year 1991, the factor under this paragraph is the average number, as estimated by the Director of the Bureau of the Census under subsection (b)(3)(A)(ii), of man-days of seasonal agricultural services performed in the United States in fiscal year 1990 by special agricultural workers who obtained lawful temporary resident status under this section.

"(C) FISCAL YEARS 1992 AND 1993.—For purposes of paragraph (2) for fiscal years 1992 and 1993, the factor under this paragraph is the average number, as estimated by the Director of the Bureau of the Census under subsection (b)(3)(A)(ii), of man-days of seasonal agricultural services performed in the United States in each of the two previous fiscal years by special agricultural workers who obtained lawful temporary resident status under this section during either of such fiscal years.

"(7) EMERGENCY PROCEDURE FOR INCREASE IN SHORTAGE NUMBER.—

"(A) REQUESTS.—After the beginning of a fiscal year, a group or association representing employers (and potential employers) of individuals who perform seasonal agricultural services may request the Secretaries to increase the shortage number for the fiscal year based upon a showing that extraordinary, unusual, and unforeseen circumstances have resulted in a significant increase in the shortage number due to (i) a significant increase in the need for special agricultural workers in the year, (ii) a significant decrease in the availability of able, willing, and qualified workers to perform seasonal agricultural services, or (iii) a significant decrease (below the factor used for purposes of paragraph (6)) in the number of man-days of seasonal agricultural services performed by aliens who were recently admitted (or whose status was recently adjusted) under this section.

"(B) NOTICE OF EMERGENCY PROCEDURE.—Not later than 3 days after the date the Secretaries receive a request under subparagraph (A), the Secretaries shall provide for notice in the Federal Register of the substance of the request and shall provide an opportunity for interested parties to submit information to the Secretaries on a timely basis respecting the request.

"(C) PROMPT DETERMINATION ON REQUEST.—The Secretaries, not later than 21 days after the date of the receipt of such a request and after consideration of any information submitted on a timely basis with respect to the request, shall make and publish in the Federal Register their determination on the request. The request shall be granted, and the shortage number for the fiscal year shall be increased, to the extent that the Secretaries determine that such an increase is justified based upon the showing and circumstances described in subparagraph (A) and that such an increase takes into account reasonable recruitment efforts having been undertaken.

"(8) PROCEDURE FOR DECREASING MAN-DAYS OF SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL SERVICES REQUIRED IN THE CASE OF OVER-SUPPLY OF WORKERS.—

"(A) REQUESTS.—After the beginning of a fiscal year, a group of special agricultural workers may request the Secretaries to decrease the number of man-days required under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (d)(2) with respect to the fiscal year based upon a showing that extraordinary, unusual, and unforeseen circumstances have resulted in a significant decrease in the shortage number due to (i) a significant decrease in the need for special agricultural workers in the year, (ii) a significant increase in the availability of able, willing, and qualified workers to perform seasonal agricultural services, or (iii) a significant increase (above the factor used for purposes of paragraph (6)) in the number of man-days of seasonal agricultural services performed by aliens who were recently admitted (or whose status was recently adjusted) under this section.

"(B) NOTICE OF REQUEST.—Not later than 3 days after the date the Secretaries receive a request under subparagraph (A), the Secretaries shall provide for notice in the Federal Register of the substance of the request and shall provide an opportunity for interested parties to submit information to the Secretaries on a timely basis respecting the request.

"(C) DETERMINATION ON REQUEST.—The Secretaries, before the end of the fiscal year involved and after consideration of any information submitted on a timely basis with respect to the request, shall make and publish in the Federal Register their determination on the request. The request shall be granted, and the number of man-days specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (d)(2) for the fiscal year shall be reduced by the same proportion as the Secretaries determine that a decrease in the shortage number is justified based upon the showing and circumstances described in subparagraph (A).

"(b) ANNUAL NUMERICAL LIMITATION ON ADMISSION OF ADDITIONAL SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—

"(1) ANNUAL NUMERICAL LIMITATION.—

"(A) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—The numerical limitation on the number of aliens who may be admitted under subsection (c)(1) or who otherwise may acquire lawful temporary residence under such subsection for fiscal year 1990 is—

"(i) 95 percent of the number of individuals whose status was adjusted under section 210(a), minus

"(ii) the number estimated under paragraph (3)(A)(i) for fiscal year 1989 (as adjusted in accordance with subparagraph (C)).

"(B) FISCAL YEARS 1991, 1992, AND 1993.—The numerical limitation on the number of aliens who may be admitted under subsection (c)(1) or who otherwise may acquire lawful temporary residence under such subsection for fiscal years 1991, 1992, or 1993 is—

"(i) 90 percent of the number described in this clause for the previous fiscal year (or, for fiscal year 1991, the number described in subparagraph (A)(i)), minus

"(ii) the number estimated under paragraph (3)(A)(i) for the previous fiscal year (as adjusted in accordance with subparagraph (C)).

"(C) ADJUSTMENT TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT CHANGE IN NUMBER OF H-2 AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—The number used under subparagraph (A)(ii) or (B)(ii) (as the case may be) shall be increased or decreased to reflect any numerical increase or decrease, respectively, in the number of aliens admitted to perform temporary seasonal agricultural services (as defined in subsection (g)(2)) under section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a) in the fiscal year compared to such number in the previous fiscal year.

"(2) REPORTING OF INFORMATION ON EMPLOYMENT.—In the case of a person or entity who employs, during a fiscal year (beginning with fiscal year 1989 and ending with fiscal year 1992) in seasonal agricultural services, a special agricultural worker—

"(A) whose status was adjusted under section 210, the person or entity shall furnish an official designated by the Secretaries with a certificate (at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretaries establish, after consultation with the Attorney General and the Director of the Bureau of the Census) of the number of man-days of employment performed by the alien in seasonal agricultural services during the fiscal year, or

"(B) who was admitted or whose status was adjusted under this section, the person or entity shall furnish the alien and an official designated by the Secretaries with a certificate (at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretaries establish, after consultation with the Attorney General and the Director of the Bureau of the Census) of the number of man-days of employment performed by the alien in seasonal agricultural services during the fiscal year.

"(3) ANNUAL ESTIMATE OF EMPLOYMENT OF SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Bureau of the Census shall, before the end of each fiscal year (beginning with fiscal year 1989 and ending with fiscal year 1992), estimate—

"(i) the number of special agricultural workers who have performed seasonal agricultural services in the United States at any time during the fiscal year, and

"(ii) for purposes of subsection (a)(5), the average number of man-days of such services certain of such workers have performed in the United States during the fiscal year.

"(B) FURNISHING OF INFORMATION TO DIRECTOR.—The offical designated by the Secretaries under paragraph (2) shall furnish to the Director, in such form and manner as the Director specifies, information contained in the certifications furnished to the official under paragraph (2).

"(C) BASIS FOR ESTIMATES.—The Director shall base the estimates under subparagraph (A) on the information furnished under subparagraph (B), but shall take into account (to the extent feasible) the underreporting or duplicate reporting of special agricultural workers who have performed seasonal agricultural services at any time during the fiscal year. The Director shall periodically conduct appropriate surveys, of agricultural employers and others, to ascertain the extent of such underreporting or duplicate reporting.

"(D) REPORT.—The Director shall annually prepare and report to the Congress information on the estimates made under this paragraph.

"(c) ADMISSION OF ADDITIONAL SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For each fiscal year (beginning with fiscal year 1990 and ending with fiscal year 1993), the Attorney General shall provide for the admission for lawful temporary resident status, or for the adjustment of status to lawful temporary resident status, of a number of aliens equal to the shortage number (if any, determined under subsection (a)) for the fiscal year, or, if less, the numerical limitation established under subsection (b)(1) for the fiscal year. No such alien shall be admitted who is not admissible to the United States as an immigrant, except as otherwise provided under subsection (e).

"(2) ALLOCATION OF VISAS.—The Attorney General shall, in consultation with the Secretary of State, provide such process as may be appropriate for aliens to petition for immigrant visas or to adjust status to become aliens lawfully admitted for temporary residence under this subsection. No alien may be issued a visa as an alien to be admitted under this subsection or may have the alien's status adjusted under this subsection unless the alien has had a petition approved under this paragraph.

"(d) RIGHTS OF ALIENS ADMITTED OR ADJUSTED UNDER THIS SECTION.—

"(1) ADJUSTMENT TO PERMANENT RESIDENCE.—The Attorney General shall adjust the status of any alien provided lawful temporary resident status under subsection (c) to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence at the end of the 3-year period that begins on the date the alien was granted such temporary resident status.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FORD OF MICHIGAN

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of Michigan: In section 101(a)(1), in section 274A(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act inserted by such section, strike out paragraph (5).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] will be recognized for 5 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say at the outset that I will offer this amendment and the amendment designated No. 2 on behalf of the Committee on Education and Labor, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] will offer amendment No. 3, also passed by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. Chairman, there are two reasons not to waive the verification requirement and provide an affirmative defense to charges of its violation. The first reason is simple: It makes no sense to excuse an employer even if he has actual knowledge that he is hiring an unauthorized alien, merely because the employment service mistakenly certified that the individual was authorized to work.

The second reason to eliminate this waiver is that it has the potential for imposing huge costs on the State employment services without raising any money to pay for them. Secretary Brock estimates that if the employment services are pressured into verifying the citizenship status of their millions of referrals, the cost will be at least $45 million a year. Budget cuts have already closed hundreds of employment service offices in every State. The imposition of $45 million of new responsibilities without providing proportionate funding would close hundreds more and lead to the layoff of thousands of employment service personnel.

Secretary Brock supports my amendment. The National Governor's Association supports it. And the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies supports it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment was adopted in the Committee on the Judiciary when presented by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN]. What the gentleman brought to us was a concern that employers had that if they were to receive people who were referred to them by a State employment agency and they were then to make a check and discover that those people were here illegally, they would be put in a funny situation where they could not rely on the recommendations made by the State referral agency.

We have argued on the floor here that employer sanctions are necessary, and those of us who support the bill have suggested that, yes, there will be an additional burden placed on the employers of America, but a necessary burden, in order to get our borders under control.

Now, to hear that somehow the State referral agencies are incapable of making that simple decision, as some would like to say, but a small employer is, seems to be inconsistent.

All we are saying here is that if the State employment agency has referred someone to an employer, that employer should be able to rely on the State employment agency for having verified the person's status. To suggest that these people are not trained to verify the status is to suggest that somehow they are incapable of doing what we are going to require employers to do, which is to make a simple analysis of the documentation presented to them.

It just seems to me that we ought to treat the State referral agency the same way we treat employers.

If we say that somehow State referral agencies are incapable of doing that, what does that say about the burden we are placing on employers? I think we have reached the point where we have said, this is a reasonable burden to be placed on employers; it seems to me it ought to be a reasonable burden placed on the referral agencies as well.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], who was the source of the amendment originally.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I think this issue is very clear. The amendment to strike this particular section of the bill is one that is saying, let us have duplicate paperwork. If you think we are short of paperwork, you may want to vote for this amendment.

If you think it makes sense to eliminate duplicate paperwork, then you will want to oppose it.

Let us make it clear what is involved here. We are not requiring the State unemployment services to fill out these forms. That has nothing to do with this section.

It only says that if they do fill out these forms and they are presented to the employer, that may be used as a defense. That is all it says. It does not require the forms to be filled out; it only says if they have been filled out already, the employer may use that as a defense.

The other point I think is important to know here is that if the employer finds out that the individual is an illegal alien, that this is not a conclusive defense.

But the bottom line on this is whether or not you want to add an additional burden to the employers of America and make this process more cumbersome, more time consuming, more costly, and more unworkable.

Basically, all the language of the bill says right now is that if these items have been checked by the State unemployment agency and if they have chosen to supply documentation, then that process does not have to be needlessly duplicated.

I appreciate the opportunity to expand on the amendment.

□ 1630

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield my remaining time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do oppose the amendment, although I do respect the gentleman from Michigan and I know we will be on the same side of other amendments; but the fact is that in this bill there is a provision that an employer may rely on the State employment commission, a government agency, for verification, so that if the State employment agency verifies that an employee is eligible to work, then all the provision that is in the bill does is to say that that employer can rely upon that.

I think whether one is for or against this bill as a whole, this provision that is in the bill, which the gentleman's amendment would seek to strike, this provision in the bill makes a lot of common sense. A State employment commission that does handle verification for other reasons, verification for employment, is frankly in many cases in a much better position to verify who is eligible to work and who is not than an employer who is busy running a business and who does not have access to the records that the State employment commission does. I think it is a commonsense amendment.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman who has just spoken, I would like to read further from Secretary Brock's letter:

> With respect to the amendment's impact on employer sanctions, we believe it would weaken their effectiveness because it would relieve employers who hire through State employment agencies of any direct responsibility for compliance with Federal immigration laws. This amendment exempts such employers from the requirement, imposed on all other employers, that they sign a government form attesting to the fact that they had examined the job applicant's identification documentation and had no reason to believe that the applicant was an unauthorized alien.

He goes on to say later: "We estimated that State public employment service agencies would spend up to $45 million annually"—and we are talking about State agencies, not the INS, not a Federal Government agency, but we are talking about a burden we are going to place on a State agency that has never had any role in the immigration business. These State agencies, and this is the reason that the National Governors Association also supports my amendment to strike the Brown amendment, in the estimate of the Department of Labor would have to spend $45 million annually, if only those people who now use the State employment office use them; but if other people were encouraged to use the State employment office, as the proponent of the Brown amendment suggests they would in order to get around the duty to examine the papers themselves, then that would increase the volume and would increase the cost proportionately. This is not a cost that is covered by anything in this bill.

The Brown amendment if it were serious should have provided to reimburse the States for the cost incurred by giving them this kind of a burden. The $45 million a year is only assuming you have already invested the State money in recruiting and training the people do to this job.

I think it is an undue burden on the States.

Mr. Chairman, I include the entire letter from Secretary Brock, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
SECRETARY OF LABOR,
Washington, DC, July 23, 1986.

Hon. WILLIAM D. FORD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BILL: Thank you for your letter of July 14 requesting my comments on the Brown amendment to H.R. 3810, the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1985.

The amendment provides that a person or entity shall be deemed in compliance with the employment verification system in the case of an individual who was referred for employment by a State employment agency if that person or entity retains documentation of such referral certifying that the agency complied with the verification system with respect to the individual's referral. The Department of Labor opposes this amendment.

As the Department reads the Brown amendment, it does not mandate that State employment agencies issue referral documents certifying that they had complied with the certification provisions. However, employers are likely to push for such documentation for job applicants referred by the State employment agencies once employer sanctions are instituted.

With respect to the amendment's impact on employer sanctions, we believe it would weaken their effectiveness because it would relieve employers who hire through State employment agencies of any direct responsibility for compliance with Federal immigration laws. This amendment exempts such employers from the requirement, imposed on all other employers, that they sign a government form attesting to the fact that they had examined the job applicant's identification documentation and had no reason to believe that the applicant was an unauthorized alien.

In addition we would note that the amendment would result in a sizeable duplication of the documentation and paperwork requirements of the employer sanctions provision. Furthermore, if, pursuant to this amendment, the State employment service agencies were to issue some form of identification documentation to all individuals using their services, this could lead to a large-scale production of fraudulent government documents or a de facto government work identification card.

Regarding the workload for State employment agencies, if the certification of legal work status for all persons referred for employment were undertaken and the appropriate referral documents issued, this would mean a large increase in workload for the State employment agencies. In 1984, in response to a similar provision in H.R. 1510 of the 98th Congress, we estimated that State public employment service agencies would spend up to $45 million annually in order to perform this verification function. That estimate was based on then-current levels of applicants and referrals. If more employers were to use the public employment service, in order to avoid the verification responsibility by providing themselves with this affirmative defense against employer sanctions, this estimate could be much greater. In addition, we assumed that the term "State employment agency" applied to State public employment service agencies only. A broader reading could presumably include any State-operated employment-related program, such as Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) programs, the Work Incentive (WIN) program, and others. We have not estimated workload increases for these programs.

Considering all of the above, the Department of Labor opposes the Brown amendment.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FORD OF MICHIGAN

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. THE Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of Michigan: In section 101(a)(1), in section 274A(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act inserted by such section, strike out paragraph (5) and redesignate paragraph (6) as paragraph (5).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] will be recognized for 5 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, after what just happened, I can assure the House that I will not be offering any more amendments supported by the administration this afternoon. I know now what it is like.

This amendment is offered on behalf of the Committee on Education and Labor to close what we believe to have been an inadvertent loophole for a particular type of employment by virtue of the language on page 10 of the bill under subparagraph 5, time for compliance.

□ 1705

We strike this provision of the bill because it would permit an employer to have until noon of the day following the day that he hires the employee to verify whether the employee is or is not a legal alien, or a citizen.

Mr. Chairman, especially in agriculture, but also frequently in construction, employers hire unskilled workers 1 day at a time. There are people who call themselves "day haul contractors" who are down there on the border, and they haul people up. As they fill a bus up, they haul them to the fields, and they work 1 day and they are gone, they are someplace else the next day.

This language would permit the employer who engages in 1-day hiring of unskilled laborers to never verify the status of anybody he was hiring because they wouldn't be there the following day at noon when he was required to get the verification.

This is a very simple amendment; we believe that the committee was prepared to accept this because it does not fly in the face of what they were doing; it is only because of the nature of the 1-day hire for unskilled labor that this language has the unfortunate effect that it would have if it is not stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has consumed 2 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, this is not an inadvertent part of the bill. This part of the bill was placed in as a result of an amendment by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] during our deliberations in the Committee on the Judiciary 2 years ago.

The reason for it is very simple: We have two obligations we place on employers. One is that they not knowingly hire illegal aliens. We place an additional paperwork burden on employers to help in the enforcement of this.

Mention was made by people who testified before our subcommittee that at times when they do hire, and this was some people in agriculture but also other areas, they have a particular time; maybe a week to get a certain thing done.

If someone comes to them and does not have both of the documents necessary, do they have to send them home and lose that day's work?

We said, it seemed to be a reasonable thing that they could allow them to work that day as long as they brought the documentation the next day. The point people should keep in mind is this: If someone intentionally used this as a ruse to hire people who are here illegally, he would still be violating the law and would be subject to the penalties of the law.

This goes to the paperwork burden. This goes to the documentation that he is to keep and which he can use as an affirmative defense. We have made what we thought was a reasonable compromise that worked out in the real workaday world. That does happen that people come to you and may not have both of the documents that are required under the law.

Should that person not be allowed to work that day? Should that employer be denied that person's labor that day? We are saying, let us try and work it out reasonably. If the employer is using it as a ruse, then in fact what we are going to do is find that person liable for violating the law.

I would yield to my chairman on this.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California, my friend, Mr. LUNGREN, for yielding, and I join him in opposing the amendment offered by the committee.

I understand the effort of the committee to be sure that there is not some circumvention of the law, some way to play games with it; but I think the gentleman has addressed two key elements:

One, this was an effort on the part of the committee, the full Judiciary Committee, to do justice and to realize in its work the demands of the real world.

Second, it was an effort to try to be sure that there was a provision in the bill which would sanction those employers who intentionally engaged in a little rigamarole here on a 1-day basis. It was an effort to solve both problems.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM], who is the original author of this section of the bill.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, we have a lot of problems among our citrus growers, and we found out that Senator THURMOND had problems among peach growers and so on, with a fear that a perishable crop on the ground after a freeze or a frost is going to wind up costing a lot of money to the employer that is unnecessarily going to be lost if he has got to have the documents in hand that particular morning.

After a lot of discussion of this sort of issue, we came to the realization that we could have this 24-hour period without doing any damage to the production of the documents.

I do not think it does. I urge a no vote on this amendment. We need to be able to make this thing workable and realistic for the people to whom it is going to affect, and we cannot expect fresh fruit and vegetable folks to be able to have the kind of protection in growing their crops and harvesting them without this provision in the law.

So I urge that this effort to delete it be defeated, as it was in the past and as it was in conference last year.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I want to mention that we have had this in the bill in the past. It is a reasonable accommodation to the real world. It does not allow someone to get around the law. I hope that this amendment will be voted down.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, in my first remarks I said that I thought that this unconscionable loophole was inadvertently placed in the bill, but the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Florida have just convinced me that they knew full well what they were doing. They wanted this loophole in the bill; they have identified it for what it is. The people who use day hire, unskilled labor, to pick, as he said, perishable crops would be excused completely from any responsibility to determine at the time they hire the person, whether they are or are not in this country legally.

He says it is inconvenient to do it until the next day; so we now are going to adopt a policy, according to the gentleman from Florida, that says we should determine whether somebody is in this country legally before we give them a job, but not if it is inconvenient. Not if it is inconvenient.

That is inconsistent with what the proponents of this bill have said from the beginning, and I only want to suggest to you that if this is typical of the attitude that lies behind this bill by its supporters over there, I think you are going to have more trouble than you believe when we get to conference.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, the concern I am pressing on this is the fact that from Florida we have a freeze; that is the problem expressed to me; and the citrus is rotting if it is not picked; it has to be picked immediately. That is the concern expressed to me.

Nobody is trying to get a loophole. We are just trying to hold the employer accountable; and he will be held accountable, but if the person does not have the document on his person at the moment he ought to be able to use him, demand it be there the next day, and that is the one way we can pick the frozen fruit that otherwise is going to rot and be perished.

It is not an effort for normal procedures that we are talking about.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentleman could look at me with a straight face and tell me that while he is hiring that person the day he hires them, he cannot ask him whether he is legal or not?

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, he can, and that is what he is doing; but the question is the documentation, not whether he is asking him. He must ask him under this law.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. So he does not have to look at the documentation until the next day. He does not have to look at the documentation when he hires them; he has to look at it at least 1 day after he hires them.

Mr. McCOLLUM. He has to ask him on the day. He has to ask him on the day he hires him, and if he does not ask him, then he is in real trouble under this bill.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. No, your amendment excuses him from even asking at the time he hires them. He does not have to ask him until noon of the following day.

Mr. McCOLLUM. I disagree, but that is respectfully so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BARTLETT

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARTLETT: In section 101(a)(1), in section 274A(d)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act inserted by such section, amend subparagraph (B) to read as follows:

"(B) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY FOR PATTERN AND PRACTICE VIOLATIONS.—In the case of a person or entity which has engaged in a pattern or practice of employment, recruitment, or referral in violation of paragraph (1)(A) or (2) of subsection (a), the person or entity shall, after having been afforded notice and opportunity for an administrative hearing, be subject to a civil penalty of not less than $3,000, and not more than $10,000 for each unauthorized alien with respect to whom the violation occurred.".

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it may well be that we will not be required to take the entire time on this amendment, but I would like to take a few minutes to explain the amendment.

The purpose of this amendment is to remove those so-called and very real criminal sanctions including jail time that is a part of this bill and to replace those criminal sanctions with a very large and substantial and, I think, and the Education and Labor Committee believed, more effective civil sanctions including a fine of a minimum of $3,000 per alien and up to $10,000 per alien. The problem with criminal sanctions, Mr. Chairman, is that they are both unnecessary and they are also overkill. Other labor laws include stiff fines for a pattern of practice. This amendment would make this bill consistent with other similar laws in labor legislation that we already have. Employers typically abide by labor laws in this country, as do corporations, and because of the fines, not because of the proposal of criminal sanctions, minimum wage, overtime, fair labor standards, OSHA, EEOC, and others. And they do not include jail time or criminal penalties. This bill should not do it either.

Now, corporations pay fines and most fines of up to $10,000 for violation per alien are very, very real because they create severe economic dis-incentives to violate this law. But individuals go to jail.

The way the bill is constructed, the individual who would be going to jail would be the person who actually does the hiring, the road construction foreman, the high school principal, the manager of the dry cleaners.

Any hint, it seems to me, any hint of jail time or criminal penalties or criminal charges for making a mistake, for making a mistake in the hiring of someone as to whether or not they are eligible to be hired is something that will so chill a manager or someone at the hiring level that they would choose not to make a mistake and they will not consider anyone who appears to be foreign born.

Now, there is no antidiscrimination provision in this bill, or could ever be written into a bill that could overcome that fear of criminal charges that could be brought. The person who does the hiring is liable for the criminal charges, not the corporation, not the employer.

Mr. Chairman, I refer to the bill itself. There is no defense in the bill that is proposed that would be a defense if that person who is doing the hiring made his hiring decision upon the instruction of his employer. There is no defense if he did not have corporate counsel or he did not have some sort of legal advice, there is no defense if he did not know what a pattern of practice said in the law. If fact, this bill, the imposition of criminal sanctions would so chill hiring decisions as to court such widespread discrimination in this country that it would never recover.

This is the same amendment adopted in last year's bill authored by the gentleman across the aisle, Mr. COLEMAN of Texas, which was adopted by the Committee on Education and Labor, supported by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the ACLU, La Raza, UNIDA, the Farm Bureau, LULAC, Republicans and Democrats all across this country. In our rush to stop the flow of illegal workers, we ought to do enough to get the job done, and civil penalties with a $10,000 fine per alien is enough to do that, but this would be the first time that we have made such hiring illegal and it is not necessary. It is counterproductive to go a step further, as the bill does, and to add in criminal charges, to construct such onerous threatening penalties as to cause a new and I think dangerous and vicious round of xenophobia and discrimination against non-Anglos in the hiring marketplace.

I very strongly urge the Members on both sides of the aisle to consider this amendment, whether you are for the bill or against the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I want to tell you a very simple message about this amendment. That is that there are no criminal penalties in this bill for individual violations of this law. There are no criminal penalties in this bill for individual violations of this law. Last year there were. This year the committee has come to the floor with a bill that contains no criminal penalties for individual violations of this law. The only area in which one can be subjected to a 6-month jail term is an area where he is a systematic, regular, repeated violator of the prohibition against hiring people that are not citizens, that is one who participates in a pattern or a practice of violations of this statute.

A person who is convicted the first time of hiring someone who is not a citizen is given simply a citation, no fine. The second time, he is fined $1,000 or $2,000. A third time, he is fined $2,000 to $5,000. Only a person who engages in a pattern or practice of systematic violation would subject himself to a 6-month jail sentence. That is extremely lenient, extremely reasonable, and, I repeat, there are no criminal penalties in this bill for individual violations.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYANT. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, he has been one of the strongest proponents on our subcommittee in favor of making this law a workable law and at the same time sending the kind of message that we have to send in order to make this law abided by.

Let me just underscore what my friend has said, and I think he would agree with me. First and foremost, this criminal penalty in the bill does not apply to individual violations; is that correct?

Mr. BRYANT. That is exactly right.

Mr. MAZZOLI. May I also ask the gentleman, is this not in the committee bill the conference committee position adopted in 1984 after that long, arduous conference on the earlier form of the immigration bill?

Mr. BRYANT. Indeed it is. It is a recognition of the need to make a violation more than simply a cost of doing business.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Exactly.

Mr. BRYANT. If we do not have ultimately for the repeated practitioner of violations of this law a jail term, even though it is a short one—6 months is the maximum you can get—we will not have an effective law.

Mr. MAZZOLI. May I ask the gentleman one last question?

I would ask my friend and colleague from Texas, a very valuable member of our subcommittee: Is it not the case that the only way an individual, the only way that there is any triggering of the criminal penalties under this bill is for what the gentleman calls systematic pattern and practice, repeated, blatant kinds of violations of employer sanctions provisions?

Mr. BRYANT. That is correct. And for those types of violators simply putting a $3,000 fine, which is as low as a fine could go under Mr. BARTLETT's amendment, will not be enough because then it would only be a cost of doing business. That admittedly could get them for as much as $10,000, but you could get them for as little as $3,000. Unless you put teeth in this, we are not going to have a serious reform.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES].

Mr. TORRES. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to replace criminal sanctions with civil penalties for employers who hire undocumented immigrants.

The provision on employer sanctions currently in the bill threatens employers with a 6-month jail sentence for pattern and practice violations. This is overkill. Adequate provisions already exist with civil remedies and the power of injunction.

Criminal sanctions would result in discrimination. The foreman at a construction site or manager at a restaurant would avoid hiring people who look foreign or speak with an accent.

If employers know that they can be handcuffed and arrested if they make the wrong decision, I seriously doubt that they will take a chance and hire anyone who do not look or sound like American.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, the issue as to whether criminal sanctions are included in the bill or not, and I refer to page 15, where it states very, very clearly that "the person or entity shall be fined not more than $1,000 imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both, for each violation." Now, that is a violation for a pattern or practice. But that individual plant superintendent, that individual hiring foreman is not—all he is going to know is that it is jail time if he makes a mistake.

As the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES] so eloquently states, he is going to make sure he does not make a mistake because he is not going to consider people who appear to be foreign born.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

What we have been talking about from the beginning of this debate is whether or not the question of sanctions really places in the hands of the employer the hardship and the penalty of being both judge and jury. The average employer will try to do the right thing by hiring a person whom he or she believed would be a good employee. The problem is that those of us who are Americans, persons born and raised in this country, with surnames that do not sound Anglo, as well as those persons who speak with an accent, who are also Americans, will find themselves with the burden of trying to prove to the employer who is frightened silly because of employer sanctions.

My colleague from Texas makes good sense. We will have to live for the next 5 or 6 years under the cloud of sanctions. Further, I do not believe that American corporations should be judges and juries.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, as reported from the Judiciary Committee, our bill established a criminal penalty for pattern and practice violations of the prohibition against knowingly hiring an illegal alien.

What we have here is an amendment that strikes the criminal penalty for pattern and practice violations.

Mr. Chairman, we feel that criminal penalties are warranted for repeat offenders to assure that unscrupulous employers do not simply absorb the monetary civil penalties provided in the bill as a cost of doing business and continue to hire illegal aliens.

The profits to be made in some cases from hiring and from exploiting illegal aliens are substantial, and we fear that some employers are simply not going to be deterred by civil penalties alone, but warrant criminal penalties when a pattern and practice can be established.

I think also that criminal penalties signal that Congress views repeated disregard of the employer sanctions provisions as a serious office and should result in severe penalties.

These penalties, as we have heard, are graduated, and the criminal penalty will simply not be reached because of ignorance or clerical errors on the part of the employer.

I might add that the administration opposes this amendment. They feel that it would deprive the Government of an option in enforcement. And second that criminal penalties should be available when the employer has actually engaged in a criminal activity such as the smuggling of aliens, the most heinous of the offenses, or the crime of counterfeiting.

I think in balance that we feel, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment greatly weakens the sanctions in the bill and should be defeated.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a bad amendment and, if adopted, will turn this bill into a toothless tiger, a mamby-pamby immigration bill.

I understand why people do not want criminal penalties, because a lot of folks do not want an immigration bill that will work. They do not want a bill that has the ultimate penalty, a criminal penalty, for a criminal conduct pattern of practice in which you have lots and lots of people employing and utilizing illegal aliens over and over and over again, the ones who are bringing hundreds of thousands of people into this country.

The question is those who are in continuous violation, what do you do with them? If you just make them subject to a civil penalty, I am telling you you do not crack down on illegal immigration in this country.

You must have the capability, you must have the tools at your disposal, to put into effect the ultimate penalty in order to stop illegal immigration.

The purpose of this bill is supposed to be tough, and here we are watering it down, making it easy, making it so people will not have to face that ultimate penalty, and we end up not doing anything with this problem that everybody says could destroy America one of these days.

Let me remind you, under this bill now, for 6 months after the enactment of this bill there is a period of education where there is no enforcement at all. Then for 1 year there is a period where, if you transgress once and knowingly hire an illegal alien, you only get a citation. So you have basically a year and a half of going to school on this bill.

The criminal penalties require all of the criminal law requirements, including beyond a reasonable doubt and all of the other proof requirements. And again, it is for a pattern of practice, a continuing pattern, almost like you were talking about an organized crime situation.

So for the life of me, for an immigration bill that tries to restrict illegal immigration, I cannot understand why we want to remove the option of the penalty, and I urge you to defeat this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I just want to congratulate the gentleman. The gentleman makes an extremely important point. The gentleman is absolutely right.

If in fact you adopt this amendment, it basically guts the penalty provisions of the bill. I do not see how you could be any fairer than you are in the provisions in the bill. It requires a pattern of practice, it requires a series of transactions, more than just one individual transaction where an employer has, perhaps innocently, hired illegal aliens. That is not what we are talking about. We are talking about a pattern of practice in order to establish a violation of this section of the bill.

I would urge my colleagues to reject this particular amendment.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to reiterate. We are talking about folks here who are not the cream of the crop in American business. We are talking about people who bring in over and over and over cheap labor that they do not want to see having been paid the minimum wage in order for them to enrich themselves. There are very few of these people, but where they exist, they ought to be subject to the ultimate criminal penalty. And by eliminating this provision, you hurt the bill very much.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] that you do not have to start out with criminal penalties.

Ruin the bill? Let us all get reasonable for a minute. Do you mean to tell me that after this legislation passes, we will never revisit immigration reform again? Of course we will. And if we determine that it is really necessary to have criminal sanctions put into the bill, we can do it. But let us not start putting small business men and women in jail because they have made an error.

I suggest to you that the Bartlett amendment is the way to go, and we can do it with an "aye" vote on this amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARPER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I would just simply say that despite what my friend from Texas, Mr. COLEMAN, said a moment ago, simple error, oversight, inadvertent activity under the bill does not warrant in the committee version a criminal sanction. You have to have a pattern and a practice and an intentional flouting of the law.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Chairman, let me just restate what I think has been stated often enough, I just cannot support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

I believe, in response to what Mr. COLEMAN of Texas just said, that we do not want to put an individual business man or woman in jail, we do not want them to face criminal sanctions, simply by having made an error. We are not talking about making error after error after error in a pattern that continues to persist. In an instance like that, Mr. Chairman, I think the criminal sanctions are appropriate, and I must vote against this amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, we are not speaking of the cream of the crop or the best or the worst of employers. This bill applies not only to every employer in the country, but every person under this section who is a hiring decision. Every superintendent, every foreman, every dry cleaners manager, every person who makes a hiring decision, can read the law that says the person shall be fined not more than $1,000, imprisoned not more than 6 months. It is that imprisonment language that goes further than is necessary.

If sanctions are going to work, a $10,000 per person, per violation fine is adequate to work. To throw in jail time is too much.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUNGREN: In section 101(b)(1), at the end of subsection (a) of section 274B of the Immigration and Nationality Act inserted by such section, insert the following new paragraph:

"(4) ADDITIONAL EXCEPTION PROVIDING RIGHT TO PREFER EQUALLY QUALIFIED CITIZENS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, it is not an unfair immigration-related employment practice for a person or other entity to prefer to hire, recruit, or refer an individual who is a citizen or national of the United States over another individual who is an alien if the two individuals are equally qualified.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment goes to the section of the bill known as the Frank amendment. As some Members will recall, this amendment became a point of controversy in the conference last time and has remained somewhat a point of controversy throughout the subcommittee and the committee deliberations. That Frank amendment deals with the question of potential discrimination visited upon individuals as the result of the specter of employer sanctions.

This amendment amends that section of the bill to state that notwithstanding any other provision of this section, it is not an unfair immigration related employment practice for a person or other entity to prefer to hire, recruit, or prefer an individual who is a citizen or a national of the United States over another individual who is an alien if the two individuals are equally qualified.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that when two individuals are equally qualified, the employer should be allowed to exercise this small amount of discretion for whatever reason to hire a citizen or national of the United States over another individual who is an alien.

The current problem illustrates the need for this amendment. I think this problem occurs in defense contracts.

Members will know in dealing with employers in their districts that we require by law employees of defense contractors to be citizens. We do not grant any exceptions. If someone has a defense contract and wants to hire a citizen, this discriminates against noncitizens, even though they may at some point in time intend to become citizens.

So what we have done in the law is to say that for reasons we think are important, if you are a defense contractor you have to hire citizens.

The Frank amendment, if unamended, says that if you decide to hire a citizen over a noncitizen, you can become subject to a new civil action, a new civil right, that noncitizens have.

It seems to me that both of those elements in the law would therefore collide.

The problem ensues, which I think cannot be dealt with if this amendment is not adopted, that problem is for companies who wish to put themselves in the position of bidding on defense contracts in the future. What do they do? Do they hire noncitizens because the law requires them not to prefer citizens? Then when they attempt to get a job with the Defense Department, a contract, say that we are going to fire the people we have relied on? It does not make sense.

Some have said that we have certain exceptions, that when you intend to become a defense contractor. Well, how far back to do you go? How do you figure that out?

Look at many of the small businesses in your district. Oftentimes they hope to get a defense contract in the future. So how do you deal with it?

It seems to me to get out of this catch-22 situation, this amendment is the best way to do it. It says that irrespective of the Frank amendment, if you have as an employer a citizen and a noncitizen in front of you, equally qualified, and you are trying to make a hiring decision, one is a citizen and one is a noncitizen, they are equally qualified, you have every right under the law to prefer the citizen over the noncitizen.

It seems to me we allow it in other hiring practices of the Government. We ought to allow it in the private sector.

If people are concerned about discrimination, it seems to me the universal paperwork burden that we have in the bill is the best way to take care of discrimination. If an employer has to require that paperwork of anybody, no matter how they look, blue eyed, brown eyed, black hair, blond hair, swarthy complexion, light complexion, there is no incentive for them to discriminate.

The gentleman from New York said that he is not worried about the bigots. He is worried about the nonbigots who might be concerned about running afoul of the law. I think that takes care of it.

This in my judgment is an absolutely essential amendment so that we do not run into the problem of putting our citizens in the position of a most difficult decision.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I am not sure really whether I am in opposition or in support of the gentleman's amendment.

May I ask the gentleman just one basic question. We dealt with this thing in the committee up and down the line. I know the gentleman is going to engage in a discussion with our colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts; but I guess the one question I have is: When you have two equally qualified, who makes the determination of who is equally qualified? Does the gentleman have any sort of advice to us that this will be used in some way as a dodge or a device to somehow defeat the law?

Mr. LUNGREN. Well, no. If the gentleman will yield, I would just say to the gentleman that I assume the person who would finally make the determination would be the governmental structure that has been set up in the Frank amendment, or whatever comes out of the conference. It will only come up if an action were taken against an employer. He would have to show they were equally qualified.

I would say in most cases, I would hope that the doubt would be resolved in favor of the employer to make the decision as to equal qualifications.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment. I understand its appeal to some Members and I want to both discuss my reasons for opposition, but also on my time to discuss the implications of the amendment of the gentleman from California.

I want to set the context of the antidiscrimination provision for this amendment and for amendments that will follow.

We are putting forward in here a new concept, sanctions for employers who hire people who are here illegally. I favor that. I think it is necessary to deal with the economic incentive that brings some people here.

A number of people, especially Hispanic Americans, are afraid because Hispanic Americans have had some experience with discrimination and because so much of the immigration, legal and illegal, occurs on our border with Mexico, that the introduction of employer sanctions may increase discrimination against people based on their ethnicity because people will say, "Gee, the surest way not to hire anybody illegal is to not hire anybody who is Hispanic." We hope that is wrong and we are going to do everything we can to discourage that.

In 1984 when this bill was last on the floor in the House, an amendment had been prepared by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], which I then offered after it was defeated in another form, that set up a special provision to deal with discrimination that may come because of employer sanctions. That was substantially compromised, as the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] pointed out in the 1984 conference.

What you have before you is what the conference agreed to—Mr. Chairman, if the Members will listen, they may find it is more exciting than it seems.

We are dealing here with what we came out of conference with. The reason it deals with noncitizens is that under the legalization portion of this bill, the matched pair of sanctions, we are telling people who have been here illegally, "We want you now to present yourselves for legalization," but we do not want them to be in limbo where while they present themselves they will not get any job protection, because people say, "Hey, I don't like you getting legalized and I won't hire you." They are not otherwise protected.

The intent of the overall amendment was to provide them protection. I stress that because I believe in the form that we now have it, and if the amendment of the gentleman from California is adopted, I suppose it is even more acceptable to people on the other side who would have accepted it in conference, this is an essential part I believe of any immigration bill. If we are going to have sanctions, many of us feel in good faith with a lot of citizens, especially Hispanic Americans, requires that we deal with the potential for antidiscrimination. If we get rid of sanctions, we get rid of this. It exists to deal with the potential of sanction driven discrimination and it is an essential provision, because we do not want to further burden the EOC.

Now, we did cover noncitizens. The gentleman from California has an amendment which says, as I understand it, and this is where I would like to address him, not that it totally strips out protection for noncitizens, but that an employer who is faced with people of equal qualifications who decides to prefer the American citizen can legally do so; not that an employer is being invited to say, "I won't hire any of those people who will be legalized."

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California for a reply to see if I have correctly stated that proposition.

Mr. LUNGREN. Well, that is correct. What my amendment says specifically is that if an employer has a situation in which the decision is to be made between a citizen or national and someone who is a noncitizen here legally, that he can prefer the citizen or national over the noncitizen or national if they are equally qualified. That is what it says.

Mr. FRANK. If the gentleman will further forebear, that is not meant to be any invitation to an employer to refuse wholesale to hire the people in this legalizing category; is that correct?

Mr. LUNGREN. That is true, sure.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Let me say that I do not like this amendment, but I do not like it less than I do not like some others.

I understand the difficulty of the concept we have got here. I think we have provided in the bill for the situation the gentleman talked about. We did try to provide for an employer who had some legal requirement to hire citizens. I understand that. I think we have dealt fairly with that.

I would point out that organized labor has supported the amendment in the form it is in and it did get agreement, although reluctant agreement, from the other body; so I hope this amendment is defeated, but I do want to stress in any case that I think it is important that we have, given the sanctions, some form of an antidiscrimination provision. I know a later amendment will come to try to kill the whole thing.

I just want to point out with regard to this amendment that any employer as a general matter of antidiscrimination, I would point out that under this amendment, and it is very explicit in the report language, the burden of proof of proving discrimination is on those who would charge it. The employer does not have to prove that he or she was innocent. Somebody else has to prove he or she was guilty. An employer faced with two people of equal qualifications, under existing law, can in fact pick anybody under any circumstances; so I do not believe that it is necessary to establish that particular point. Therefore, I am opposing it, because an employer can do whatever he or she wants, presented with two people of equal qualifications; but I want to stress again the importance, the centrality of this bill if it is to survive, of a significant antidiscrimination mechanism to deal with the potential discrimination that may come from sanctions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], whose service on the committee has been noble, and whose work in trying to get a bill has gone back many years—as the gentleman heard earlier, I have some reservation about the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN]. I worry that there may be some use of this as a dodge or a device to get around the question.

I am heartened by what the gentleman from Massachusetts has said, that centrality in this matter is preservation of the Frank language, which is in the bill before us. That, which comes up at a later stage, is more central, more vital, and profoundly influential on the gentleman's feeling toward the bill than maybe this particular amendment.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, let me say, in the interest of truth in labeling, it is the Hawkins language, because in a complicated parliamentary situation, this was drafted by the staff of the Committee on Education and Labor. It is the Hawkins language as it survived the conference with the Senate.

Now no author wants to claim pride of authorship after a conference with the other body, but the fact is that the central provision here is some mechanism, a brandnew mechanism to deal with a brandnew potential source of discrimination, and if sanctions do not cause discrimination, then this will not have much to do, and we can get rid of it. But yes, it is central that we have some protection. I do not think that we have a bill without it.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER].

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment attempts to clean up a proposition which is fundamentally flawed. What it attempts to do is to state that when there are two applicants for a job who are equally qualified, one of whom is a U.S. citizen and another of whom is not, but does have a green card, it is not illegal to hire the U.S. citizen over the alien who is allowed to work.

Now what is wrong with that? It seems to me that when there are two equally qualified people applying for a job, the employer ought to be able to choose whomever he wants, and not be subject to a charge of discrimination.

The fundamental flaw of the entire proposition is that adopting an antidiscrimination provision against alienage, and elevating alienage to race, creed, color, national origin, or sex on the things that cannot be discriminated against in the hiring process, effectively takes away the rights of an employer to choose a more qualified person.

Very frankly, the next amendment is to strike this proposition altogether. I hope that that amendment is approved. However, if the amendment is not approved, at least we ought to give employers the assurance that they will not be hauled before a special office in the Justice Department if they decide to go with a U.S. citizen over an alien.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself my remaining time.

Mr. Chairman, just to mention to the Members of the House who may share some concern about language that might amend the underlying Frank language and somehow fail to protect the individuals who might be covered by employer sanctions, I would just cite that title IV of the bill before us is replete with studies that have to be made by agencies of Government, and the Civil Rights Commission is supposed to issue three reports on the discriminatory effects, if any, of this bill when it is implemented.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, how is the Civil Rights Commission supposed to issue these reports if we are defunding them?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I would hope, and I appreciate what the gentleman has said, and I understand that they are not exactly numero uno on the Federal spending cycle, but those reports will be picked up, because we want this bill not to be unwittingly discriminatory.

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to oppose the Lungren amendment which would institute employment discrimination against legal U.S. residents.

This legislation is regressive, both on legal and moral grounds. Under present law, residents admitted to this country are expected to support themselves, otherwise they are subject to deportation. It makes no sense to admit immigrants and refugees to this country, require them to work, and then allow employers to refuse them employment because of their immigration status. This amendment would restrict a legal resident's right to work—a right which has been consistently upheld by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has recognized the importance of a legal resident's right to work as the very essence of personal freedom and opportunity that the 14th amendment intended to secure. However, the Lungren amendment would curtail such right and freedom as guaranteed under our Constitution.

If the author of this amendment is concerned about protecting employers from the charge of discrimination should they choose either of two equally qualified applicants, let me inform him that these employers are protected as is clearly stated in the Judiciary Committee report on this bill. I, therefore, urge you to oppose the Lungren amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count for a quorum.

One hundred twenty-three Members are present, a quorum.

So the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SENSENBRENNER

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SENSENBRENNER: In the heading to section 101, strike out "AND UNFAIR IMMIGRATION-RELATED EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES" and conform the table of contents accordingly.

Strike out subsection (b) of section 101 and redesignate the succeeding subsections of section 101 accordingly.

In section 101(e), strike out "items" and insert in lieu thereof "item".

In section 101(e), insert closing quotation marks and a period after the item relating to section 274A and strike out the item relating to section 274B.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER].

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment would strike the so-called Frank anti-discrimination language—language totally unacceptable as a matter of policy and as a matter of law. This language would broaden the coverage under the current provisions of title VII, create a new protected class and create a new bureaucracy outside the EEOC for adjudication of complaints.

Immigration reform has been around, as most of us here are well aware, for quite sometime. The Frank language, on the other hand, is a relative newcomer. So new, in fact, it wasn't even offered in this committee last Congress. It's not in S. 1200 this Congress, and the only hearing has been 1 day of testimony—a joint House-Senate hearing last year.

Mr. Chairman, anyone who sat through the testimony and subsequent questioning has to come away wondering, "What are they doing, and why is this language in the bill in the first place?" More importantly, no one could answer—all things being equal, should it be against the law for an employer to prefer to hire a U.S. citizen!

The subcommittee did get some answers, though. We are asked to put into place a new precedent-setting bureaucracy and laws which would give aliens in this country greater rights and protections than citizens?

We are told sanctions might cause discrimination, yet no one has to prove sanctions cause discrimination. Rather, sanctions are being used as a scapegoat—an excuse to broaden civil rights coverage without going through title VII. In a GAO report, not one of the countries having employer sanctions indicated a problem of discrimination among citizens or legal aliens. The Rev. Theodore Hesburgh was quoted in the Washington Post last year,

• • • a combined penalty and verification system would not increase discrimination against Hispanics, calling such a contention, the most flimsy argument you find in this whole area.

Expert testimony before this subcommittee couldn't come up with one example of alienage discrimination. Several witnesses testified to the possibility of national orgin discrimination—an area already covered under title VII—but not alienage discrimination. As Paul Grossman, a witness who appeared before the subcommittee and who is both a recipient of the 1978 MALDEF Service Award and, at one time, the manager of one of the largest labor practices in the Southwest, indicated to us, he has never heard of a case of alienage discrimination; national origin discrimination, yes, but alienage discrimination, no. He indicated, too, that he does not believe the problem, if it exists, falls on the shoulders of small employers. He takes the view it is large employers of the kind covered under title VII who create the greatest abuse. National origin is not covered under title VII of the Civil Rights Act, and I believe, absent proof to the contrary, which was not forthcoming during the hearing, existing law is sufficient.

The answers the subcommittee did get during the hearing revealed flaws and problems so numerous as to defy the imagination.

It would create an entirely new protected class under Federal civil rights laws, namely noncitizens.

It would broaden coverage to all employers.

Does it cover part-time, as well as full-time employees? We don't know.

It omits the protections created over time which are contained in title VII such as occupational exceptions and prohibitions against preferences—sections 703(e) and 703(j)).

It allows different standards.

It sets the stage for conflicting precedents.

It allows private right of action.

Allows two bites from the apple—one from the EEOC and one from the special counsel this language creates.

It sets precedents where administrative law judges are not only the final arbiter, but can set attorney fees as well.

It has unrealistic and unworkable timeframes.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on and on. The proponents of this language have created more questions than they have answers. Questions that need more than 1 day's study. If sanctions do in fact cause discrimination, then the committee can and should act at a later date. Then they will be acting on fact and information, not guesses and supposition. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge that my motion to strike be adopted.

□ 1825

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute to speak in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

Basically speaking, it seems to me that if we are going to have employer sanctions, and we keep saying that that is one of the centerpiece elements of this bill, then it seems to me that in balance and in equity and perspective we ought to have in here something like the Frank amendment. Now I might have crafted it somewhat differently than the gentleman from Massachusetts has done, but essentially it says to those who are in this Nation, and those who have come here, sometimes illegally, that you have, in the event that there is discrimination applied to you or directed against you because of your ethnicity, because of your race, because of your background, that you will have some opportunity to redress that grievance.

I think if the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] to strike this entire section were to prevail our bill would become imbalanced, unfair and certainly lacking the equity that I think the underlying bill does. So I would certainly urge my colleagues to oppose the gentleman's amendment, support the committee and support the committee's language as it has been amended by the gentleman from California, and leave us a good solid bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO], the distinguished chairman of the full Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion to strike of the gentleman from Wisconsin. This amendment flies in the face of the action taken last Congress when this body approved the Frank amendment by a vote of 404 to 9.

Why did we adopt the Frank amendment? Because there has been serious concern on the part of those who fear the possibility of employment discrimination based on alienage or national origin. We wanted to allay their concerns and their fears, so we devised an amendment which would provide effective remedies in the event of discrimination.

The gentleman from California who previously offered his amendment allows a hiring preference for citizens over aliens if both are equally qualified. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] stated a while ago, that there is a balance and equity in creating sanctions then we have got and at the same time providing a remedy should discrimination occur.

To provide such a remedy we have set up the Special Counsel in the Justice Department to handle discrimination complaints.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we should defeat the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin. It would be unreasonable, to establish a program that could conceivably create a problem and not at the same time provide a remedy, and a mechanism to achieve that remedy, for individuals who have been prevented from finding gainful employment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Pending that, let me thank the gentleman in the chair, Mr. NATCHER, for presiding to this point in the way that he has. It has made the bill move very smoothly.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the antidiscrimination provision, so-called Frank amendment, which is now part of our immigration bill, and in opposition to the motion to strike.

Mr. Chairman, it has been mentioned that this provision was the result of 1 day of hearings. It seems to me at the last conference it was the subject of each day of 10 days at which time it was greatly modified from its original statement.

The interesting thing is that there were three major issues on which that conference in 1984 floundered. One was the antidiscrimination provision, second was the cap on reimbursing the States, and the third was the agriculture provision.

Now we have resolved here, and we are here tonight because we have resolved the agriculture labor provision. We saw the President and we resolved the cap provision on reimbursement, and now let us not go back and undo what we all now find acceptable in the antidiscrimination provision.

The concern that this bill might inadvertently lead to preference for aliens has been dealt with just in the last few minutes by the Lungren amendment. The antidiscrimination provision would not duplicate EEOC coverage. It would only apply where no EEOC coverage exists.

Mr. Chairman, numerous witnesses in the past Congresses have expressed their deep concern that the imposition of employer sanctions would cause extensive unemployment discrimination. Here we are addressing the employer sanction concerns that employers in our bill will be reluctant to hire certain persons because of their ethnic background. Barriers should not be placed in the path of permanent residents and other aliens who are seeking employment. It just makes no sense to admit immigrants and refugees, requiring them to work, and then not protecting them from discrimination.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote against the pending amendment which seeks to strike the antidiscriminatory provisions.

□ 1835

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me, and I stand in support of the gentleman from Wisconsin's [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] motion to strike.

I cannot disagree with anything that has been said by any of the speakers except the bottom line as to what their conclusions happen to be, from where they start to where they end up.

All of us have heard, who listen to the radio here in the Washington area, situations where employment opportunities are out there and only citizens need to apply. I think we have to be very cautious of what we are doing here.

There are some sensitive areas of employment in which employers may very well be very wise to limit their employed staff to citizens of the United States.

Now I do not believe, with the Frank amendment in this bill that employers could any longer do that. There is a certain amount of loyalty that goes with being an American citizen or is expected of us as American citizens that do not apply to aliens.

Now if that question can be clarified and if someone were to refute that particular question, then perhaps I could see this from a different standpoint; but I think it is very important, very important that we look at the entire sphere of what we are doing here and if some employer were to limit its employed staff or certain functions of its employed staff to American citizens, then I think they would be in violation of the Frank amendment.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, if you had requirements that you have to have citizens imposed by some State law or some Federal contract, you would be OK. The amendment makes provision for that.

Second, as the gentleman from California's amendment makes clear, if you decide that in this case or that case, there are several qualified people, you prefer the citizen, that is okay.

Third, the burden of proof is on those who would charge discrimination.

Fourth, and I would just like, if the gentleman would let me, to state: This does not apply to all aliens. It only applies to those who are not yet eligible for citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] has expired.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very central point. We have people to whom we are going to offer the status of legalization. If the point comes at which they have lived in this country long enough to be citizens and choose not to apply for citizenship, then they do not get this protection. This protection only applies to those who have evinced an interest in being citizens, we hope, and have not yet reached that point. We are particularly worried about those who would accept the legalization in that status.

To answer the gentleman's question, if you are in an area—not that it is a policy "I'm not going to hire anybody for any job in my place who's not a citizen," yes, then you would have a problem.

Our view is, if people are going to be here legally, they ought to be allowed to work. We do not want to say that there is this whole class that can only get welfare.

We want to encourage people to take legal status; we do not want people hiding in the shadows. So we want people to be able to say that they will be hired on their merits.

An American citizen can be preferred, and they only get the protection of this up to the point when they can become citizens. If they choose not to become citizens, no protection.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be resisted; it should be defeated. It is clear that there will be a certain amount of discrimination if employer sanctions are made a part of the law.

I know that because we have had some discrimination in California from employers who thought that the immigration law had been put in place, and there were quite a number of complaints from Hispanics, in particular, who were being discriminated against.

So I think that very definitely we should vote no on this amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, this Nation if anything was founded on the basic principle of equity, that we would not discriminate, and that we would have no second class citizens in our society.

The fact that we now are implementing sanctions does raise the real and legitimate concern about discrimination based on national origin and alienage.

We do have laws in place that provide protections, on race, discrimination based on creed, national origin and others. There is a gap here at the present time. The gap relates to discrimination based on national origin for a certain number of employees, and also on the basis of alienage.

The Frank amendment tries to provide a correction for that. Surely it is in the best tradition of our society to provide equal protection for all and not to have second class citizens in our society.

I urge you to vote against this amendment.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. STRANG].

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Sensenbrenner amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of our time to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment destroys the balance that many people have tried to create in the proposal that is before us today.

We are prohibiting the hiring of undocumented workers through this bill. At the same time, we have made a decision to carefully craft a legalization program. Now, if this amendment were to pass, we are to say that four categories of people, and only four categories of people, permanent resident aliens, newly legalized aliens, refugees, and asylees; not people here on student visas, not people here on tourist visas, not any of the many other classes of aliens who are in this country legally, but only those four clases will have their protection against the ability to discriminate. They have no help from the Government in the right to obtain a job, to get a promotion, to get equal pay.

What hypocrisy to offer them the status in one hand and then to pull away any protection for their rights. Do we want these people to be busboys and dishwashers and have the most menial jobs and be prevented from moving up the ladder of opportunity?

I urge this body to allow this fundamental protection against alienage discrimination for intending citizens and to vote against the amendment.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, for the 8 years that I have been honored to serve in this body, I have served on the Civil and Constitutional Rights Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. During that period of time, I have gotten a feel for civil rights laws, and have demonstrated my commitment to stringent enforcement of civil rights laws.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission enforces title VII of the civil rights laws, and this proposal of Mr. Frank does not propose to add alienage to the list of protected classes enforced by the EEOC, but rather creates a separate class and a separate bureaucracy within the Justice Department.

Furthermore, the coverage of the EEOC only applies to employers of 15 or more; whereas the coverage of the Frank language is universal in its scope.

Now what that means is that an employer of less than 15 people, not subject to the EEOC requirements against discrimination based on race, creed, color, national origin or sex is subject to these requirements proposed in the language of the Frank amendment.

Frankly, that is unfair, and that is unequal enforcement of the civil rights laws, and in addition creates a bureaucracy to do the job that the EEOC is already doing adequately and admirably.

I would like to report to the membership that becuase of this, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has come out in support of my amendment, and I received a letter from Albert Bourland, the vice president of congressional relations, that I would like to read, in part:

It says:

> The U.S. Chamber of Commerce will oppose any immigration reform legislation which:
> Gives aliens new federal job discrimination protections not available to U.S. citizens;
> Creates a new federal bureaucracy within the Justice Department which would result in duplicative investigations, enforcement and efforts;
> Bars employers from hiring only U.S. citizens; and
> Makes small employers, currently exempt from the requirements of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, subject to laws granting new rights for non-citizens.
>
> The Sensenbrenner Amendment would delete these provisions from H.R. 3810, and the Chamber wholeheartedly supports your amendment.

□ 1845

Let us cast a vote for equal treatment under the laws in the civil rights area; let us cast a vote to make uniform the coverage of civil rights laws. The authors of the Frank amendment did not propose to use the title VII enforcement procedure which has worked well. I think that if this argument has any merit to it at all, we should have gone the title VII route rather than creating a new bureaucracy.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge the membership to vote for the motion to strike so we will not have unequal enforcement of the civil rights laws.

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Sensenbrenner amendment which would eliminate the protections against employment discrimination included in this bill.

The potential for employment discrimination under the employment sanctions is great and the consequences of such discrimination are serious. The demonstrated tendency of businesses to play it safe while hiring could jeopardize the employment of as many as 150,000 Hispanic jobseekers every week. Many will minimize the potential for discrimination as a result of employment sanctions; however, the consequence of discrimination is the violation of a fundamental right of all Americans, including Hispanic Americans—the right to work.

Our Declaration of Independence states what is today accepted as a universal human right, the inalienable right to the pursuit of happiness. Employment discrimination would have the effect of denying Americans, especially Hispanic Americans, their inalienable right to the pursuit of happiness. The Frank antidiscrimination provisions included in this bill protect that right. The seriousness of the possibility of employer sanctions threatening such basic right as the right to work requires that we go to all possible lengths to protect that right.

My colleagues, if you believe that protecting the right of Americans to work is worthwhile, vote against the Sensenbrenner amendment which would do away with this fundamental protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MOORHEAD

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer and amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORHEAD: At the end of section 111, insert the following new subsection:

(g) INCREASE IN BORDER PATROL.—There are authorized to be appropriated, for each of fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, such additional sums as may be necessary to provide for an increase in the border patrol personnel of the Immigration and Naturalization Service so that the average level of such personnel in each such fiscal year is 50 percent higher than such level in fiscal year 1986.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD].

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] and I are offering provides a 50-percent increase in the number of Border Patrol personnel. Under my amendment, the Border Patrol would be able to hire up to 50 percent more personnel and agents over the fiscal years 1987 to 1989.

At the present time, there are a total of about 3,800 people on the Border Patrol. This amendment would permit the employment of about 1,900 new Border Patrol agents across the borders of the United States, which is about 8,000 miles. Of that number, about 1,900 are on the border of our neighbor to the south, Mexico. There are only about 800 agents on the border at any one time, so that means if all of the agents we had were on the border to the south, there would be only one agent for every 2.4 miles. Is it any wonder that there are millions of people crossing the border each and every year illegally?

Our borders have never been more greatly tested than they are at the present time. There are people coming from 42 different nations. They are not all our neighbors to the south, they come from everywhere around the world, and they come seeking asylum in our Nation. We have legal ways for them to come, but they do not want to wait in line.

They bring with them in many instances drugs, baby smuggling, and all kinds of criminal activities that are caused by this problem. In fact, many of the people coming across the border become victims themselves, so the courts of the United States are tremendously clogged.

In Los Angeles County alone, there is a cost to the taxpayers of nearly $300 million a year. The cost of my amendment for the first year would be about $60 million, but the benefits would be 10 or 15 times that much. We need to do something besides the provisions that we have in this legislation if we truly want to stop illegal aliens from crossing the border and coming into our country.

It will be some time before the benefits of employer sanctions ever take hold. There are many people who cross the border just so that their children can be born in hospitals in the United States and they become citizens down the line when they become of age.

In Los Angeles County alone, over 80 percent of all the children born in the publicly supported hospitals are born of illegal aliens. This is a very severe problem for our State and for all of the States bordering on the border, and for many others that do not.

□ 1910

I believe that it is essential that we take this positive step and we protect the people in our Border Patrol from the deaths they have suffered, from the victims that they have become because they are such a long, thin line that they really cannot protect themselves. It is a war zone down in Tijuana and in other cities on the Mexican border.

Let us protect our Border Patrol by at least giving them the manpower to do their job.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, let me first commend my friend from California, Mr. MOORHEAD and his associate, Mr. DREIER, for having very strong and continuing interest in the welfare of the Immigration Service and specifically the Border Patrol.

Let me just say that I do not oppose the gentleman's amendment. I would like to refresh the memory of the House and to recite for them the fact that our subcommittee and the Committee on Judiciary and the Committee on Appropriations that deals with this subject have collectively not been inadvertent to the needs of the Immigration Service.

I wish to say that there is an annual appropriation of something over $600 million to the Immigration Service which we have over the years authorized and increased. The bill before us, exclusive of the gentleman's proposed amendment, would in fiscal year 1986 authorize $422 million for the Immigration Service. In fiscal year 1987 it would authorize $419 million. So a total of over $800 million for improving Immigration Service activities.

Breaking it down and arraying this money based upon how the Immigration Service currently arrays its money between services and enforcement, my calculations are that we would have $184 million in fiscal year 1986 and another $184 million in fiscal year 1987 devoted to enforcement. A large amount of that, $164 million of it, involved in Border Patrol. Another $20 million in enforcement activities such as investigation.

My point is that the Committee on Immigration and the Committee on Judiciary has not been inattentive and we have not been unmindful of the problems of the Immigration Service and I am proud of my tenure on the committee and my stewardship, I think, has seen a very significant increase in money in the Immigration Service.

My only question is that I have some question about whether the capacity of Glenco, the facility where the Immigration agents are trained and recruited is really large enough to accommodate all these additional men and women.

I do not oppose the gentleman's amendment. I just simply think we have done a good job on our own which I think would be sufficient without the gentleman's amendment. I question whether the capacity to recruit and train is there if this amendment is agreed to. I will not oppose the gentleman's amendment, because it comes from his heart and it comes from that part of the country where, of course, the whole question of illegal entry is a significant problem.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege for me to join with my friend from Glendale as the cosponsor of this amendment. I also would like to compliment the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee for doing what certainly is a very good job on this issue and focusing attention on it.

I am very pleased that he is not opposing the amendment, and I would simply like to make a couple of important points that relate to this issue.

This is an immigration reform bill, but it has become more than that with this amendment. This amendment makes it an antiterrorism bill and an antidrug bill. We have got to realize that while the subcommittee and the full committee have authorized and appropriated certainly an increase, we over the past 5 years have seen a doubling of the flow of illegals across the border.

Over that 5-year period, the committee has actually increased by one-third the total that has been appropriated. While that is certainly a step in the right direction, I do believe that it is not enough.

Mr. Chairman, here in the Capitol we have 1,170 Capitol Police. Unfortunately, along that 2,000-mile border between Mexico and the United States, there are a total of 2,849 agents. I believe that it is critically important if we are to not only address the immigration issue but stem the flow of drugs and turn the corner on this tremendous problem and the threat of terrorism that we do bring about this increase.

Mr. MOORHEAD has appropriately pointed out the tremendous cost that is now imposed on the county of Los Angeles and throughout the country and I do believe that this is a very good amendment and urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge my colleagues to support this amendment to H.R. 3810 offered jointly by Mr. MOORHEAD and myself. Our amendment, which has been introduced separately as H.R. 5385, would authorize a 50 percent increase in Border Patrol above and beyond the provisions already included in the text of H.R. 3810.

As Members with districts so close to the Mexican border, the steady flow of immigrants has affected our area far more seriously and directly than most. Time and again we have heard the facts and figures of how serious the immigration emergency is. And time and again we will continue to hear that apprehensions are up from over 1.1 million in 1985 to a projected 1.8 million this year. And we will further hear that for everyone apprehended two or three get away. Unfortunately, these figures tend to become incomprehensible numbers to some. But in Los Angeles County we are measuring these figures in more immediate and meaningful terms.

Los Angeles is home to more than 1½ million of these illegal citizens and the legalized children which they have produced. Our local tax bill for providing these individuals social services comes to $200 million annually with the county department of health services alone spending $115 million annually on health care for the more than 600 illegal aliens who occupy beds in our county hospitals. A total of 48,000 children whose mothers are illegal aliens receive $8 million a month from county taxpayers. None of these moneys are reimbursed by the State or Federal Government but are in addition to the Federal funds provided.

Though I generally support H.R. 3810's efforts to address the problem of our open borders, there remains an urgent need within the bill to supplement the ability of the Border Patrol to intercept illegals by increasing the number of agents employed on our southern boundary. Our recent enhancement package of the enforcement apparatus has been successfully implemented according to INS. However, the need and demand for a still greater interdiction effort is clear. The apprehension rate and flow of illegals over the United States-Mexico border has far exceeded the expectations of the enhancement package.

While apprehensions have doubled over the last 5 years, the number of Border Patrol agents have increased by less than one-third during the same period. This year alone, apprehensions are expected to exceed 1.7 million illegals captured. The restrictions which would otherwise be imposed by H.R. 3810 are graduated measures which will take time to implement. The amendment I am offering would provide for immediate increases for the Border Patrol. Additionally my amendment would help to address the growing problem of drug smuggling and threat of terrorism along this border. During 1985, the Border Patrol made 885 narcotic seizures which were valued in excess of $119 million. It is estimated these seizures will exceed 1,200 this year. It is unlikely employer sanctions will do much to curb the drug traffic or terrorists.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in order to provide immediate relief from the onslaught of illegal immigration, I urge my colleagues to approve this amendment and beef up our Border Patrol.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Did I hear the gentleman correctly that there are over 1,100 Capitol Police in this small area?

Mr. DREIER of California. I would say to the gentleman the number is 1,170 Capitol Police.

Mr. THOMAS of California. And that there are only about double that amount on the 2,000-mile border between the United States of Mexico.

Mr. DREIER of California. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Are those figures actually correct; you have double checked them?

Mr. DREIER of California. They were provide to me by staff.

Mr. THOMAS of California. That is amazing.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's statitstics are very revealing indeed and it certainly points up the need for this amendment.

While this bill, hopefully, will help with the problem of illegal immigration, I do not think it is going to do the whole problem. I think it is especially important that we show that we are going to do what is necessary to control our borders.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman is absolutely right. It is in no way a panacea, but at least it is a step in the direction to which we are referring.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PACKARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, it will take 3 years for the effects of this bill, which I totally support, to really change the atmosphere in my district in southern California and in San Diego County.

During that 3 years, our neighbors and our fields and our people are still going to be harassed with the problems we now struggle with. They are caling for increased enforcement from the INS, particularly during the early part when this bill will have little effect and then when the effect comes in, obviously we will not need that much enforcement.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman for his support of the amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me make one last mention. Of course, I think we have got a good amendment here, basically. I do recall a time not too distant when many Members voted for an across-the-board cut in the appropriations for State and Justice, including this particular function of Immigration Service. I would say that it is easy to vote for an authorization, frankly, because money is not connected to it.

I hope that we have the same devotion to improving the plight of the Immigration Service and dealing with immigration reform in the broadest of bases when the next appropriation bill comes out of my friend's committee.

Mr. DREIER of California. If the gentleman will yield, I would simply like to say to the gentleman that I appreciate his going from not opposing the amendment to saying that now it is a good amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I said pretty good.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I will add to BILL THOMAS' astonishment one additional fact. We have more law enforcement presence in this tiny, 104 acres in Capitol Hill at any one time than we have on that entire southwest border.

Mr. DREIER of California. If the gentleman will yield, I have the number here. It is a total of 5,000 right here in the District of Columbia and 2,849 on the border.

Mr. SCHEUER. I am talking just about Capitol Hill. We have more law enforcement in the Capitol Police at any one time than we have on our entire southwest border.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is essential for our national health and our survival as a nation we know now.

□ 1920

Our borders are out of control. Senator SIMPSON has said it. Many Members of this House have said it. They are leaking like a sieve. We have 2 million illegal immigrants, more or less, coming in every year, in addition to the 6 or 12 million that we have now.

If you look at the demographic statistics, things are going to get much worse, not better, in the years to come, simply because the gap in living standards, the gap in job availability, is going to get much worse.

All of Latin America at the present time needs 4 million additional jobs each year just to stay even with themselves at the pitiful, pathetic levels of roughly 50 percent unemployment and underemployment.

The United States, with an economy 5 times, more than 5 times that of all of Latin America, has never produced more than roughly 3 to 3¼ million jobs. Generally it has been between 2 and 3 million jobs a year.

So Latin America would have to do 10 times as well as they are doing now to provide the jobs that they need. When they do not have jobs, where do they go? They go north, Mr. Chairman.

Remember, 40 percent of the illegal immigrants who come across the American border with Mexico are not Mexicans; they are Latin Americans who simply transit Mexico looking for jobs.

Mr. Chairman, at any given time no more than 800 Border Patrol agents are guarding our 8,000 miles of international borders.

Despite the best efforts of these overworked agents, illegal aliens are flowing across our borders—particularly our southwest border with Mexico—at an overwhelming and alarming rate.

To put it bluntly, our borders are a sieve. We have lost control of our borders.

One of the basic tenets of a nation's sovereignty is a secure border.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that given the hemorrhaging that is occurring on our southern border, one could question our Nation's sovereignty.

And the tidal wave of immigrants flowing across our borders—an estimated 2 million this year on top of the 6 to 12 million who are here already—will continue to grow as long as a vast income gap remains between our Nation and those of Latin America.

Consider that Latin America must create 4 million new jobs in each remaining year of this century just to maintain the region's current low rate of employment and underemployment.

It is unlikely that this will occur—given that the U.S. economy, which is 5½ times larger than Latin America's, has never created more than 3.2 million jobs in any one year—even during the halcyon years of the 1970's.

For these reasons I rise in support of the Moorhead amendment to increase the resources for the Border Patrol by 50 percent through fiscal year 1989.

I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

An increase in funding for the Border Patrol is a first step toward regaining control over our borders, but much more needs to be done.

I regret that the House will not have the opportunity to consider the triggered amnesty provision that I proposed along with my colleagues from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and Florida [Mr. SHAW].

This provision would have required a Presidential Commission to determine that our borders were reasonably secured before amnesty for illegal aliens already residing here became effective. Such a provision would help to avoid an explosion of new illegals crossing our borders with the hope of gaining legal status under amnesty.

As written, I am afraid that amnesty will act as a stimulus to an avalanche of further illegal immigration into the United States. The triggered amnesty provision is included in the bill approved by the Senate. Unfortunately, it was amended on the Senate floor to provide that amnesty cannot be delayed for more than 3 years.

Another problem with this legislation is the agricultural guest worker provision. Regretfully, U.S. immigration policy in the past has been driven by agricultural interests and the bill before us today perpetuates that interest and its demand for cheap unskilled labor.

I hope that the guest worker controversy can be worked out in a positive fashion in conference.

Despite these flaws, I intend to support this bill, although I do so reluctantly. This bill is far from a perfect solution, but we've witnessed the price of inaction and that price has grown far too high.

We all are familiar with the societal costs of a porous border: Higher crime rates; increased drug smuggling; undue pressures on our social services; and the very real threat of terrorist penetration.

I view this legislation as a first step toward developing comprehensive immigration reform; immigration reform that truly addresses the need to tighten up our borders.

Experience shows that it probably will take several pieces of legislation to accomplish the goal of a secure border.

Mr. Chairman, when I speak of a secure border, I don't mean a Berlin Wall. I don't support such a barrier and neither do the American people. What is needed is something in between the current deplorable state of our open border and an armed camp.

We need to incorporate more high technology such as remote sensing units and other apparatus to give our Border Patrol personnel the wherewithal to halt the ever-growing numbers seeking freedom and a better way of life in our great Nation.

Taken as a whole, this bill represents our only chance at this time to enact meaningful changes in our outdated immigration laws. In light of the current immigration crisis, we, as responsible Representatives of the American people, must act.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a fairly unanimous view on the fact that the gentleman's amendment is a good statement for the House to be making. Let me point out that this is also amendment No. 7, out of 14. I think we are moving along at a good rate, about 45 minutes ahead of where I thought we were going to be at this juncture.

I do recommend that we accept this amendment and move on. There are a couple more we could accept. There are several that will be controversial, but since everybody is in favor of this one, I hope it can be accepted.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Moorhead amendment. It is one of the most important amendments in the immigration reform package.

We must regain control of our borders. The Border Patrol agents we currently have are doing all they can to apprehend the thousands of illegal immigrants streaming into our country, but quite honestly, they are being overwhelmed.

The Moorhead amendment, if adopted, would allow the Border Patrol force to be substantially increased in size. This is vital, if we are going to actually slow, and hopefully stop, the influx of illegal immigrants into the United States. I urge my colleagues to vote yes with me and adopt the Moorhead amendment.

Mr. REID. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. There has been much talk recently of using the military to protect our borders. This is not the solution. Vigilante groups who cannot wait for something to be done have taken matters into their own hands and gone to the border themselves. This is definitely not the answer.

However, I share the sentiments of those who see the obvious solution to stopping illegal immigration: we need to put more people on the border to physically stop people from crossing into the United States. It's that simple. We already have the border patrol established for this purpose, but they are sadly undermanned. We currently have one border patrol agent for every four miles of our Southern border. We now expect one border patrol agent to stop a steady flow of aliens along the length of a distance of 70 football fields. That's a difficult task for ten men, let alone one.

Some argue that this will cost money. In fact, this amendment will save money in the long run. We pay millions and millions of dollars every year to house, feed, educate and hospitalize undocumented aliens and their families. I am told 80 percent of all children born in Los Angeles County public hospitals are born to illegal alien mothers—80 percent!

As a member of the Congressional Border Caucus, I am concerned that the border zone is becoming a chaotic no-man's land, a forboding area for the ordinary people who live there, but a fertile breeding ground for drug smugglers and criminals. Sure there are other ways to combat the crisis, and this bill includes many of them. Yet most of these solutions would not be necessary today if we had long ago treated the root cause and not the symptoms of the problem. I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment to increase the border patrol by 50 percent. It's very simple: if we want to solve this problem, we need to patrol our borders, and to patrol our borders we need an adequate border patrol.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DE LA GARZA

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DE LA GARZA: At the end of Part B of title I, insert the following new section (and insert a corresponding item in the table of contents):

SEC. 116. RESTRICTING WARRANTLESS ENTRY IN THE CASE OF OUTDOOR AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

Section 287 (8 U.S.C. 1357) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section other than paragraph (3) of subsection (a), an officer or employee of the Service may not enter without the consent of the owner (or agent thereof) or a properly executed warrant onto the premises of a farm or other outdoor agricultural operation for the purpose of interrogating a person believed to be an alien as to the person's right to be or to remain in the United States.".

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the Committee on Agriculture is designed to provide the protections of the fourth amendment to the Constitution to agricultural employers and employees.

Since Hester v. United States (265 U.S. 57), the Supreme Court has reiterated, on numerous occasions, the doctrine that there is no constitutional protection against search and seizure in an open field. Immigration and Naturalization Service current policy treats agricultural lands as open fields. Consequently, there is now no requirement that INS enforcement officers obtain a search warrant prior to entering a farm or ranch. Thus, there is a double standard currently imposed on the business of agriculture that is not applicable to other types of businesses.

The protections of the fourth amendment provide a basic right of people to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures. Such constitutional protections are applicable to persons conducting businesses in office buildings and it is not apparent why persons conducting businesses in fields are any less deserving of this basic constitutional benefit.

The committee amendment merely requires that an INS enforcement officer may not enter an outdoor agricultural operation for the purpose of questioning an alien without the consent of the owner or without a search warrant. Let me point out specifically what the amendment does not do: It does not require a warrant in other cases relating to the arrest of an alien who appears to be in violation of the Immigration and Nationality Act and is likely to escape before a warrant can be obtained; it does not address warrantless entry to apprehend those workers committing a felony; nor would the committee amendment prevent INS officers from entering property within 25 miles of our national borders.

This amendment is particularly important to the agricultural community because it will ensure that, in the future, unlike the past, farming operations will not be disrupted by broad-scale, random raids. Work stoppages are very costly to the farmer, especially when crops need harvesting in a timely manner. Additionally, the Committee on Agriculture has learned of numerous cases in which agricultural employers and employees have been unduly harassed by INS enforcers to the extent that some workers and, in some instances their children, have had their lives jeopardized.

Based on data available to the U.S. Department of Labor, it is estimated that most of the 2 to 5 million undocumented aliens in this country are in the labor market. Since, according to the Attorney General, only 15 percent of these aliens work in agriculture, it is obvious a majority of these aliens are employed in other businesses. Yet, agriculture is receiving the lion's share of INS raids. For example, of the 110,000 undocumented workers apprehended by the INS last year, 72 percent were employed in agriculture. It is clear to the committee that farmers and ranchers and their employees are receiving a disproportionate share of INS scrutiny and that INS is focusing its search and seizure activities in a business which is the easiest to access, the one business that requires no search warrant.

Two provisions of H.R. 3810 should deter hiring of undocumented aliens. H.R. 3810 makes it unlawful for any person or entity, including a farmer, to hire an unauthorized alien. Stiff penalties are imposed for each alien hired in violation of the act. Furthermore, the employer sanctions provisions of H.R. 3810 require that employers, including farmers, complete certain paperwork requirements verifying that their employees are eligible to work in the United States. Employers, including farmers, are subjected to severe penalties for each individual involved if they violate this section of the bill. Employers, including farmers, are required to retain these verification forms which are to be made available to the INS for such period as the Attorney General specifies in regulations.

The Committee on Agriculture feels very strongly that these provisions, coupled with the bill's authorized increase in the border patrol and other INS enforcement activities to prevent the illegal entry of illegal aliens into the United States, eliminates the need for warrantless entry on agricultural lands in the future.

The employer sanctions provisions were designed to ensure that employers of all businesses be treated equally if they employ undocumented workers. Likewise, the Committee on Agriculture amendment would treat equally the INS search warrant requirement for the business of agriculture as well as all other types of businesses.

The House has previously indicated its desire to equate the search warrant provisions to all businesses. On June 13, 1984, the House, in considering H.R. 1510, upheld a Judiciary Committee amendment restricting warrantless entry on agricultural lands. The vote to strike that amendment was rejected by a substantial margin of 133 to 285. Further, the Committee on Agriculture amendment is identical to that approved by the House-Senate conferees in the last Congress, and it is also identical to that contained in H.R. 3810 as introduced by Chairman RODINO of the House Judiciary Committee.

The amendment is supported by farm, civil liberties, and other organizations including the National Council of Churches. I strongly urge its support by the House.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI], the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I rise in support of the gentleman's amendment. I think it makes a very healthy change in the bill.

I know that it seems to me logical and symmetrical to say that if you have a search warrant to enter some kind of a factory or some sort of a shop, that there ought to be a search warrant required before someone would enter somebody's clothes, somebody's fields. I think that this would be a suitable addition, and I support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER].

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, the effect of adopting this amendment is to completely exempt agriculture from employer sanctions, because requiring a warrant for the Immigration Service to go into an open field will be so cumbersome and so procedurally difficult that there will be no open-field arrests of illegal aliens who are working in the fields.

Very frankly, I think that this bill is very generous to agriculture. With the Schumer provisions, the streamlined H-2 provisions, I do not think with these two provisions we ought to have this open field search warrant provision.

Let us look at how this would work out practically. If the Immigration and Naturalization Service suspected that there were illegal aliens working in the field, they would have to go get a warrant from the United States magistrate. To do that, they would have to find out who the owner or the lessees of the field were. That would require a title search, and in States were leases are not recorded, it would be practically impossible.

But even if they did get the field particularly described and the owner's name put on the warrant, when the Immigration Service people show up, the illegal aliens could simply scamper across the fields to the next adjoining plot of land, which was not covered by the warrant, and then the INS would be thwarted.

Finally, there are humanitarian aspects to this. The border patrol has indicated that in the Yuma, AZ, District, in the desert where it gets cold at night, there were several illegal aliens that were picked up who were lost in the desert. With the search warrant provision, they would not be able to go into the desert to find these illegal aliens and apprehend them and probably save their lives.

The Committee on the Judiciary, by an overwhelming vote, struck the search warrant provision from the Rodino bill, and it is one of the few instances where the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] and I teamed up on the same side. I think there are civil libertarian implications to this, as well as the fact that we should not be exempting agriculture effectively from employer sanctions.

I would urge this amendment be defeated.

Well, if we leave this section in the bill, we won't need the program because the net effect will be to exempt agriculture from employer sanctions because a search warrant must be obtained before INS could enter a field. Employers will be able to hide in "plain view" aliens who are unlawfully in the United States.

The Detroit sector of the Border Patrol covers the States of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois with a grand total of 18 agents. How are they going to effectively run a check, obtain a warrant, and execute the warrant say in southern Illinois or Ohio in a timely and cost effective manner? They aren't and we all know it. So it's no wonder agriculture wants this section left in the bill.

Who else might want this section to remain? Certainly smugglers would—and those who profit from their illegal activities would. How often have we heard or read about literally tons of illegal drugs smuggled across our borders in planes? Quite frankly, I don't know of a single instance where the pilot has radioed ahead to notify the Border Patrol which small air strip or pasture they would be landing in and how long they will be there so the Border Patrol could obtain a warrant. And perish the thought if this happens outside of "normal" business hours. Because, in certain areas, the magistrates aren't available after hours or on weekends, others will not issue warrants by phone, while some magistrates are up to 200 miles apart.

An open field is not the same as an enclosed building with limited exits. If a raid is performed in a building, the exits can be monitored to apprehend any who might try to escape. How do you monitor an open field, particularly when the next field over is owned by someone else who wouldn't be covered by the newly obtained warrant? Do we tell them, "Wait there until I get a new warrant?"

The administration of this section would be a nightmare. Leasing and subleasing of agriculture lands is a common practice. The Border Patrol doesn't have the manpower or resources to spend the time necessary to track owners or agents to obtain a warrant. With fewer Border Patrol agents than Capitol Hill Police, why are we doing everything in our power to make their jobs more difficult? As recently as 1984, the Supreme Court ruled that the requirement for a search warrant does not apply to open fields. Why are we trying to change that?

Then there is the human element. How many lives is this requirement for a search warrant going to cost? There is a 25 mile free zone along the border where the warrant provision will not apply. If you were a coyote smuggling illegals into the United States, or a terrorist sneaking in to avoid detection, once you hit that 25 mile line, you know you'd be home free, because after that the authorities would need a warrant to apprehend you. I don't have any doubts that a terrorist would be physically fit to cover 25 miles in the night. But, what about the people who pay a coyote? Is the coyote who has been already been paid going to slow down his entire group and risk capture if one or two can't keep up? Or is he going to keep up the pace and abandon the stragglers? Saying the requirement could cost lives is not an exaggeration. As an example, every year the Yuma, Ar sector is called upon to track people stranded in the desert where the temperatures can reach 125–130 degrees. How long can someone survive those conditions? And we, in effect, are telling the Border Patrol, "Get a warrant first." As the handout shows, they are not always successful. However, failure to adopt my amendment will cut their rescue ratio down dramatically. I don't want that on my conscience, do you?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment that I offered in the Committee on Agriculture and that was approved by the Committee on Agriculture, because it requires, in line with the fourth amendment protections in the Constitution, that a warrant be provided before the INS enter an agricultural operation.

The provision was part of the bill that was developed 2 years ago in the House. It was agreed to in the conference, and it was part of the bill that was originally introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

The provision is supported by a broad coalition of farm groups, labor groups and, again, civil rights groups that consider this provision to be an important one. Why? Why? Because it is right. It is right legally because we do have a fourth amendment that prohibits the unlawful search and seizures.

That right applies to businesses; it applies to industries; it applies to homes; it applies to citizens. There is one area it does not apply to, to American farmers and American farms.

Surely that double standard ought to be ended.

Second, it is right from an enforcement point of view. We are now applying sanctions to farmers. This bill will apply sanctions to farmers. Therefore, they will be obligated to follow the law with regard to the hiring of undocumented. Surely we ought to require the INS to establish probable cause if they are going to enter property and seek out a search warrant based on probable cause.

The reality is that today when they conduct a raid, they conduct it based on probable cause because they know that that is where they are going and that is where undocumented aliens are known to be. So there is nothing that we are applying here that is very different in terms of probable-cause requirements on the part of the INS.

Last, it is right from a human point of view. Right now, they conduct random raids at whim. It is not only disruptive in terms of the farm operations; it jeopardizes the lives of the workers.

Only a few weeks ago, a worker in my area, during a raid, died as a result of an effort to escape that raid.

□ 1930

There is no reason why we should not require a search warrant in these operations. It is right legally. It is right from an enforcement point of view and it is right from a human point of view. Get rid of this double standard. Support this amendment.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of this bill, a farmer and all other employers will be able to get all the help they need legally and there will be no reason for them to hire illegal aliens under the provisions of this bill.

Therefore, the search and seizure requirements should be no different than they are for homes or any other entity.

I totally wish to associate myself with the gentleman in the well in support of the amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment.

I would like to point out to my colleagues that this will not prevent any law enforcement agency from entering property within 25 miles of the border.

It would not prevent legitimate hot pursuit of persons that they believe are violating the law and they have the right to inquire as to their status; but what it does do is protect the integrity of a very important industry in the State of California, and I suspect other States in the Union, for those business people who have invested in some cases a lot of their net capital worth in an annual crop that comes due in the form of ripening and eating harvest in one particular season in a very narrow window of time.

The data indicates very clearly that the percentage of the time of law enforcement in making arrests in open fields in agriculture is far greater than the percentage of time of INS agents arresting or inquiring in factories.

Now, that just is not right. It is what you might call cherry picking.

Open fields are entitled, the business of an agricultural interest in an open field is entitled to the protection of our law against unreasonable searches and seizures, and that is all this amendment does.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Los Angeles, CA.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman if he would support a good-faith exception to the search warrant requirement?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Good-faith exception, is the gentleman offering that?

Mr. BERMAN. No; I just was wondering what the gentleman's position was on the issue.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would care to offer it, if it is in order, we might consider it.

People who are in the argicultural business in my county, in Orange County, are involved in the strawberry business and they come to me and tell me that in those instances where their crops are ripening and needs to be harvested, they are being interfered with by the INS coming into their fields, and this would merely require a search warrant.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, this answers a very important question. When we were debating the drug bill, some people wanted to know where were all the civil libertarians? Well, it turns out they were in the open fields trying to protect the poor farmers against raids of all these terrible people.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is defeated.

A search warrant is to protect your legitimate interest in privacy. There are things which people have a right to do in this country, in my judgment, for which they can expect privacy; but I think we ought to advise them not to do it in open fields. At least if they are going to do it in open fields, they ought not to be surprised if their privacy is not fully there.

We have dealt with the Immigration Service here and they say this is a very serious problem in their ability to enforce immigration laws, drug laws, laws against exploitation of individuals.

Privacy means if you have got a confined space that people do not break in on it.

The Supreme Court has recently ruled, by the way, that this search warrant is not required in these kinds of circumstances. If this amendment passes and we require a search warrant here, understand that these agricultural growers will be the only people in America entitled to search warrant protection in this area. Other people who have backyards and homes, they will not be covered.

We are talking here about an essential law enforcement tool.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman is not correct.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield me some of his time, I will be glad to respond.

The Supreme Court recently said that you do not have a search warrant requirement in other areas; so if you are doing it just to the agricultural growers, people do not have it in their backyards and elsewhere.

The gentleman tells me this one is across the board. It is a different one than in the committee, and I apologize.

The question remains, however, whether the important concept of protecting privacy is one that makes sense in open fields. What you are talking about is making it virtually impossible to enforce the law against the hiring and exploitation of illegals, because if you have got to go and get the search warrant, by the time you show up in the open fields, the law of violation will not be there.

We are not talking about rummaging through people's homes. We are not talking about breaking into their offices. We are talking about their wide open fields and if they have a privacy right there, it is a brand new right to be private out in the open.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PACKARD. One of the primary industries in my area, in coastal San Diego County, is the glass house flower industry, which is in an enclosed area. That would be considered under this bill as an open field. They are right within the neighborhoods of our homes, and what would you do?

Mr. FRANK. I would say to the gentleman that people who live in glass houses should not break laws.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Texas.

It seems almost incredible to me that we have to have an amendment on this floor to insert in this bill a basic American right, and that is the protection from unreasonable and warrantless search of private property by the Border Patrol.

In no way will this amendment hamper the Border Patrol in the legitimate pursuit of its business. It merely requires that before they come on to someone's farm, and that may be 5 acres, it may be 1 acre, it may be 200 acres, it may be more; it merely requires that they meet the same basic tenet of having a reason to be there and go to court and get permission to come there as they would have to go to any other workplace in this country. That is all the amendment does.

At the present time, this is not in effect and what we have got in California is a situation where the Border Patrol runs rampant with undue harrassment, causing undue work stopages, physical damage to crops, and the people who are victims and in many, many instances, have actually arrested people, detained people who are innocent, who are merely Hispanics working on a farm and were stopped because they did not happen to have proper documentation. They did not have proper documentation because they were bonifide Americans.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I think the question is today how much are we going to do for California growers? We are already going to make people citizens basically, so they will have a work force, and then they come to us and ask us to ignore the Immigration Service, to ignore our law enforcement agencies and insert into the law something that has never been there before at any time in our history and that is a requirement that an open field not be searched unless there is a warrant. Those open fields have no such protection at the present time and they have never had that kind of protection at any time in our history.

This is a major, radical step, to protect California growers. I simply ask, how far are we going to go?

Let us not get in the way of law enforcement again. Let us not get in the way of the Border Patrol and the INS. They have asked us not to do this.

I urge you to vote against this amendment. We have never offered this protection before. It is not needed and it will be a barrier to law enforcement.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time.

Let us take just a minute and think about what we are doing. We are saying that in order for the law enforcement community, the Border Patrol and other law enforcement agencies, to be able to go in open fields, they have to have a search warrant. They have to track aliens and smugglers sometimes as much as 50 miles inland. After 25 miles, this amendment would require them to go and get a search warrant. Where would they go? Sometimes they have to travel 100 miles to get a search warrant.

Do you think that the aliens and the smugglers and the dope peddlers are going to wait while you in fact go in and get a search warrant? It does not make sense.

In the first place, it would be hard to describe the property that you want to search, because they move from field to field. They would have to go into the county clerk's office and determine the location of the smugglers or the aliens, and that is not an easy task to do.

Now do you identify what parcel they are on so you can get a search warrant? You have to be specific insofar as the lands where these individuals are located.

Now, if you really want to hamstring the Border Patrol, support this amendment.

We are arresting 3,000 aliens a day. Every 20 seconds we arrest an alien. We have so many aliens in our holding tanks that we have to close down the operation every month because we do not have enough space to hold the aliens.

Thirty-two percent of our cocaine is coming across the southern border today, 32 percent.

Eighty countries are now coming across our borders. The word is out. If you want to come across into the United States, come through Mexico, because it is an open border. It is a sieve.

If you really want to make it difficult for an overburdened, overworked, understaffed Border Patrol, support this amendment. It does not make sense. It does not make sense to handcuff our law enforcement community like this amendment would do.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds, just to correct the wrong perception that I have witnessed, and I say it very respectfully, of the nature of the amendment.

If we read the amendment, we would know that it does not apply within 25 miles of the border.

If we read the amendment, we would know that it is not limited solely to California.

If we read the amendment, we would know that it is not limited solely to aliens.

I am talking about American citizens working in a field. I am talking about resident legal aliens, it is not aimed, nor is it our intent to protect illegality—we just want equality in the application of the law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time and for making his points of clarification.

Also, these warrants can be obtained by telephone, which is a very standard procedure and should continue, so it would not hamper law enforcement from doing its job.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just very briefly?

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Let me also make clear that this would allow for continuing searches and seizures when it comes to every other violation. The drug situation has been raised here. Frankly, it has distorted the issue, because the only time we require search warrants in this instance is when it involves immigration violations, and nothing else.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. That is precisely the case. I appreciate the gentleman making that point.

Let me give you these numbers. Statistics show that only 15 percent of illegal workers work in agriculture, yet currently 72 percent of the apprehensions that are made of illegal workers in the United States are in agriculture. Very clearly, this is a distortion of the protections that are provided in the laws of the United States.

Let us pass this amendment as proposed by the Agriculture Committee and provide for equity for farmworkers, as well as farmowners.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, we have been told that this amendment would not apply within 25 miles of the border. That is absolutely correct. The Border Patrol agents would have to stop when they reached the 25-mile limit and get a search warrant.

What we are talking about here is smugglers dropping off their load of illegal aliens just below border check points, for the simple reason they know where these are, and without the ability to track and apprehend these aliens, border enforcement is rendered almost useless.

With respect to the law, the current practice with regard to entry of INS officers on open lands without a warrant is supported by the U.S. Supreme Court decisions in Hester, Katz & Oliver.

I think the question is, Do we want tonight to help law enforcement? The administration opposes this amendment. The Commissioner advises me that it would drastically impair the ability of the INS to enforce our immigration laws.

Mr. Chairman, I think we need stronger rather than weaker enforcement by requiring a warrant for entry. It would vitiate the basic thrust of the Immigration and Control Act.

□ 1945

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, let me make three or four very important points, and make them quickly.

First, the search warrant which the gentleman's amendment would insert is in the bill in the other body.

Second, I believe that the theory of hot pursuit would permit in most cases the INS to pursue in the event they are on some drug or some other activity; they would not have to worry about the search warrant.

Third, the INS does need enforcement tools, and we are giving them for the first time in history employer sanctions. The most profoundly influential tool that they could have is what we are giving them in this bill. They do not now have it; they will get it if this bill passes.

Last, in the amendment that we just adopted, offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD], we have in 2 fiscal years, if the money is appropriated, doubled the size of the Border Patrol. It seems to me that that would be sufficient from the enforcement standpoint, because we do need enforcement of the immigration laws.

I submit that it is fair and equitable and proper for farmers, for agricultural interests, to have the same protection that any other U.S. citizen has, which is that the gendarmes do not come in without a search warrant.

Mr. DE LA GRAZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment that the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] and I got in the bill last time in our committee. It does not deal with people involved in any other activity except immigration. The whole point is to try to get an equal application of the law in agriculture and nonagriculture. It is not necessarily to protect agriculture, but also to make sure that if the INS is going to enforce the law, they are going to enforce the law in factories as well as on open fields.

It is to be distinguished from other activities, illegal activities taking place in open fields or anywhere else. It has nothing to do with law enforcement in other areas. I want to make that very, very clear.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the de la Garza amendment. In the Los Angeles region of INS there is a gentleman who I think exploits his opportunities through arbitrary and capricious use as Director of that region to raid employers for purposes of publicity, causing havoc to many legal workers in this country and in that particular area.

A requirement, a simple requirement that probable cause exists before the INS moves onto a particular piece of property is very justified. I urge an "aye" vote.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky accepting and agreeing with our committee. This amendment is solely to give to all citizens the right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure. That is all that we do. We ask for equity, we ask for justice, we ask for equality, and we ask for an "aye" vote on the amendment.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment. Currently, INS agents must obtain a warrant before entering any place of business with the exception of farms and ranches. This exception must be eliminated immediately—which is exactly what this amendment does. Farmers and ranchers should be afforded the same protection that every other businessman enjoys under the fourth amendment of our Constitution which guarantees protection from unreasonable searches and seizures.

Although less than 15 percent of all employed illegal aliens are currently working in agriculture, an astounding 50 percent of undocumented workers picked up by INS agents in the interior of the country are captured while working in agriculture. The lack of a search warrant requirement has produced this heavy-handed harassment on our farmers and ranchers.

Warrantless searches in agriculture are both arbitrary and discriminatory. They discriminate against ranches and farms and their employees. They severely disrupt farm and ranch operations, resulting in thousands of dollars in lost crops and man-hours annually.

This is a matter of simple equity to agricultural property owners and a matter of civil rights to both farmers and farmworkers.

The amendment has been carefully drafted so as not to interfere with enforcement in the border area nor with hot pursuit. It does not apply to nonagricultural open fields and thus is not likely to interfere in any way with illegal drug enforcement as has been charged.

These warrantless searches are the only type of gestapo-police-state activity of this kind allowed in the United States and must be stopped. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Amend paragraph (6) of section 121(b) to read as follows:

(6) UNDER HOUSING ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—Section 214 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 1436a), as amended by subsection (a)(3) of this section, if further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is authorized to pay to each public housing agency or other entity an amount equal to 100 percent of the costs incurred by the public housing agency or other entity in implementing and operating an immigration status verification system under subsection (d) (or under any alternative system for verifying immigration status with the Immigration and Naturalization Service authorized in the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1986).".

In section 201(a)(1), in section 245A(h)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, strike out "or" at the end of subparagraph (A), strike out the period at the end of subparagraph(B) and insert in lieu thereof ", or", and add at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) in the case of financial assistance subject to section 214 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1980, unless such financial assistance would be available solely on the basis of the granting of temporary or permanent resident status to an individual (or to another member of the family of such individual) under subsection (a) or (b)(1) of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] will be recognized for 5 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the amendments recognized in the rule and therefore for that reason is in order, and it is the identical amendment that the House adopted when it considered and approved by overwhelming vote H.R. 1, the Housing Authorization and Community Development Act of 1985.

It was also part of the sequential referral on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, and which was incorporated in the rule originally provided, and in the bill that had been attempted to be brought up a week ago.

What it does, it provides a recognition of the fact that we have complicated situations in which families living in—simply put, it assures a family having one member, at least, a citizen of the United States, afforded the privilege to continue the housing allowance that they have been allowed to in assisted housing programs.

In other words, what this does in the few instances that this happens but which nevertheless we are very sensitive about, provides a fair play and avoids throwing out entire families into the street with young children simply because of the presence of one member of the family who may not be a citizen of the United States.

It received an overwhelming vote in full debate during consideration of the housing authorization bill, and then it was also accepted by the Judiciary Committee in its bill, this last version, and as a sequential referral from the Housing Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I think the intent of the sponsor is sensible and his motives are humane, in attempting to unify and reunify families; but I think that there is a major flaw in this amendment which I would like to call to the attention of the House.

If I understand the thrust of the gentleman's amendment, it would provide that families living in subsidized public housing could not be required to verify their immigration status if any member of the family is a citizen of the United States, a national of the United States, or an alien resident of the United States.

I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] would agree with me that if a couple, for instance, would come into the United States illegally and falsify an application for public housing, that those people should, upon the discovery of that falsification, be at least penalized and perhaps evicted.

If the gentleman's amendment passes, the following could occur. A group, a family could come into the United States, apply for public housing, falsify their citizenship status, move into the public housing, and before they are discovered as being illegal, a child would be born to them.

That child, being born on the soil of the United States, is an American citizen. The fact that a citizen then resides in the household would preclude the housing authorities from verifying the immigration status of the parents.

So we have a situation where a falsification of an application, a clear act of fraud, has been condoned by virtue of an act of birth. I think that that goes far beyond what we need to have in this legislation; I would also advise the Congressman from Texas that this amendment passed in the housing bill by a voice vote; there was no record vote taken.

I oppose the amendment, and I would be glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is misinterpreting the thrust, the content, and the wording of the bill.

In the first place, it is against the law for an applicant who is an alien to be admitted to public housing. So that the gentleman, from the very outset in his interpretation of the amendment, clearly reveals that he does not understand the thrust of the wording of the amendment.

□ 2015

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would say to my friend and colleague from Texas I am talking about the circumstance where a person would falsify their citizenship status in order to obtain public housing. If the amendment of the gentleman passes, the public housing authorities could not evict that person because the child has been born to them who is now a citizen of the United States and lives in their household.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Will the gentleman yield back to me?

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to.

Mr. GONZALEZ. In the first place, if the applicant falsified his application, he is, ab initio, illegally occupying the housing. He cannot continue.

Mr. DURBIN. What the gentleman's amendment does is preclude the housing authority from verifying the citizenship status.

Mr. GONZALEZ. No.

Mr. DURBIN. That is what section 121 refers to.

Mr. GONZALEZ. No, sir. I recall my time in order to say the gentleman is quite incorrect. There is nothing that prevents any housing authority from verifying the status of any of its occupants.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is precisely correct. It is one of the major problems of this amendment. Let me just say what the situation is in southern California. In southern California, in Los Angeles County, 70 percent of the live births in the public hospitals are to women who are here illegally. What this amendment says is "if you happen to get across the border, if you were here illegally and had a child here," and in 70 percent of the births in Los Angeles public hospitals that is the case, "you get public housing. You can base it on that child." I do not want to penalize that child against everybody else, but the point is we have a limited amount of public housing.

In this Congress several years ago, 1981, we asked HUD to develop regulations to restrict housing to those who are eligible. Here what we are doing is turning around and saying that we really did not mean that. Here is a loophole in the law. Here is the way to get around it. This ought not to be in this bill, it ought to be in the housing bill. Take care of it in the housing bill. Let us debate it there. Let us take care of the nuances. Do not put it here, do not make this loophole.

Particularly in areas of the country where 70 percent of the live births are to women who are here illegally, what you are doing is saying, "Not only can you have your child here but we are going to provide housing for you here at taxpayers expense." There is not enough housing for Americans, there is not enough housing for legal aliens here because some of these people will be eligible for it. We are not in a total environment of infinity, we are in a finite environment.

I would say let us put taxpayer housing where we said in 1981 it ought to be.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PACKARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, in one local community hospital in my district it cost them over $100,000 of uncollectible bills for illegal women coming over the weekends to have their babies in that hospital. You can imagine what it will cost to provide them housing after they have already provided, at taxpayer expense, the cost of having the babies here.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for a "no" vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this time to at least try to put everything in its true perspective. First of all, the people who are now in public housing and without documents are there because, first of all, they needed housing. At the time they went into public housing they complied with the law as it existed at that time. It was sometime later that the Congress of the United States passed a law that asked them to leave, but that law was never implemented and that was 5 years ago.

Now, 5 years later the same housing authority tells these people now, "You must leave because you are here illegally."

In the meantime, of course, life took its course, children were born, and community roots were established. What this amendment does is actually prevent the eviction of families and senior citizens who are there at the present time. It keeps families together, and by so doing prevents all kinds of social problems.

The law that was passed by Congress 5 years ago and is now going to be put into effect will prevent an illegal alien from getting public housing in the future but keep those families that qualify if at least one member of the family is a citizen or legal resident. Under those conditions the family remains intact, but if the entire family in public housing is without documents, then that family leaves. Housing authorities throughout the country are in favor of this amendment and I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has expired.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MC COLLUM

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4-minutes.

□ 2040

Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment to strike legalization or amnesty as it is known. It is not new to most of the Members, but I think it is very clearly the most significant amendment that will be offered to this bill. Many Members can vote for a strong employer sanction immigration reform bill if they do not have to swallow amnesty.

This is a question that has been around for quite some time. It is a question the American public has great interest in. It is a question of confidence of the American public in our immigration system and immigration laws. Are we going to make that Statue of Liberty still shine forth as the beacon of hope to the rest of the world by regaining control of our borders and doing it the right way, or are we going to cause havoc with regard to the citizenry and quality of life of this country and not have the public support of our immigration laws?

If we pass the amnesty that is in the legislation and do not adopt my amendment tonight, we are going to be slapping in the face the thousands and thousands of immigrants, would-be immigration waiting in line who have waited for years to come to this country legally. We are going to be rewarding lawbreakers; people who have been here illegally who have no business becoming citizens and permanent resident aliens well before those who stood in line and are still standing in line today in country after country after country wanting to come here in the faint hope they can share in our liberty.

Another very important facet of why we should strike the amnesty provisions from this bill is the fact that if we leave them in here we are creating a reverse magnet and reversing that which we are doing in the employer sanction section of this bill. The reason why we want to make it illegal to knowingly hire an illegal alien is to cut off the magnet of the jobs attracting thousands, yea, millions of people to this country. If we leave amnesty in this bill, we are going to create another magnet that is going to draw them over here in the hope that they can get by with some fraudulent document or that we will give another opportunity down the road for amnesty if we have given it once, and it is wrong.

There are a lot of reasons why; those are just three reasons why you should vote for this amendment this gentleman is offering. But the most, the singular most important reason is because if we leave amnesty in this bill we are going to take in millions and millions of immigrants in the next 10 years beyond the capacity of our institutions to absorb and assimilate them.

The fact is, no one knows exactly how many illegals we have today in this country. But the estimates are very clearly on the higher side of the figures given. I submit to my colleagues a few years ago when we started this debate the question was do we have 3 to 5 million or do we have 10 to 12? I happen to think we have 10 to 12. Today, some people are still saying 3 to 5 million but we are taking in and we know we have for the last 5 years at least 2 million a year. I think the figure is closer to 20 million illegals in here today.

We have 280 million American citizens in this country. We take in about 500,000 immigrants legally each year. If we have 20 million illegals in this country and, as the Environmental Fund says, maybe we will have 64 percent or so of them come forward and register under the amnesty provision of this law, and the average immigrant in the 10 years after he first becomes a permanent resident brings in seven family members, as many expect will occur, that means that if there are 20 million here today, in 10 years we will have 90 million people added to the American population or by more than one-third increase the number of people in this country in 10 year. We cannot absorb and assimilate, we cannot afford to do that. We can take in 50,000 maybe we can take in a million a year, but we cannot take in 90 million.

Even if I am wrong, even it is 10 million that are here now, we are talking about taking half the number I just said when you finish the extrapolation of the figures they can bring in the way of relatives. In 10 years, on the low side, we are going to 45 million new Americans and that is wrong. We have to eliminate this amnesty provision if we are going to have any chance to regain control of our borders. If we are going to have the confidence in the American people and if we are going to get on with the control of the border that we have to have.

Now, it is not as harsh as some would say because there is the opportunity in this bill, if my amendment passes, to have the Attorney General in his discretion use the registry date that is updated in this legislation. From 1948 to January 1, 1976. That means the Attorney General, if my amendment is adopted, will still be able to let people stay in this country who have been here illegally for 10 years or more. I think that is fair and that is appropriate. It will not create a magnet. It is not unfair to a lot of other people. It does vest discretion in the Attorney General and it does not create the threat of having 45 million to 90 million more people in this country in the next 10 years that we cannot absorb and assimilate.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the McCollum amendment. Strike amnesty from this bill.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, let me say first and foremost that the adoption of the gentleman's amendment, the motion to strike legalization, would just destroy what we are attempting to achieve when we talk about trying to get together in order to support a bill that will have as its objective immigration reform.

We are not going to achieve immigration reform unless we have a balance. Employer sanctions will address the problem of the unscrupulous employer who, with impunity, hires the undocumented alien. That is going to provide the disincentive to continued undocumented migration.

On the other side, we have got to look at this problem realistically. There are perhaps 8 million undocumented persons in the country who are presently working, providing for their families, and paying taxes. There is no evidence that these people have not been decent individuals who would aspire to citizenship if they were given the opportunity.

The administration recognizes the importance of this. It recognizes the importance of having such a balance. The Attorney General has told me that time and again. The President of the United States, when he spoke with me about continuing my efforts for this bill, recognized the importance of having legalization as well as employer sanctions.

To do what the gentleman would want us to do is to destroy the balance that we have sought to achieve. I would be no part of it because, in my judgment, we cannot deport these people. We would not, I am sure, provide the money to conduct the raids. It would mean billions of dollars in order to try to deport them. Nor will we ever have the national will to conduct such raids. But that is what this amendment asks us to do.

Mr. Chairman, what we are saying is we must recognize that these people are living now in a subsociety of America. Let us give them the opportunity to show that they are decent and loyal. Give them the opportunity after a period of time, meeting the conditions and the requirements that are spelled out in the bill to become eligible for citizenship and I am sure that it will be a one-time effort and not beyond that.

Without this provision, I assure you that, in whatever way I possibly can, I will not support the effort to bring this immigration bill to conference or anywhere beyond this House.

□ 2050

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by my colleague, Congressman MCCOLLUM.

This amendment strikes at the heart of the bill.

As you well know, the State of Florida because of its location, is particularly susceptible to whatever decision this committee makes on this serious issue of legalization.

I firmly believe that to grant amnesty to those who have resided here illegally would be a tragedy.

Such a decision flies in the face of those who have waited for years to immigrate to this country legally and will make a mockery out of our immigration policy.

If this amendment is not adopted, I would have to say to individuals waiting to immigrate to this country through legal channels, "Sorry, you lose, you should have sneaked through the borders, falsified your papers and kept a low profile."

Mr. Chairman, illegal is illegal.

I pose this question to my colleagues, "Is Congress prepared to take a stand against those who deliberately violate our laws?"

Or are we going to resist the temptation to let our borders disintegrate and all semblance of control disappear?

I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the ranking minority member on the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, it has now been said by the previous speaker that this amendment strikes at the heart of the bill. Let us all agree on that. This is clearly nothing more than a killer amendment.

We have been told earlier also what we would be doing if we did not adopt this amendment. What if we do? Nothing is going to change. These people are not going to go back, the ones who have equity in the United States. They are not going to leave the country and go home.

Clearly, our Government is not going to go after them. We have neither the resources nor the desire nor the public support for a nationwide search of millions of undocumented aliens.

Mr. Chairman, this legalization, recognizes that substantial numbers of illegal aliens are here to stay and responds realistically and humanely to their plight. At the same time that we act with firmness to deter future illegal entry, we must display compassion in our treatment of those aliens who have become a part of our society. The conferral of legal status on undocumented aliens with years of U.S. residence will permit this population to come out of the shadows and contribute more to our country.

In approaching legalization, we have struck an appropriate compromise between the views of those who would eliminate the legalization provisions entirely—and those who would provide lawful permanent resident status to those who only recently entered.

Mr. Chairman, legalization is a practical response to the failure of years of Government policy that has allowed this large population to be in our midst.

Second, legalization will not encourage illegal immigration in hopes of future amnesties. There was not any reason other than the desire to work that brought these people here in the first place. They did not come here for permanent resident status and citizenship; they came because of the magnet of the job opportunities and the higher standard of living.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, legalization will have a positive effect on the U.S. labor market. As we legalize the longtermers, they will demand better treatment under the laws governing minimum and overtime wages, as well as working conditions.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the McCollum amendment for the simple fact that if we condone amnesty, we are condoning an illegal act of those illegal immigrants who have entered this country illegally.

I would point out that we let legally into this country half a million people from around the world each year, which is more than the rest of the free world combined. If we allow amnesty to be included in this immigration bill, we are, in effect, opening the door to millions and millions more people to come into the country because those who have been granted amnesty can then bring in their direct family members.

In my State of Texas, we have a high unemployment rate, but recently in Fort Worth, in my district, they rounded up 300 illegal immigrants and deported them back to Mexico. The next day, 300 American citizens applied for those jobs that the illegal immigrants had taken.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the amnesty provisions are one of the most controversial and one of the most negative parts of this immigration bill. I hope that we support the McCollum amendment and delete them.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, there are two reasons why this amendment should be rejected: First, it will kill immigration reform; and second, it is wrong and it is unfair.

It is a killer amendment, Mr. Chairman. What are we going to do if this amendment passes, send in INS to round everybody up, a massive deportation? I thought under this bill they were supposed to do something else at the border.

Legalization is just, humane and necessary, in the traditions of this country. It will eliminate the underclass that exists right now. It will allow 5, 7, 9, 3 million people to come out of bondage, people who are not criminals, as some of my colleagues have said, but have been contributing to this society, have been taking jobs that we do not want. We have been recruiting them. All of a sudden, to lower the hammer, that is wrong, and it is against the traditions of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I submit someone mentioned the Statue of Liberty. If the Statue of Liberty saw what was happening in life, you would see a tear in that Statue of Liberty if we approve this amendment.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] has 3½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, just let me simply say that as a Texan and as one of the newest Members of the Congress, I do not think the issue here is decency; I do not think the issue is working and paying taxes. I think the issue here that we should recognize is what we are about to do is legitimize millions of unconvicted criminals, and we are going to reward them with the most treasured thing a human being on the face of this globe could have, and that is the path toward citizenship of the United States of America.

It is wrong. I strongly support the McCollum amendment. It should be stripped. Amnesty should be stripped from the bill and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I just think we need to clear up the issue of legalization. You must be here 5 continous years, from January 1, 1982, or before, in order to be eligible. So anybody who came last year or the year before or the year before is not eligible. Five continuous years.

That is not an unfair trade to get the rest of this bill, which is employer sanctions and the other Border Patrol increases. I would say that balances what makes this bill so good, and I would urge you, if you want to keep this bill alive and have a responsible immigration policy, you ought to defeat this amendment.

Again, 5 continuous years in order to get legalization.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Just very briefly, the gentleman's amendment was debated and voted down in the subcommittee and in the full committee and on this floor in 1984. It was brought again in 1986 and voted down in the subcommittee and voted down in the full committee, and I hope, with all respect to my friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM], we proceed along the same path and vote it down here in the House.

It is a very well and sincerely offered amendment, but it would be totally destructive to the balance of perspective and symmetry of our bill. I hope that the Congress would not support it.

I will say that if the amendment were to be adopted, I think we will have a very difficult time moving the rest of the bill.

To the gentleman's credit, in all of these efforts in subcommittee, full committee and on the floor; even though his amendment has not prevailed, he has never flagged in his support for the bill. In the event that we do vote the gentleman's amendment down, which I hope happens, I would solicit the gentleman's continued support for the bill because it has been very important to us in the past.

□ 2100

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I have had a chance twice before to talk about my own views on the question of amnesty, so I want to just summarize them.

This is an issue for all of us tonight of population and of politics. The poor and the disadvantaged and the unemployed who are here right now are going to be watching very closely each and every Member's vote on the question of whether or not you want to cheapen and devalue what the worth of American citizenship ought to be all about. It is population control, as my good friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] has mentioned, that when you give legal status to one who came here illegally, they are then eligible in 3 or 5 years thereafter for mother, brother, father, sister, spouse of each and offspring thereof, and the chain migration effect, the echo effect of that, as has been well described, amounts to between 70 and 100 million people, nearly a one-third increase on the population flood of this country; indeed, from an economic point of view, from a city, county, and State welfare and education point of view, a suffocating impact that we cannot afford. It sends the wrong signal.

I think that the registry date which provides that anyone here prior to 1976 can get their amnesty is sufficient to go to conference.

It is politics, because some say it is either going to be my way or there will be no bill at all. That is not how this House ought to legislate. Do it my way or we will not do it at all, not after we have been through what we have been through to try to get a symmetrical bill that we can send to conference to work out our differences.

So please, I ask my colleagues, reject amnesty. Vote for registry and support the McCollum amendment.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Members on my side of the aisle, as well as the other side of the aisle, to vote against the McCollum amendment, with all due respect. I seriously believe that if this amendment is to be adopted, the bill will die.

I think it is more important for those of you who are concerned about legalization and do not think it is proper, I would suggest that if this bill dies we will come back in 2 or 4 years. Legalization will be part of it and you will have more people who will be legalized than under the bill. That may be just a little bit to hang on to, but I think it is something, it is a fact.

I would remind you that 2 years ago on the eve of this vote, Ronald Reagan, the President of the United States, indicated that he thought looking at everything, looking at the issue in its entirety, that legalization was necessary, it was something we ought to do. It was humane, and he supported it. I have no reason to believe that he disagrees with that now.

It may be hard to swallow for some. I did not come to Congress prepared to vote for it, but I am absolutely convinced, after looking at this for 8 years, that we have to do something with legalization. You are not going to round them all up and send them home. Some of you on my side of the aisle will be the first ones standing up and demanding that we not do that to those fine people who are here.

I think it is a reasonable accommodation. I hope to go to conference and be close to the Senate on legalization, but do not take legalization out of the bill. Do not denude the bill. We need a bill. We need it now. Please do not destroy this bill.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOLLUM. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, we are talking about from between 2 and 12 million illegal aliens, is that correct?

Mr. McCOLLUM. Well, it could be as many as 20 million.

Mr. HYDE. Let us take 12 and let us cut that in two and say 6 million illegal aliens. Now, after 5 years they will be citizens. They will be eligible for citizenship, is that right?

Mr. McCOLLUM. They will be eligible, that is correct.

Mr. HYDE. All right. Then they are entitled to bring in a spouse and their children, is that correct?

Mr. McCOLLUM. That is correct.

Mr. HYDE. So if you add 6 million people and you have three children and a spouse, you are talking about 24 million people, one-third of the population of Mexico, eligible to come into this country, regardless of any quotas or anything else, in 5 years.

Mr. McCOLLUM. That is exactly right.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. McCOLLUM. And in 10 years we may have as many as 90 million eligible to come into the country and that is a third of the population doubled over the size that we have now.

I would like to point out to some of my colleagues who are worried about what is going to happen to people who stay in here if we do not have amnesty. I will tell you what they are going to do when they cannot get a job. They are going to go back across. Nobody is going to round them up. Nobody is going to do anything about that.

The question here is what price are we willing to pay to get an immigration bill? I think the price is too high if it is amnesty. I think the price is too high if it is 45 to 90 million more people in this country over the next 10 years. I think the price is too high if it is half the population of Mexico in the next 5 years and that is the price we are going to pay if we have amnesty in this bill. It is entirely too big a price to pay.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the McCollum amendment. Let us strike amnesty from this bill. Let us close our borders with employer sanctions and let us have decent legislation. Vote aye on the McCollum amendment.

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing the McCollum amendment which would strip immigration reform of one of its integral elements. Without the legalization provision, the effort to get control of our borders will certainly fail.

Aside from the humanitarian considerations in support of legalization, the failure to regularize the status of millions of undocumented aliens within our borders will create an enforcement nightmare. Not only will the immigration authorities have to deal with new flows of illegal aliens at our borders, but they will have to deal with millions of undocumenteds inside the United States. With limited resources available to enforce our immigration laws, the amendment would make effective immigration enforcement prohibitive, if not impossible.

Far from promoting further illegal immigration, legalization will enhance our capability to stem new flows of illegal immigration. Furthermore the legalization provision sets up stringent standards which all applicants must meet. It will require long residing applicants to show compliance with most of the 33 grounds of exclusion in current law applicable to all persons seeking to come to the United States.

And, when legalized, a person will not be eligible for Federal financial assistance, Medicaid, or food stamps for 5 years. I urge my colleagues to vote against the McCollum amendment if they are serious about strengthening the enforcement of our immigration laws.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment to delete the legalization provisions of this bill. Some opponents have characterized this provision as an amnesty program. I would like to remind my colleagues that section 201 is a legalization program not merely an amnesty program.

Applicants for legalization must meet stringent requirements of continuous residency, knowledge of, or willingness to learn the English language and U.S. history and government. They are also ineligible for this program if they have committed a felony or three misdemeanors. Moreover, applicants for the legalization program do not become permanent residents for at least a year, if they meet the above requirements.

This provision was offered by the distinguished majority leader and adopted by the House during last year's debate on the immigration bill. Legalization provides an equitable balance to any immigration reform package. Since we last voted on this measure, nothing has changed to warrant consideration of an immigration bill with a legalization component. I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROYBAL

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROYBAL: At the end of title III insert the following new section (and redesignate the succeeding section, and conform the table of contents, accordingly):

SEC. 317. PROVIDING ADDITIONAL IMMIGRANT VISA NUMBERS FOR NATIVES OF CONTIGUOUS COUNTRIES.

(a) ADDITONAL IMMIGRANT VISA NUMBERS.—Section 201 (8 U.S.C. 1151) is amended—

(1) by inserting "certain aliens provided immigrant visa numbers under subsection (c)," in subsection (a) after "subsection (b) of this section,", and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) ADDITIONAL VISA NUMBERS FOR NATIVES OF CONTIGUOUS COUNTRIES.—(1) In addition to the number of immigrant visas made available under subsection (a), there shall be made available to natives of each of the foreign states contiguous to the United States for each fiscal year a number of immigrant visas not to exceed the number specified under paragraph (2), not more than 26 percent of which may be made available in any of the first three quarters of such fiscal year.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the number of additional visas made available to natives of either of the foreign contiguous states for a fiscal year is equal to 20,000.

"(B) If for a fiscal year one of the foreign contiguous states does not use the full number of additional immigrant visa numbers made available under this subsection, then the number of additional visas made available to natives of the other foreign contiguous states for the following fiscal year shall be increased by the number not used by the other foreign contiguous states for the previous fiscal year".

(b) ALLOTMENT OF NEW VISA NUMBERS.—Section 203 (8 U.S.C. 1153) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) ALLOTMENT OF SPECIAL VISAS FOR CONTIGUOUS COUNTRIES.—(1) Aliens who are subject to the numerical limitations specified in section 201(c) shall be allotted visas in the same manner, subject to the same conditions, and in the same order as aliens who are subject to the numerical limitations specified in section 201(a), except that the percentage limitations specified in paragraphs (1) through (6) thereof shall not apply.

"(2) Requirements respecting acquisition of preference status by reason of a relationship or occupational qualification described in a paragraph of subsection (a) shall apply, in the same manner, for the acquisition of preference status under paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 202 (8 U.S.C. 1152) is amended—

(1) by inserting "and (C)" in subsection (a) after "section 201(b)",

(2) by striking out "under section 202" in the matter in subsection (e) before paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "under subsection (a)", and

(3) by adding at the end of subsection (e) the following:

"This subsection shall not apply to visas made available under section 201(c) and allotted under section 203(f),".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to fiscal years beginning with the first fiscal year that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL] will be recognized for 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the discussion during the day has been most interesting. We have heard from a wide range of opinion on the part of many Members of the House of Representatives. But I think that as we analyze the situation at the moment we can conclude that those who are in favor of this legislation, almost everyone, did, in fact, apologize for their position, but justified it because they believe that it is immigration reform.

Many have said that they would vote for the bill, but with mixed emotions. Others said that they would hold their nose to vote for this piece of legislation. Others just would vote for the bill simply because there was nothing else. But the justification, Mr. Chairman, for all was the fact that they actually believe that this bill is immigration reform.

If they believe that it is immigration reform, then I respect what they believe.

The truth of the matter is that I happen to believe that it is not immigration reform. The amendment before you, however is, in fact, immigration reform, because what it does is it changes the basic law of the country. It makes it possible for a change in the visa provisions of the Nation, increasing the worldwide visas from 270,000 to 310,000 visas throughout the entire world, 40,000 of those would be devoted to this hemisphere. In other words, Mexico would be increased by 20,000 and Canada would also be increased by an additional 20,000.

The reason for that is that there is a tremendous backlog in Mexico at the present time. People who are here in the United States from Mexico, who wish to reunite with their families must wait as long as 9 years before they can bring them to the United States. All preference categories except the first preference are already oversubscribed.

Therefore, if we really want to do things in an orderly manner, and if we want to be sure that these people immigrate within the law, then we must increase the current annual quota in order to make it possible for more people to come to the United States from both Canada and Mexico in a legal manner.

This perhaps will stem the flow somewhat of those individuals who will be coming into the United States even under this bill. Under this particular bill before us, 350,000 will be legalized if they worked in the United States just 60 days sometime this last year. That is perfectly all right if this is what this House wants to do. But if we want to do something in a legal way, it is most necessary that this amendment be agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, again I will try to impress on the Members of the House that the one objective that we must have in mind is that we must do everything we possibly can to make available laws that can be obeyed, that will better the situation with regard to the illegal aliens and immigration in general to the United States.

What this amendment does is actually unite families. At the present time we have thousands upon thousands of people in Canada and in the United States who cannot live with their wives and their children simply because visas are not available. By increasing the visa system by just 20,000 for Mexico and for Canada, we will be able, I believe, to reduce pressures to come into this country illegally.

It would also recognize the nearness to Mexico and to Canada, and especially consider that we have historic and friendly relationships with the countries in question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL] has expired.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to refresh the memory of the House.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL] did appear in the bills before the Congress and before this body in the 98th Congress 2 years ago. They appeared, if I remember correctly, in the conference report of the 1984 bill. So it obviously reflects a thinking process which is germinating in this body.

The one thing I would like to at least bring to the attention of the House is that this, of course, deals with what we call legal immigration. Basically this amendment, proposed by the gentleman from California, deals with legal immigration, and what we are talking about in the bill before the House tonight is, of course, illegal entry, basically trying to deal with it in some humane fashion.

Legal immigration is a subject of hearings that we have started in our subcommittee this year and which we will have in full dress form in the 100th Congress. It would really be more precisely and logically and suitably a subject before us later, not right now, because we might be putting the cart before the horse.

So my restraint about this is simply the fact that I believe that we are on the trial in the course of the routine hearings of immigration changes in the legal style which could take care of problems brought up by the gentleman, as well as the gentleman from Nebraska. I just have a little bit of reluctance at this point.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions because I tend to agree with the gentleman's comments that he just made. The bill, we have been told all along, is to deal with the question of undocumented workers and the question of what we do about the status of current numbers in this country.

What is the quota now legally for Canada, and what is the quota now for Mexico?

Mr. MAZZOLI. It is 20,000 in each case.

Mr. DAUB. Are we shifting the quota, is there any thought that that is what is being done?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I believe, if I understand the gentleman's question, what numbers are not used by one country are shifted to the other.

Mr. DAUB. Are there any other quota numbers that are changed in any part of the bill that will not be subject to debate tonight on the floor? Are we changing the number for any other country?

Mr. MAZZOLI. We will change in the bill the quota for Hong Kong, the Crown Colony. That is changed. Otherwise, no.

Mr. DAUB. Besides Canada and besides Mexico and besides the Crown Colony of Hong Kong where the legal numbers are going to be changed, and particularly if this particular amendment passes, there are no other legal immigration quotas that are changed?

Mr. MAZZOLI. We, of course, have an amendment to be offered that would tend to change some numbers, but that is not in the bill which is before this body.

□ 2135

Mr. DAUB. The extended voluntary departure amendment, the Fish amendment, No. 14?

Mr. MAZZOLI. No. The earlier number; No. 13.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. DONNELLY's amendment, No. 13?

Mr. MAZZOLI. That's right.

Mr. DAUB. What would the quotas there be affecting? Which countries and how many; numbers, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I understand it is a 5-year period. Great Britain. I am advised it is primarily from European countries; Western Europe.

Mr. DAUB. Ireland?

Mr. MAZZOLI. Ireland is one of the countries, yes.

Mr. DAUB. England?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I believe that would be also.

Mr. DAUB. Wales, Scotland, Western Europe?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I would think that most of it——

Mr. DAUB. So if these amendments all pass, we will be adding about 100——

Mr. MAZZOLI. Only for 5 years. I must say that if the Donnelly amendment were to carry, it is a limited period.

Mr. DAUB. We will add 100,000 new quota entrants, legally, under this bill, is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] has again expired.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one additional minute.

Mr. MAZZOLI. To try to indicate that the gentleman is correct. One of the problems we have tried to deal with in this bill is to try to limit the reach of it. Now, there are those who wanted to go further, and there are some amendments being offered which would seek to open this thing up.

The gentleman from California has one; the gentleman from Massachusetts has another; but basically speaking, the committee, the subcommittee has hewed to the line of trying to deal with undocumented entry and how to deal with it sensitively and humanely.

To that extent, I would again remind the House that in very many versions of the immigration reform bill over the last three Congresses, the gentleman's amendment did appear. So this is not the first time we have confronted it. It does satisfy a matter that we have dealt with with our neighbors to the north and neighbors to the south.

My only restraint about it, because this may be exactly what the Congress comes to agree with once we have the full-fledged hearings. It is just, I think this might be slightly premature; that is my only problem with it.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that this amendment is not premature.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time, and I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, the truth of the matter is, it is not premature. That this exact language has been in the bill in the past; it has also been in the conference report; therefore it has been part of the legislation as it existed last year and the year before that and the year before that; and it is not premature to the point where now it can be adopted; and if there are any changes to be forthcoming, then we can change it at that time.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the gentleman is saying; premature, if I might say, in the sense that we are now having the hearings which we were not conducting in the 98th Congress or the 97th.

So we are now looking at the subject of legal immigration dealing with quota changes, caps, and all of the variety of questions, and that is why I say with respect to tonight, in October 1986 I suspect it is somewhat premature.

Mr. DAUB. I want to join in agreement with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MAC KAY

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MACKAY: At the end of the bill, add the following new title (and conform the table of contents accordingly):

TITLE IX—FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEPORTATABLE AND EXCLUDABLE ALIENS CONVICTED OF CRIMES

SEC. 901. EXPEDITIOUS DEPORTION OF CONVICTED ALIENS.

Section 242 (8 U.S.C. 1254) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(i) In the case of an alien who is convicted of an offense which makes the alien subject to deportation, the Attorney General shall begin any deportation proceeding as expeditiously as possible after the date of the conviction.".

SEC. 902. TRANSFER OF CERTAIN DEPORTABLE ALIENS FROM STATE AND LOCAL PENAL FACILITIES TO FEDERAL PENAL FACILITIES

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any alien who is incarcerated in a State or local penal facility for an offense involving controlled substances, the commission of which makes such alien deportable under section 241 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, shall, upon written request of the appropriate State or local official, be transferred to a penal facility under the authority of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons. The Attorney General shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this section.

SEC. 903. IDENTIFICATION OF FACILITIES TO INCARCERATE DEPORTABLE OR EXCLUDABLE ALIENS

The President shall require the Secretary of Defense, in cooperation with the Attorney General and by not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, to list facilities of the Department of Defense that could be made available to the Bureau of Prisons for use in incarcerating aliens who are subject to exclusion or deportation from the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACKAY] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACKAY].

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, the next amendment addresses a narrow but a very important issue. It has to do with illegal aliens who are convicted of drug-related crimes, who under Federal law should be deported and who, under the policies of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, should be deported on an expedited basis.

The policies require that deportation proceedings begin when a conviction takes place, the idea being that when the sentence is over, the person would be deported.

Now, unfortunately, the very opposite is happening. These people are not being deported; the expedited procedure is not working; the local and State jails are jammed up, the Immigration and Naturalization Service has no incentive to give priority to these because the burden of inaction falls on State and local governments and not on the Federal system.

This amendment provides three things; First, it provides that deportation proceedings will begin when there is a conviction; second, it provides that these people will be transferred into the Federal system.

I would point out at this point this is a much narrower group of people than the group of people that was contemplated a few weeks ago by the Bennett amendment. This is less than a third that number of people, but it would provide they would be transferred into the Federal system.

Third, it would require a study from the Department of Defense showing and listing the facilities that are available for the Bureau of Prisons that could be used to detain these people who should be deported.

I believe that this amendment would be a long step in the right direction. I do not believe it would be unduly disruptive on the Federal system. If it is disruptive on the Federal system, that is where the disruption should be instead of where it is now, which is in the State systems.

Let me tell you what is happening in California; 63 percent of the narcotics arrests in southern California are illegal aliens. These people are going into a system that is already overfilled, they are being released; they are committing further crimes and we have got a revolving door effect there; we have got that same effect in New York; in a very exaggerated fashion we have got it in Florida; in Texas, and everyplace where the drug problem and the immigration problem coincide.

I believe this amendment would lead very quickly to a changing of priorities in INS. I think it would be one that would be very strongly supported by your State and local officials. In fact, in my case, the amendment came about as a request from local sheriffs, and from the Governor of Florida.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a meritorious amendment. I wish to associate myself with the able gentleman in support of it.

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to ask for a vote on this because I think two-thirds of the tripart en bloc amendment are good, and I think it would be very difficult to explain to Members and have them vote against one-third of it when they favor two-thirds.

I will say this, however—it will be in all honesty with the gentleman from Florida—I will make efforts in conference to knock that one-third out because that one-third is the same question that we dealt with in the drug bill. It was defeated on this floor not because we do not think that we ought to help the State and local governments in terms of the problems they have in jailing these people, but because we do not have the room in our Federal prison system.

It was pointed out on the floor, if you push these people in the Federal system, some of those people we voted to go into the Federal prison system on the drug bill, for mandatory sentences, will not be able to go there because we are not going to have room for them.

So to the extent that the gentleman says that we should require expeditious deportation of convicted aliens, I absolutely agree. It will be a part of the bill as far as I am concerned.

To the extent that we should direct the Secretary of Defense to give us a list of those facilities under his jurisdiction that could be made available to the Bureau of Prisons for incarcerating aliens subject to exclusion or deportation, absolutely it ought to be part of the bill.

As far as the mandate of an immediate transfer of certain deportable aliens from State and local penal facilities to the Federal penal facilities, we do not have the room. We ought to recognize it; and if it is a case of pushing these people into the system or putting major drug dealers in because the mandatory sentences we have just passed in this House—I think most Members would say we ought to do the latter.

So I will tell the gentleman that I am not going to call for a vote now, but to be addressing you in all candor, I think in the conference we are going to have to recognize that that is going to have to come out, because we have received a message from the administration: They cannot accept this. I know the gentleman from Florida does not want to kill an immigration bill.

So let us allow this to be part of the bill, but I think we are going to bring a bill back to you with one-third of your very commendable amendment removed.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB].

□ 2145

Mr. DAUB. I will be very brief and say to the gentleman from Florida that I think he raises appropriate issues for conference, whereas I do think, as the gentleman from California says, a little work needs to be done. I want to commend the gentleman because the issue of how we treat the once-apprehended once-convicted undocumented worker or person without a status ought not to be allowed to say here is very important. I think the gentleman's effort is a good one and merits inclusion in the bill as it goes to conference, and I support the gentleman's amendments en bloc.

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend my colleague for offering this amendment. I think it is an excellent one. If we are ever going to do anything about the problem of the Federal Government not taking care of its responsibilities with the aliens who are here who have committed crimes and are in our prisons, this is the time to do it. We have had all kinds of excuses from the Immigration Service for not deporting folks. This is the time for those excuses to stop.

There may be a price to pay of sorts here, but we need to pay whatever price it takes because in the long run we are going to pay a much greater price by putting this burden on our State and local prisons if we continue to have overcrowded local prisons. It is ridiculous. I commend the gentleman again for this series of amendments and strongly urge the adoption of all of the amendments and hope that they are protected in conference, all three of them.

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell everybody in the Chamber, all my colleagues, that this is an amendment that is designed to do what is going to be necessary not only now but in the future. As more and more illegal aliens get into the business of drug trafficking and get into the other business of crime, more and more States are going to be impacted by the problems that have occurred now.

This amendment anticipates some of the solutions that we are going to need for the future and transfers the responsibility, my colleagues, from your State systems and your States' taxpayers to the Federal Government, where the responsibility belongs, where it has belonged, and where it will belong.

It is a Federal problem. It is time for the Federal Government to take the responsibility for it.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of this amendment and commend the gentleman from Florida for a very fine amendment.

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman, and I thank the Chairman.

I want to compliment Mr. MACKAY from Florida for bringing this before the Congress. I shall only take approximately just a few seconds.

We have a situation which no doubt, evidently from the comments around the floor, is recognized as a Federal responsibility. It has been put in the form of an amendment, and I compliment the gentleman for bringing it to the attention of the House tonight. I am confident that it will be accepted even without a vote.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment being offered by my Florida colleague, BUDDY MACKAY. The Federal Government is responsible for border control. We can all agree that, in recent years, the United States has lost control over illegal immigration into this country. One of the grimmest consequences of insufficient Federal efforts is that illegal aliens are increasingly entering this country and selling drugs.

The MacKay amendment complements our efforts on the drug bill and gives the Federal Government some of the tools it needs to have a positive effect on both the immigration and drug problems. This amendment requires Federal cooperation in incarcerating Mariels and other illegal aliens who have been convicted of drug crimes and requires that these individuals be deported in an expedited manner. Most important to heavily impacted States like Florida, under this amendment, convicted illegal aliens who are in State and local jails for drug offenses would be transferred to Federal facilities, pending their deportation.

We have committed ourselves to a comprehensive fight against drug trafficking overseas and in this country. Granted, it would be preferable to prohibit these individuals from entering the United States in the first place. But if we can't do that, at least let us put into motion the expedited procedures for deporting them, beginning with their transfer from State and local jails into Federal facilities.

Some would say that there is insufficient space in our 47 Federal prisons to handle the transfer of any illegal aliens from State and local jails. It is undeniably true that our Nation's prisons are already overcrowded. Under the MacKay amendment, if no space could be found in Federal prisons, these aliens could also be transferred to any of the 874 Defense Department facilities which are deemed appropriate for this purpose.

Immigration is a Federal responsibility. This House correctly recognizes that the Federal Government has a major role in fighting drugs. So why should taxpayers in Florida and other heavily affected States have the additional financial burden of supporting illegal aliens who have been convicted of selling drugs in their communities? In my judgment, it is logical and equitably that illegal aliens convicted on drug offenses should be transferred out of State and local jails and into available Federal facilities and deported as quickly as possible.

I urge my colleagues to take positive action on the immigration front and against drug trafficking by voting for the MacKay amendment.

Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACKAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FISH

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Strike title VIII and conform the table of contents accordingly.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAUB. May I inquire as to whether, if I may state this question parliamentarywise to the Chairman, the gentleman from New York seeks to offer his amendment No. 1 listed as No. 13 in the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is offering amendment No. 14.

The gentleman does not desire to offer No. 13.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that may be within the gentleman's rights, in fact it is within the gentleman's rights.

We just finished voicevoting down the addition of quotas from Mexico and Canada and by not having a chance to discuss the Donnelly language which is included in the bill, is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that we will be allowing some legal quota increases but denying others?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not stating a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DAUB. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment strikes the provision in the bill that grants extended voluntary departure to El Salvadorans and Nicaraguans in the United States who have arrived as late as midsummer of this year. This legislation raises two central issues. First, it calls for a GAO report, which I do not believe we need, to supplement information on conditions of Salvadorans in El Salvador. Second, the question is, Should we suspend deportation of Salvadorans while we wait a 2-year period for that GAO report to be completed?

My answer on both these questions is "no" for the following reasons: Mr. Chairman, we have had this bill before us for years. Time has simply passed it by. There is no need. As to the GAO study, although I believe this legislation is well intended, another study would accomplish little.

The bill before us calls for the number and location of displaced persons, the origins of the reasons for displacement, the living conditions of Salvadorans. All this information is in a report in 1985 of the Agency for International Development.

Next it requests information from GAO as to what happens to Salvadorans returning to El Salvador.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was first introduced in the Congress to cover the years 1983 and 1984 responding to conditions in El Salvador in 1982, conditions that no longer exist.

Long since then, we have put in place the Intergovernmental Committee on Migration which interviews and protects every deportee back to El Salvador. There is no further danger of the random violence that was rampant in 1981 and 1982 which gave rise to this legislation. In fact, there were 9,000 cases reported in 1981; there is no doubt about there being random violence. By 1985 this had declined to 335.

You might compare that to the number of 1,600 homicides that occurred in 1 year in the city of New York.

Mr. Chairman, the major problem with this measure is that it does violence to the Refugee Act of 1980. Congress passed that act to supplement the piecemeal and nation-specific legislation for refugees, for example those we adopted for Cubans and for Hungarians.

Prior to 1981 refugees were paroled into the United States, following consultation with the Congress.

In place of this system, the Refugee Act set up a system under which any person, regardless of origin, can apply for, and my point is, Mr. Chairman, that this act, the Refugee Act, was intended by this Congress to be the exclusive available remedy and the legislation that I seek to strike this evening circumvents this system by creating a new system for handling Salvadorans and Nicaraguans during the next 2 years while we wait for this GAO report.

In addition, it raises the prospect that a stream of Salvadorans and others from the Caribbean Basin will illicitly enter the United States.

A claim will be made, I am sure, that a discriminatory policy exists toward Salvadoran applications, and that is simply not borne out by the facts.

Mr. Chairman, the United States is not the last safe haven for Salvadorans and Nicaraguans.

As we know, not all parts of El Salvador are unsafe and Honduras provides safe refugee camps open to all Salvadorans. In addition, almost all Salvadorans come to the United States by land route. In doing so, they must cross at least two borders, Mexico and Guatelmala. Mexico is also a safe haven for Salvadorans, and the United Nations high commissioner for refugees has established a presence in both Honduras and in Mexico to take care of these people.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the gentleman and I thank the chairman.

I would like to advise the House that, of course, we have reached the final amendment, No. 14. When this is disposed of in 20 minutes, then we will be able to go into final passage of the bill.

Let me just say that with reluctance and with a measure of unhappiness I do oppose the gentleman's language, the gentleman from California, and support the amendment.

I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to strike the language in the bill, that is the Moakley language.

Let me say, to the gentleman from Massachusetts' credit, we have worked closely over the last 4 years on this bill. It originally began without a cutoff date.

With the help of the gentleman, we were able to put a cutoff date in. Now, the cutoff date has been worked up to August of this year, 1986, but at least there is a cutoff date.

As I say, to the gentleman's credit, we were able over the last 4 years working on this bill to make some improvements which are in the bill. So if the House were to reject the amendment of the gentleman and adopt the gentleman's language, it is not like it used to be. Basically there is a cutoff date which we did not have earlier. The individuals who would be here in EVD are not able to get public assistance, whereas originally they might have. Furthermore, there are no preference rights, while these people are here in extended voluntary departure they cannot ask legally for their families to join them. The time spent in extended voluntary departure does not count toward the 7 years which under the existing INA allows a person to stay here and not go back home and ask for suspension of deportation. So, to that extent this is a much better offering. I will say to the gentleman as I say to the House there has been in two separate hearings before our subcommittee, the 98th Congress, the 99th Congress, no credible evidence ever adduced to say that an individual who would be returned to El Salvador is treated cruelly, foully or in anywise persecuted.

This is not to say that it does not happen. This is only to say that there has been no evidence that we were ever able to have before our committee that this actually occurs.

The second reason for my supporting the amendment of the gentleman is that if we were to accept the gentleman's language, we would go back to pre-1980 dealing with refugees and asylees.

I would urge the House to support the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, over the course of the 99th Congress, we have debated the civil wars in Central America. Most Members have supported President Duarte in his struggle against the Salvadoran insurgents and, more recently, a majority passed aid to the Nicaraguan Contras which promises an escalation of the violence which already exists in that beleaguered country. So let there be no doubt in anyone's mind—violence and civil war are still very much a fact of life in Central America.

The issue before us is "How do we respond to the humanitarian debris of these wars?" Do we send them back to the war zone? Is this body really going to vote to deport Nicaraguan refugees back to war-torn Nicaragua on the heels of our approval of military assistance to the Contras?

If we are true to our proud national traditions we will not. Our country has on 15 occasions over the past 26 years granted extended voluntary departure, a temporary stay of deportation, to national groups where there is extreme civil unrest in their homelands. In fact, we provide EVD currently to Poles, Afghans, and Ethiopians for this very reason. Surely the unrest in El Salvador or Nicaragua is at least as great as that in any one of these countries.

Some confuse EVD with asylum. Asylum is granted—on a case by case basis—to those who can prove an individualized fear of persecution. And this is granted under the authority of the Refugee Act. But even since passage of that act in 1980, it has continued to be necessary to temporarily protect whole national groups from deportation—something this administration has done four times since President Reagan took the oath of office.

Never in the history of EVD in this country, has it been demanded that a mortality rate for deportees be produced. Only now are critics of the Salvadoran EVD proposal asking for such a body count. But cries for body counts totally miss the point. We have never argued that returnees are singled out for persecution. If this were the case, then obviously asylum would be a more appropriate remedy to propose. What we do know is that there is significant violence in El Salvador and Nicaragua, and that is all we need to know to justify EVD.

There are also opponents of this proposal, as it pertains to Salvadorans, who hide behind the smokescreen provided them by a small program in El Salvador, conducted by the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration. ICM is a reception and counseling service, nothing more. "To suggest that it's something else is false," according to ICM's Washington representative. The so-called ICM report that many cite is methodologically flawed and, according to ICM, is "not a scientific data base on which to construct definitive analyses of situations of returnees."

Finally, many of the opponents of this measure argue that those fleeing Central America are economic migrants. But in the case of the Salvadorans, the Census Bureau testified before the House last year that there were only 94,000 Salvadorans in the United States in 1980 both legally and illegally combined. The current flow of Salvadorans, says the Census Bureau, began only with the escalation of violence that immediately followed the assassination of Catholic Archbishop Oscar Romero in 1981.

Certainly, many things have changed since I first began proposing EVD for Salvadorans. Certainly death squad activities and similar human rights problems have been reduced under President Duarte, but problems still remain. We could all stand here and debate the number of death squad deaths in 1986 as opposed to 1982 but that is not at all the issue. Rather, the fact remains that there is major civil war in El Salvador and Nicaragua.

Put simply—do we allow these refugees temporary safety or do we deport them back to the horrible cauldron of war? I appeal to my colleagues to join me in defeating the motion to strike—and to help save some lives.

□ 2200

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to allude to a recent letter from the Archbishop Rivera Y Damas, who wrote to the Members of the Congress urging passage of this bill in November 1985. In June 1986, Mr. Chairman, he reaffirmed his support of the bill in a taped conversation with an aide of mine who visited him down in San Salvador.

In July 1986, the archbishop again urged his support to the Bishop of Pittsburgh, Anthony Bevilaqua.

Mr. Chairman, if I could just read from the archbishop's letter:

> I, Archbishop Rivera y Damas, ask each and every one of you, Honorable Members of the House and Senate of the United States of America, that you open your arms and your hearts and your Christian charity to my suffering people and that you double your efforts against deportation of the Salvadoran refugees and support measures such as the Moakley-DeConcini bill. . . .

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the country of El Salvador and its people have been suffering the ravages of civil strife for the past 6 years. In last year's Report on Human Rights Practices, the State Department determined that the creation of "a stable public order sufficient to protect individual rights has been disrupted by guerrilla and military operations, partisan hatreds, acts of revenge, fear, and a prevailing uncertainty characterized by violence."

Recent press reports detail increased violence, including the kidnapping of government officials and their families, indiscriminate guerrilla attacks resulting in civilian deaths and the use of aerial bombings in the countryside by the military.

As a result of 6 years of living in the midst of violence, fear, and danger, thousands of Salvadorans and Nicaraguans have been displaced from their homes, and villages. Others have fled to the United States, seeking respite from violence, instability, and uncertainty. Most only seek a temporary haven until peace and stability return to their home countries.

Our Nation has a long humanitarian tradition of providing refuge to persons fleeing civil strife and violence until such time as they can return home.

In fact, in recent years relief has been provided to nationals of several countries during periods of unrest and violence. Currently it is being provided for nationals of Ethiopia, Uganda, Afghanistan, and Poland in the form of extended voluntary departure [EVD]. Most recently, the grant of EVD to nationals of Poland was extended for an additional 6 months.

It is my firm belief that the situation within El Salvador, Nicaragua is as unsettled and violent as in those countries where the executive branch has felt compelled to offer temporary shelter.

Accordingly, I wholeheartedly support EVD and urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, my party of this amendment deals with Nicaragua, people who are in our country fleeing the persecution they have experienced in Nicaragua. I ask that the same consideration be given to those worthy people as the folks fleeing from the same kind of persecution in El Salvador.

Mr. Chairman, I warmly commend the able gentleman for the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the motion to strike the extended voluntary departure language now in the bill.

United States immigration policy now affords no special benefits to Salvadorans or Nicaraguans. Undocumented aliens from these countries, if apprehended, are liable for deportation. In light of the civil unrest, violence, and political upheaval in Central America, particularly in Nicaragua, justice and humanitarian concern demand that the United States grant some temporary relief from deportation at least until conditions improve.

I should emphasize that the language now in the bill provides only a temporary suspension of certain types of deportation. It does not provide permanent resident status for these refugees nor does it allow access to public assistance. Moreover, the moratorium applies only to those who would be deported because they lack proper documentation. Those who would be deported for criminal convictions, or immoral or illegal activities, would still be deported. I should also note that the administration now has authority for discretionary relief. This legislation is necessary only because the administration, with its special political slant on Central America, has not acted with the humanitarian concern traditionally displayed by America.

Our traditional humanitarian concern is codified in our obligations under international and domestic law. As a signatory to the U.S. Convention and Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees, and in various provisions of U.S. immigration law, the United States has agreed not to return an alien to a country if his life or liberty would be threatened by persecution. To receive asylum, however, an alien must prove that he or she would face persecution to which others in the country are not subjected. For Nicaraguans, it is an unfair burden.

There is another form of protection for aliens from countries torn by civil strife. Legal authority now exists for the administration to provide discretionary relief, staying or deferring deportation or extending voluntary departure status. Upon the recommendation of the Department of State, immigration authorities have granted blanket, nation-specific extended voluntary departure status to Cubans, Czechs, Chileans, Cambodians, Dominicans, Iranians, Laotians, Nicaraguans—from 1979 through 1980—and Vietnamese. Currently, the Lebanese, Ethiopians, Ugandans, Afghanis, and Poles enjoy this special benefit.

Nation-specific extended voluntary departure status is, and it ought to be, an extraordinary procedure. These are extraordinary circumstances. The violence and indiscriminate killing of civilians in Nicaragua are well-documented. There can be no question but that deported Nicaraguans would be viewed with suspicion by the Sandinistas. The danger they would face cannot be ignored. These people are bona fide refugees who deserve our protection.

Immigration authorities generally rely on advisory opinions from the Department of State about conditions in the country. The State Department declines to make the findings that would permit Nicaraguans to qualify for extended voluntary departure status. The administration does not support general relief for Nicaraguans despite the clear danger they face if they are returned.

Opponents of extended voluntary departure offer two arguments. They argue that a benefit like extended voluntary departure status will have a magnet effect and attract even more illegals. The language in the bill should obviate the concern. No benefit would accrue to a Nicaraguan who enters the United States after enactment of the bill and an alien who would otherwise be eligible for temporary suspension of deportation would forfeit that benefit if he or she leaves the United States and seeks to reenter.

The second argument we will hear is that special protection for Nicaraguans would undermine the Refugee Act of 1980. Before 1980, refugees were admitted to the United States under piecemeal and nation-specific legislation. The Refugee Act of 1980 was intended to provide an orderly and equitable process for establishing the need for asylum or withholding of deportation. That argument is unpersuasive.

We have already provided special consideration for nationals from certain countries. As I noted before, aliens from 14 countries have enjoyed extended voluntary departure status and nationals from 5 countries currently enjoy that status. After the Refugee Act of 1980, immigration authorities began to provide a stay of deportation for Poles who were in the United States as of December 23, 1981, and who are unwilling to return to Poland because of conditions there. Immigration authorities also do not enforce departure for Ethiopians who arrived in the United States before June 30, 1980. The legislation before us would not be the first time this Nation has recognized extraordinary circumstances and seen the need to work around the Refugee Act.

And I repeat, the circumstances in Nicaragua are extraordinary. The fighting and indiscriminate destruction, the terror and internal strife in Nicaragua cannot be ignored. The repressive record of the Sandinistas has been established; the Sandinistas have gagged the citizens, shut down La Prensa and controlled the media, and attempted to export a revolution without borders. I admit we are divided about Nicaragua but even those who disagree with me about the Communist takeover cannot ignore the reality of the internal conflict there and the very real dangers any deported Nicaraguan would face.

In the long tradition of humanitarian concern this Nation has displayed and in recognition of the extraordinary circumstances in Nicaragua, I urge my colleagues to support a temporary suspension of deportation and to vote against the motion to strike.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of Moakley-DeConcini. I just want to make it very clear that I believe this is a just act for us to perform here today.

Mr. Chairman, a hearing on Central American refugees was held in June 1985, making a clear connection between the political problems in the region and the flow of refugees to this Nation.

Our policy has created the flow of refugees, we should at least offer these innocent victims of that policy temporary asylum. The hearing record clearly points out the increase of refugees from Nicaragua and El Salvador as the violence increased.

This is not a permanent situation; it would only offer asylum for as long as the turmoil continues in their countries.

Both the Salvadoran Armed Forces and the guerrillas are responsible for the flow of refugees from El Salvador and Nicaragua. This is not a political or economic question. It is a question of protecting the lives of thousands of innocent people.

We just recently voted $100 million in aid for the Contras to fight the Nicaraguan Government. Shouldn't the victims of that government's oppressive policies be given temporary asylum? A vote for this amendment is a slap in the face of the Contras. It is the same as saying that the political turmoil in Nicaragua is not severe enough to warrant giving even temporary political asylum to Nicaraguans wanting to flee their country because of political oppression.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL].

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Chairman I commend the gentleman for his leadership and for his brilliant statement with which I associate myself.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to efforts to strike from the immigration bill the provision granting a temporary stay of deportation of Salvadoran and Nicaraguan refugees who are currently in the United States.

The issue of granting extended voluntary departure status to Salvadoran and Nicaraguan refugees is not a political statement against the governments of those countries. It is far from that. Instead, is a deeply humanitarian issue. It is a matter of whether we, as citizens of a country whose very principles are based on compassion and equity, will set-aside our political differences and provide a temporary refuge for persons less fortunate than ourselves who are innocent victims of civil wars waging through their countries.

Consider the facts: An August 1986 State Department report found that the Sandinista government has intensified repression in that country. Fact: Various human rights groups have documented human rights abuses by the Contra forces. Fact: There are significant civilian casualties as a result of fighting between the Sandinistas and Contras. Fact: Despite the commendable efforts of the Duarte government to improve human rights in that country, a substantial body of evidence exists which indicates that human rights violations continue to occur at an alarming rate. Fact: While it is true that political killings and activities by death squads are lower now than they were at the beginning of the civil war in El Salvador, political killings and disappearances continue at a rate higher than any other country currently receiving extended voluntary departure.

Notwithstanding the ongoing violence in El Salvador, the administration continues to point to data compiled by the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, an organization under United States State Department contract which assists and monitors Salvadorans deported from the United States. ICM can provide returnees information about assistance programs in the area of the country to which the person is returning, bus money, referrals for health care, overnight housing, and temporary identification documents. Unfortunately, ICM is not a protection or human rights monitoring organization.

The administration claims that ICM data proves that deported Salvadorans are safe when they return to their homeland. ICM collects this data by giving returnees postcards which they are asked to send to ICM once a month for 6 months. These postcards are then used to verify the safety of the returnees. However, a recent ICM survey found that only about half of the returnees could be located. According to the survey, 57 percent of the caseload returned to conflictive zones. And of those in conflictive zones, only 12 percent could even be located, and only a few individuals could actually be interviewed. I think it's crucial to understand that ICM cannot and does not protect Salvadorans once they are sent back. Not only does ICM lack any real political clout in El Salvador, but it is structured primarily to assist refugees with transportation and training, not to protect them from violence.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, as to claims that Salvadoran refugees are merely economic refugees or those seeking to avoid military service in that country and thus, not entitled to EVD, let me say this: The facts say otherwise. Many of these refugees have genuine cause for concern for their safety and well-being were they forced to return to El Salvador at the present time. President Duarte himself has described a "culture of terror" in his country. And last spring he announced his support for the resettlement outside El Salvador of displaced Salvadorans who were the victims of irrational violence . . . imposed upon our people. Furthermore, virtually all of the estimated 500,000 Salvadorans in the United States came after the start of the civil war, and studies show that the reason for their flight to be the violence in El Salvador.

Let's stop holding Salvadorans and Nicaraguans to a separate standard. A well-founded fear of persecution upon return is a standard for the granting of asylum, not EVD. EVD has always been conferred upon nationalities due to unstable or unsettled conditions in potential deportees' homelands, such as civil war. In the past, various administrations have granted EVD to refugees in situations similar to that of the Salvadorans and Nicaraguans. In fact, EVD has been granted to 15 different national groups during the past 25 years, and currently protects from deportation Poles, Afghans, Ugandans, and Ethiopians. Yet the Reagan administration continues to deny this protection to Salvadorans and Nicaraguans.

The time has come for us to act on our beliefs, and to alleviate an intolerable disregard for basic human rights. It is time we extend an offer of compassion and protection to these refugees, and I urge my colleagues to defeat the motion to strike the EVD provisions for Salvadorans and Nicaraguans contained in this bill.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, we are at the end of a long journey, and this is the last amendment we will have before we go to final passage.

I would just ask Members who are serious about immigration reform—what I am about to say is not a threat; I think it is an observation of political reality based on the vote we had on the previous question of legalization—

71-059 O-87-8 (Pt. 21)

this is a killer amendment. This kills the bill.

The Rules Committee could pass out a rule today or tomorrow and bring this bill to the floor by itself. It passed out as a separate bill out of our committee even though many of us disagree with it. On the subcommittee we could have blocked it. We decided we would not block it, even though we disagreed with it. We brought it forward. And to have it now to be brought here, what I am talking about is the EVD section of it, it means that if it stays in this bill, this bill dies.

We just managed to maintain legalization by a seven-vote margin. We just passed the bill on the floor 2 years ago by a five-vote margin, why? Because of legalization. Now you are trying to saddle this bill with extended voluntary departure.

Irrespective of how you feel on that, do not kill this bill. Support the motion to strike. It ought not to be here. EVD is not essential to this bill. The administration has said they will veto it; that is not an idle threat. They said it long before it ever became attached to this bill.

If you want immigration reform, I would ask you, I would beg you to vote the motion to strike. Let me talk about the substance of it. The gentleman from New York has talked about ICM, the International Commission on Migration. Not the United States. Not the U.S. State Department. They are the ones that go and receive every single person deported to El Salvador from the United States. They meet them, they greet them, they try and help resettle them. They then follow it up and they try and talk to them. In the 3 years or so they have been down there there have been two deaths down there. One, the result of an argument in a bar over a soccer match. Two, a person who attempted an armed robbery.

If you establish the idea that we should grant extended voluntary departure to this group, where do you stop? How do you say no to any group? How do you say no to Guatemala? How do you say no to Brazil? How do you say no to any of those countries in Central and South America?

If you take general conditions, my God, we should give extended voluntary departure to the people who live in downtown District of Columbia. People who live in Chicago, who live in Los Angeles. It is more dangerous, statistically, in those areas than in El Salvador.

This throws the whole immigration bill out the window. This throws immigration law out the window. This throws the Refugee Act of 1980 out the window. We decided in 1980 we should not have extended voluntary departure on a group basis; we should have it on an individual basis. We adopted the international definition of refugee and that is what is applied. That is what should be done.

But no, you are going to make a total exception for El Salvadorans and Nicaraguans. The question is are they economic refugees? The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE], I would like to yield to him for a second to mention something that he observed when he was down there.

Mr. KOLBE. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, when we were down in El Salvador a few months ago, I picked up on a Saturday a classified section of a newspaper. Here is an entire page of advertisements of travel agencies.

Mr. LUNGREN. If you want an immigration bill, support the motion to strike. Otherwise, this bill is dead.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

(B) in determining the amount of payment with respect to eligible legalized aliens who are over 16 years of age, the phrase "described under paragraph (2)" shall be deemed to be stricken from section 606(b)(1)(A) of such Act (20 U.S.C. 4105(b)(1)(A));

(C) the State educational agency may provide such educational services to adult eligible legalized aliens through local educational agencies and other public and private nonprofit organizations, including community-based organizations of demonstrated effectiveness; and

PART A—TEMPORARY AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

SEC. 301. H-2A AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.

(a) PROVIDING NEW "H-2A" NONIMMIGRANT CLASSIFICATION FOR TEMPORARY AGRICULTURAL LABOR.—Paragraph (15)(H) of section 101(a) (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)) is amended by striking out "to perform temporary services or labor," in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) to perform agricultural labor or services, as defined by the Secretary of Labor in regulations and including agricultural labor defined in section 3121(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and agriculture as defined in section 3(f) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(f)), of a temporary or seasonal nature, or (b) to perform other temporary service or labor".

(b) INVOLVEMENT OF DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR AND AGRICULTURE IN H-2A PROGRAM.—Section 214(c) (8 U.S.C. 1184(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "For purposes of this subsection with respect to nonimmigrants described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a), the term 'appropriate agencies of Government' means the Department of Labor and includes the Department of Agriculture. The provisions of section 216 shall apply to the question of importing any alien as a nonimmigrant under section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a).".

(c) ADMISSION OF H-2A WORKERS.—(1) Chapter 2 of title II is amended by adding after section 215 the following new section:

"ADMISSION OF TEMPORARY H-2A WORKERS

"SEC. 216. (a) CONDITIONS FOR APPROVAL OF H-2A PETITIONS.—(1) A petition to import an alien as an H-2A worker (as defined in subsection (i)(2)) may not be approved by the Attorney General unless the petitioner has applied to the Secretary of Labor for a certification that—

"(A) there are not sufficient workers who are able, willing, and qualified, and who will be available at the time and place needed, to perform the labor or services involved in the petition, and

"(B) the employment of the alien in such labor or services will not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of workers in the United States similarly employed.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor may require by regulation, as a condition of issuing the certification, the payment of a fee to recover the reasonable costs of processing applications for certification.

"(b) CONDITIONS FOR DENIAL OF LABOR CERTIFICATION.—The Secretary of Labor may not issue a certification under subsection (a) with respect to an employer if the conditions described in that subsection are not met or if any of the following conditions are met:

"(1) There is a strike or lockout in the course of a labor dispute which, under the regulations, precludes such certification.

"(2)(A) The employer during the previous two-year period employed H-2A workers and the Secretary of Labor has determined, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, that the employer at any time during that period substantially violated a material term or condition of the labor certification with respect to the employment of domestic or nonimmigrant workers.

"(B) No employer may be denied certification under subparagraph (A) for more than three years for any violation described in such subparagraph.

"(3) The employer has not provided the Secretary with satisfactory assurances that if the employment for which the certification is sought is not covered by State workers' compensation law, the employer will provide, at no cost to the worker, insurance covering injury and disease arising out of and in the course of the worker's employment which will provide benefits at least equal to those provided under the State workers' compensation law for comparable employment.

"(4) The Secretary determines that the employer has not made positive recruitment efforts within a multi-state region of traditional or expected labor supply where the Secretary finds that there are a significant number of qualified United States workers who, if recruited, would be willing to make themselves available for work at the time and place needed. Positive recruitment under this paragraph is in addition to, and shall be conducted within the same time period as, the circulation through the interstate employment service system of the employer's job offer. The obligation to engage in positive recruitment under this paragraph shall terminate on the date the H-2A workers depart for the employer's place of employment.

"(c) SPECIAL RULES FOR CONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS.—The following rules shall apply in the case of the filing and consideration of an application for a labor certification under this section:

"(1) DEADLINE FOR FILING APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary of Labor may not require that the application be filed more than 60 days before the first date the employer requires the labor or services of the H-2A worker.

"(2) NOTICE WITHIN SEVEN DAYS OF DEFICIENCIES.—(A) The employer shall be notified in writing within seven days of the date of filing if the application does not meet the standards (other than that described in subsection (a)(1)(A)) for approval.

"(B) If the application does not meet such standards, the notice shall include the reasons therefor and the Secretary shall provide an opportunity for the prompt resubmission of a modified application.

"(3) ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATION.—(A) The Secretary of Labor shall make, not later than 20 days before the date such labor or services are first required to be performed, the certification described in subsection (a)(1) if—

"(i) the employer has complied with the criteria for certification (including criteria for the recruitment of eligible individuals as prescribed by the Secretary), and

"(ii) the employer does not actually have, or has not been provided with referrals of, qualified eligible individuals who have indicated their availability to perform such labor or services on the terms and conditions of a job offer which meets the requirements of the Secretary.

In considering the question of whether a specific qualification is appropriate in a job offer, the Secretary shall apply the normal and accepted qualifications required by non-H-2A-employers in the same or comparable occupations and crops.

"(B)(i) For a period of 3 years subsequent to the effective date of this section, labor certifications shall remain effective only if, from the time the foreign worker departs for the employer's place of employment, the employer will provide employment to any qualified United States worker who applies to the employer until 50 percent of the period of the work contract, under which the foreign worker who is in the job was hired, has elapsed. In addition, the employer will offer to provide benefits, wages and working conditions required pursuant to this section and regulations.

"(ii) The requirement of clause (i) shall not apply to any employer who—

"(I) did not, during any calendar quarter during the preceding calendar year, use more than 500 man-days of agricultural labor, as defined in section 3(u) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(u)),

"(II) is not a member of an association which has petitioned for certification under this section for its members, and

"(III) has not otherwise associated with other employers who are petitioning for temporary foreign workers under this section.

"(iii) Six months before the end of the 3-year period described in clause (i), the Secretary of Labor shall consider the findings of the report mandated by section 403(a)(4)(D) of the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1986 as well as other relevant materials, including evidence of benefits to United States workers and costs to employers, addressing the advisability of continuing a policy which requires an employer, as a condition for certification under this section, to continue to accept qualified, eligible United States workers for employment after the date the H-2A workers depart for work with the employer. The Secretary's review of such findings and materials shall lead to the issuance of findings in furtherance of the Congressional policy that aliens not be admitted under this section unless there are not sufficient workers in the United States who are able, willing, and qualified to perform the labor or service needed and that the employment of the aliens in such labor or services will not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of workers in the United States similarly employed. In the absence of the enactment of Federal legislation prior to three months before the end of the 3-year period described in clause (i) which addresses the subject matter of this subparagraph, the Secretary shall immediately publish the findings required by this clause, and shall promulgate, on an interim or final basis, regulations based on his findings which shall be effective no later than three years from the effective date of this section.

"(iv) In complying with clause (i) of this subparagraph, an association shall be allowed to refer or transfer workers among its members: Provided, That for purposes of this section an association acting as an agent for its members shall not be considered a joint employer merely because of such referral or transfer.

"(v) United States workers referred or transferred pursuant to clause (iv) of this subparagraph shall not be treated disparately.

"(vi) An employer shall not be liable for payments under section 655.202(b)(6) of title 20, Code of Federal Regulations (or any successor regulation) with respect to an H-2A worker who is displaced due to compliance with the requirement of this subparagraph, if the Secretary of Labor certifies that the H-2A worker was displaced because of the employer's compliance with clause (i) of this subparagraph.

"(vii)(I) No person or entity shall willfully and knowingly withhold domestic workers prior to the arrival of H-2A workers in order to force the hiring of domestic workers under clause (i).

"(II) Upon the receipt of a complaint by an employer that a violation of subclause (I) has occurred the Secretary shall immediately investigate. He shall within 36 hours of the receipt of the complaint issue findings concerning the alleged violation. Where the Secretary finds that a violation has occurred, he shall immediately suspend the application of clause (i) of this subparagraph with respect to that certification for that date of need.

"(4) HOUSING.—Employers shall furnish housing in accordance with regulations. The employer shall be permitted at the employer's option to provide housing meeting applicable Federal standards for temporary labor camps or to secure housing which meets the local standards for rental and/or public accommodations or other substantially similar class of habitation: Provided, That in the absence of applicable local standards, State standards for rental and/or public accommodations or other substantially similar class of habitation shall be met: Provided further, That in the absence of applicable local or State standards, Federal temporary labor camp standards shall apply: Provided further, That the Secretary of Labor shall issue regulations which address the specific requirements of housing for employees principally engaged in the range production of livestock: Provided further, That when it is the prevailing practice in the area and occupation of intended employment to provide family housing, family housing shall be provided to workers with families who request it: And provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall require an employer to provide or secure housing for workers who are not entitled to it under the temporary labor certification regulations in effect on June 1, 1986.

"(d) ROLES OF AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(1) PERMITTING FILING BY AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.—A petition to import an alien as a temporary agricultural worker, and an application for a labor certification with respect to such a worker, may be filed by an association of agricultural producers which use agricultural services.

"(2) TREATMENT OF ASSOCIATIONS ACTING AS EMPLOYERS.—If an association is a joint or sole employer of temporary agricultural workers, the certifications granted under this section to the association may be used for the certified job opportunities of any of its producer members and such workers may be transferred among its producer members to perform agricultural services of a temporary or seasonal nature for which the certifications were granted.

"(3) TREATMENT OF VIOLATIONS.—

"(A) MEMBER'S VIOLATION DOES NOT NECESSARILY DISQUALIFY ASSOCIATION OR OTHER MEMBERS.—If an individual producer member of a joint employer association is determined to have committed an act that under subsection (b)(2) results in the denial of certification with respect to the member, the denial shall apply only to that member of the association unless the Secretary determines that the association or other member participated in, had knowledge of, or reason to know of, the violation.

"(B) ASSOCIATION'S VIOLATION DOES NOT NECESSARILY DISQUALIFY MEMBERS.—(i) If an association representing agricultural producers as a joint employer is determined to have committed an act that under subsection (b)(2) results in the denial of certification with respect to the association, the denial shall apply only to the association and does not apply to any individual producer member of the association unless the Secretary determines that the member participated in, had knowledge of, or reason to know of, the violation.

"(ii) If an association of agricultural producers certified as a sole employer is determined to have committed an act that under subsection (b)(2) results in the denial of certification with respect to the association, no individual producer member of such association may be the beneficiary of the services of temporary alien agricultural workers admitted under this section in the commodity and occupation in which such aliens were employed by the association which was denied certification during the period such denial is in force, unless such producer member employs such aliens in the commodity and occupation in question directly or through an association which is a joint employer of such workers with the producer member.

"(e) EXPEDITED ADMINISTRATIVE APPEALS OF CERTAIN DETERMINATIONS.—(1) Regulations shall provide for an expedited procedure for the review of a denial of certification under subsection (a)(1) or a revocation of such a certification or, at the applicant's request, for a de novo administrative hearing respecting the denial or revocation.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor shall expeditiously, but in no case later than 72 hours after the time a new determination is requested, make a new determination on the request for certification in the case of an H-2A worker if able, willing, and qualified eligible individuals are not actually available at the time such labor or services are required and a certification was denied in whole or in part because of the availability of qualified workers. If the employer asserts that any eligible individual who has been referred is not able, willing, or qualified, the burden of proof is on the employer to establish that the individual referred is not able, willing, or qualified because of employment-related reasons.

"(f) VIOLATORS DISQUALIFIED FOR 5 YEARS.—An alien may not be admitted to the United States as a temporary agricultural worker if the alien was admitted to the United States as such a worker within the previous five-year period and the alien during that period violated a term or condition of such previous admission.

"(g) AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1987, $10,000,000 for the purposes—

"(A) of recruiting domestic workers for temporary labor and services which might otherwise be performed by nonimmigrants described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a), and

"(B) of monitoring terms and conditions under which such nonimmigrants (and domestic workers employed by the same employers) are employed in the United States.

"(2) The Secretary of Labor is authorized to take such actions, including imposing appropriate penalties and seeking appropriate injunctive relief and specific performance of contractual obligations, as may be necessary to assure employer compliance with terms and conditions of employment under this section.

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1987, such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of Labor to make determinations and certifications under this section and under section 212(a)(14).

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1987, such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the Secretary's duties and responsibilities under this section.

"(h) MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.—(1) The Attorney General shall provide for such endorsement of entry and exit documents of nonimmigrants described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii) as may be necessary to carry out this section and to provide notice for purposes of section 274A.

"(2) The provisions of subsections (a) and (c) of section 214 and the provisions of this section preempt any State or local law regulating admissibility of nonimmigrant workers.

"(i) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'eligible individual' means, with respect to employment, an individual who is not an unauthorized alien (as defined in section 274A(g)) with respect to that employment.

"(2) The term 'H-2A worker' means a nonimmigrant described in section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a).".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section apply to petitions and applications filed under sections 214(c) and 216 of the Immigration and Nationality Act on or after the first day of the seventh month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "effective date").

(e) REGULATIONS.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Agriculture, shall approve all regulations to be issued implementing sections 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(a) and 216 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, final regulations to implement such sections shall first be issued, on an interim or other basis, not later than the effective date.

(f) SENSE OF CONGRESS RESPECTING CONSULTATION WITH MEXICO.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should establish an advisory commission which shall consult with the Governments of Mexico and of other appropriate countries and advise the Attorney General regarding the operation of the alien temporary worker program established under section 216 of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(g) CONFORMING AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 215 the following new item:

"Sec. 216. Admission of temporary H-2A workers.".

SEC. 302. LAWFUL RESIDENCE FOR CERTAIN SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 1 of title II is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

"SEC. 210. (a) LAWFUL RESIDENCE.—

"(B) PERFORMANCE OF SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL SERVICES AND RESIDENCE IN THE UNITED STATES.—The alien must establish that he has—

"(i) resided in the United States, and

"(ii) performed seasonal agricultural services in the United States for at least 90 mandays, during the 12-month period ending on May 1, 1986. For purposes of the previous sentence, performance of seasonal agricultural services in the United States for more than one employer on any one day shall be counted as performance of services for only 1 man-day.

"(C) ADMISSIBLE AS IMMIGRANT.—The alien must establish that he is admissible to the United States as an immigrant, except as otherwise provided under subsection (c)(2).

"(2) ADJUSTMENT TO PERMANENT RESIDENCE.—The Attorney General shall adjust the status of any alien provided lawful temporary resident status under paragraph (1) to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence on the following date:

"(A) GROUP 1.—Subject to the numerical limitation established under subparagraph (C), in the case of an alien who has established, at the time of application for temporary residence under paragraph (1), that the alien performed seasonal agricultural services in the United States for at least 90 mandays during each of the 12-months periods ending on May 1, 1984, 1985, and 1986, the adjustment shall occur on the first day after the end of the one-year period that begins on the later of (I) the date the alien was granted such temporary resident status, or (II) the day after the last day of the application period described in paragraph (1)(A).

"(B) GROUP 2.—In the case of aliens to which subparagraph (A) does not apply, the adjustment shall occur on the day after the last day of the two-year period that begins on the later of (I) the date the alien was granted such temporary resident status, or (II) the day after the last day of the application period described in paragraph (1)(A).

"(C) NUMERICAL LIMITATION.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to more than 350,000 aliens. If more than 350,000 aliens meet the requirements of such subparagraph, such subparagraph shall apply to the 350,000 aliens whose applications for adjustment were first filed under paragraph (1) and subparagraph (B) shall apply to the remaining aliens.

"(3) TERMINATION OF TEMPORARY RESIDENCE.—During the period of temporary resident status granted an alien under paragraph (1), the Attorney General may terminate such status only upon a determination under this Act that the alien is deportable.

"(4) AUTHORIZED TRAVEL AND EMPLOYMENT DURING TEMPORARY RESIDENCE.—During the period an alien is in lawful temporary resident status granted under this subsection, the alien has the right to travel abroad (including commutation from a residence abroad) and shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and shall be provided an 'employment authorized' endorsement or other appropriate work permit, in the same manner as for aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

"(5) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, an alien who acquires the status of an alien lawfully admitted for temporary residence under paragraph (1), such status not having changed, is considered to be an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence (as described in section 101(a)(20)), other than under any provision of the immigration laws.

"(b) APPLICATIONS FOR ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS.—

"(1) TO WHOM MAY BE MADE.—

"(A) WITHIN THE UNITED STATES.—The Attorney General shall provide that applications for adjustment of status under subsection (a) may be filed—

"(i) with the Attorney General, or

"(ii) with a designated entity (designated under paragraph (2)), but only if the applicant consents to the forwarding of the application to the Attorney General.

"(B) OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES.—The Attorney General, in cooperation with the Secretary of State, shall provide a procedure whereby an alien may apply for adjustment of status under subsection (a)(1) at an appropriate consular office outside the United States. If the alien otherwise qualifies for such adjustment, the Attorney General shall provide such documentation of authorization to enter the United States and to have the alien's status adjusted upon entry as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(2) DESIGNATION OF ENTITIES TO RECEIVE APPLICATIONS.—For purposes of receiving applications under this section, the Attorney General—

"(A) shall designate qualified voluntary organizations and other qualified State, local, community, farm labor organizations, and associations of agricultural employers, and

"(B) may designate such other persons as the Attorney General determines are qualified and have substantial experience, demonstrated competence, and traditional long-term involvement in the preparation and submittal of applications for adjustment of status under section 209 or 245, Public Law 89-732, or Public Law 95-145.

"(3) PROOF OF ELIGIBILITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An alien may establish that he meets the requirement of subsection (a)(1)(B)(ii) through government employment records, records supplied by employers or collective bargaining organizations, and such other reliable documentation as the alien may provide. The Attorney General shall establish special procedures to credit properly work in cases in which an alien was employed under an assumed name.

"(B) DOCUMENTATION OF WORK HISTORY.—(i) An alien applying for adjustment of status under subsection (a)(1) has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the alien has worked the requisite number of man-days (as required under subsection (a)(1)(B)(ii)).

"(ii) If an employer or farm labor contractor employing such an alien has kept proper and adequate records respecting such employment, the alien's burden of proof under clause (i) may be met by securing timely production of those records under regulations to be promulgated by the Attorney General.

"(iii) An alien can meet such burden of proof if the alien establishes that the alien has in fact performed the work described in subsection (a)(1)(B)(ii) by producing sufficient evidence to show the extent of that employment as a matter of just and reasonable inference. In such a case, the burden then shifts to the Attorney General to disprove the alien's evidence with a showing which negates the reasonableness of the inference to be drawn from the evidence.

"(4) TREATMENT OF APPLICATIONS BY DESIGNATED ENTITIES.—Each designated entity must agree to forward to the Attorney General applications filed with it in accordance with paragraph (1)(A)(ii) but not to forward to the Attorney General applications filed with it unless the applicant has consented to such forwarding. No such entity may make a determination required by this section to be made by the Attorney General.

"(5) LIMITATION ON ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—Files and records prepared for purposes of this section by designated entities operating under this section are confidential and the Attorney General and the Service shall not have access to such files or records relating to an alien without the consent of the alien.

"(6) CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.—Neither the Attorney General, nor any other official or employee of the Department of Justice, or bureau or agency thereof, may—

"(A) use the information furnished pursuant to an application filed under this section for any purpose other than to make a determination on the application or for enforcement of paragraph (7),

"(B) make any publication whereby the information furnished by any particular individual can be identified, or

"(C) permit anyone other than the sworn officers and employees of the Department or bureau or agency or, with respect to applications filed with a designated entity, that designated entity, to examine individual applications.

Anyone who uses, publishes, or permits information to be examined in violation of this paragraph shall be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(7) PENALTIES FOR FALSE STATEMENTS IN APPLICATIONS.—

"(A) CRIMINAL PENALTY.—Whoever—

"(i) files an application for adjustment of status under this section and knowingly and willfully falsifies, conceals, or covers up a material fact or makes any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statements or representations, or makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or entry, or

"(ii) creates or supplies a false writing or document for use in making such an application, shall be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(B) EXCLUSION.—An alien who is convicted of a crime under subparagraph (A) shall be considered to be inadmissible to the United States on the ground described in section 212(a)(19).

"(c) WAIVER OF NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS AND CERTAIN GROUNDS FOR EXCLUSION.—

"(1) NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS DO NOT APPLY.—The numerical limitations of sections 201 and 202 shall not apply to the adjustment of aliens to lawful permanent resident status under this section.

"(2) WAIVER OF GROUNDS FOR EXCLUSION.—In the determination of an alien's admissibility under subsection (a)(1)(C)—

"(A) GROUNDS OF EXCLUSION NOT APPLICABLE.—The provisions of paragraphs (14), (20), (21), (25), and (32) of section 212(a) shall not apply.

"(B) WAIVER OF OTHER GROUNDS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the Attorney General may waive any other provision of section 212(a) in the case of individual aliens for humanitarian purposes, to assure family unity, or when it is otherwise in the public interest.

"(ii) GROUNDS THAT MAY NOT BE WAIVED.—The following provisions of section 212(a) may not be waived by the Attorney General under clause (i):

"(I) Paragraph (9) and (10) (relating to criminals).

"(II) Paragraph (15) (relating to aliens likely to become public charges).

"(III) Paragraph (23) (relating to drug offenses), except for so much of such paragraph as relates to a single offense of simple possession of 30 grams or less of marihuana.

"(IV) Paragraphs (27), (28), and (29) (relating to national security and members of certain organizations).

"(V) Paragraph (33) (relating to those who assisted in the Nazi persecutions).

"(C) SPECIAL RULE FOR DETERMINATION OF PUBLIC CHARGE.—An alien is not ineligible for adjustment of status under this section due to being inadmissible under section 212(a)(15) if the alien demonstrates a history of employment in the United States evidencing self-support without reliance on public cash assistance.

"(d) TEMPORARY STAY OF EXCLUSION OR DEPORTATION AND WORK AUTHORIZATION FOR CERTAIN APPLICANTS.—

"(1) BEFORE APPLICATION PERIOD.—The Attorney General shall provide that in the case of an alien who is apprehended before the beginning of the application period described in subsection (a)(1) and who can establish a nonfrivolous case of eligibility to have his status adjusted under subsection (a) (but for the fact that he may not apply for such adjustment until the beginning of such period), until the alien has had the opportunity during the first 30 days of the application period to complete the filing of an application for adjustment, the alien—

"(A) may not be excluded or deported, and

"(B) shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and be provided an 'employment authorized' endorsement or other appropriate work permit.

"(2) DURING APPLICATION PERIOD.—The Attorney General shall provide that in the case of an alien who presents a nonfrivolous application for adjustment of status under subsection (a) during the application period, and until a final determination on the application has been made in accordance with this section, the alien—

"(A) may not be excluded or deported, and

"(B) shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and be provided an 'employment authorized' endorsement or other appropriate work permit.

"(e) ADMINISTRATIVE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

"(1) ADMINISTRATIVE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW.—There shall be no administrative or judicial review of a determination respecting an application for adjustment of status under this section except in accordance with this subsection.

"(2) ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.—

"(A) SINGLE LEVEL OF ADMINISTRATIVE APPELLATE REVIEW.—The Attorney General shall establish an appellate authority to provide for a single level of administrative appellate review of such a determination.

"(B) STANDARD FOR REVIEW.—Such administrative appellate review shall be based solely upon the administrative record established at the time of the determination on the application and upon such additional or newly discovered evidence as may not have been available at the time of the determination.

"(3) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

"(A) LIMITATION TO REVIEW OF EXCLUSION OR DEPORTATION.—There shall be judicial review of such a denial only in the judicial review of an order of exclusion or deportation under section 106.

"(B) STANDARD FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Such judicial review shall be based solely upon the administrative record established at the time of the review by the appellate authority and the findings of fact and determinations contained in such record shall be conclusive unless the applicant can establish abuse of discretion or that the findings are directly contrary to clear and convincing facts contained in the record considered as a whole.

"(f) TEMPORARY DISQUALIFICATION OF NEWLY LEGALIZED ALIENS FROM RECEIVING AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN.—During the five-year period beginning on the date an alien was granted lawful temporary resident status under subsection (a), and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the alien is not eligible for aid under a State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act. Notwithstanding the previous sentence, in the case of an alien who would be eligible for aid under a State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act but for the previous sentence, the provisions of paragraph (3) of section 245A(h) shall apply in the same manner as they apply with respect to paragraph (1) of such section and, for this purpose, any reference in section 245A(h)(3) to paragraph (1) is deemed a reference to the previous sentence.

"(g) TREATMENT OF SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—For all purposes (subject to subsections (b)(3) and (f)) an alien whose status is adjusted under this section to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, such status not having changed, shall be considered to be an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence (within the meaning of section 101(a)(20)).

"DETERMINATION OF AGRICULTURAL LABOR SHORTAGES AND ADMISSION OF ADDITIONAL SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

"SEC. 210A. (a) DETERMINATION OF NEED TO ADMIT ADDITIONAL SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Before the beginning of each fiscal year (beginning with fiscal year 1990 and ending with fiscal year 1993), the Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture (in this section referred to as the 'Secretaries') shall jointly determine the number (if any) of additional aliens who should be admitted to the United States or who should otherwise acquire the status of aliens lawfully admitted for temporary residence under this section during the fiscal year to meet a shortage of workers to perform seasonal agricultural services in the United States during the year. Such number is, in this section, referred to as the 'shortage number'.

"(2) OVERALL DETERMINATION.—The shortage number is—

"(A) the anticipated need for special agricultural workers (as determined under paragraph (4)) for the fiscal year, minus

"(B) the supply of such workers (as determined under paragraph (5)) for that year, divided by the factor (determined under paragraph (6)) for man-days per worker.

"(3) NO REPLENISHMENT IF NO SHORTAGE.—In determining the shortage number, the Secretaries may not determine that there is a shortage unless, after considering all of the criteria set forth in paragraphs (4) and (5), the Secretaries determine that there will not be sufficient able, willing, and qualified workers available to perform seasonal agricultural services required in the fiscal year involved.

"(4) DETERMINATION OF NEED.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(A), the anticipated need for special agricultural workers for a fiscal year is determined as follows:

"(A) BASE.—The Secretaries shall jointly estimate, using statistically valid methods, the number of man-days of labor performed in seasonal agricultural services in the United States in the previous fiscal year.

"(B) ADJUSTMENT FOR CROP LOSSES AND CHANGES IN INDUSTRY.—The Secretaries shall jointly—

"(i) increase such number by the number of man-days of labor in seasonal agricultural services in the United States that would have been needed in the previous fiscal year to avoid any crop damage or other loss that resulted from the unavailability of labor, and

"(ii) adjust such number to take into account the projected growth or contraction in the requirements for seasonal agricultural services as a result of—

"(I) growth or contraction in the seasonal agriculture industry, and

"(II) the use of technologies and personnel practices that affect the need for, and retention of, workers to perform such services.

"(5) DETERMINATION OF SUPPLY.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(B), the anticipated supply of special agricultural workers for a fiscal year is determined as follows:

"(A) BASE.—The Secretaries shall use the number estimated under paragraph (4)(A).

"(B) ADJUSTMENT FOR RETIREMENTS AND INCREASED RECRUITMENT.—The Secretaries shall jointly—

"(i) decrease such number by the number of man-days of labor in seasonal agricultural services in the United States that will be lost due to retirement and movement of workers out of performance of seasonal agricultural services, and

"(ii) increase such number by the number of additional man-days of labor in seasonal agricultural services in the United States that can reasonably be expected to result from the availability of able, willing, qualified, and unemployed special agricultural workers, rural low skill, or manual, laborers, and domestic agricultural workers.

"(C) BASES FOR INCREASED NUMBER.—In making the adjustment under subparagraph (B)(ii), the Secretaries shall consider—

"(i) the effect, if any, that improvements in wages and working conditions offered by employers will have on the availability of workers to perform seasonal agricultural services, taking into account the adverse effect, if any, of such improvements in wages and working conditions on the economic competitiveness of the perishable agricultural industry,

"(ii) the effect, if any, of enhanced recruitment efforts by the employers of such workers and government employment services in the traditional and expected areas of supply of such workers, and

"(iii) the number of able, willing and qualified individuals who apply for employment opportunities in seasonal agricultural services listed with offices of government employment services.

"(D) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to require any individual employer to pay any specified level of wages, to provide any specified working conditions, or to provide for any specified recruitment of workers.

"(6) DETERMINATION OF MAN-DAY PER WORKER FACTOR.—

"(A) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—For fiscal year 1990—
